Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; but, as I understand it, they wanted to buy them, so that the ownership would be in the United States Government, to prevent beyond any doubt the transfer to private hands of these vastly important stations. The question is, as I have said, unlike any other.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. The gentleman knows that not only do the Navy have control of the stations on the shore, but that they have naval officers in control of the stations on shore, and also naval officers sworn in——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes. But I am not talking about what has been—about the past. I am merely suggesting the question as to whether we will indicate by this vote that in the judgment of the House the proper future policy for the United States Government would be to have the Marconi wireless stations upon the seaboard left in private hands. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] intimated that the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama would be equivalent to the House declaring in favor of such a policy.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. The Marconi Co. is an American corporation. A small amount of stock is owned by the British Marconi system, but the British owners are not allowed to participate in the control of the company; they are not allowed to vote.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That arrangement need not be permanent.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. And therefore the Marconi system in the United States in the event of war would come under the conditions that prevail in this country and could be taken over and would be taken over.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But before war might be declared there could develop a situation dangerous to the United States, and especially dangerous if the Marconi system on the seaboard were in private ownership.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be a grave error to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama if it involves the future policy in regard to the ownership of the wireless. Under the radio act of 1912 the Government took over all of the radio stations in the United States and has them in control now as completely as if they were Government owned and may retain control until after peace is declared by proclamation by the President of the United States.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has had under consideration a bill proposed by the Navy Department, the purpose of which was to give the Navy Department the control of wireless, or rather to give the Government the ownership, control, and operation through the Navy Department of all wireless stations. Every phase of the question was considered. All the interests were heard and the bill was finally tabled because, among other reasons, it was so late in the session that it could not be given due consideration. I may say, however, that the committee were not willing to approve a bill that the Government, through the Navy Department, should be given the monopoly of radio communication. That is the present status of the matter, so far as the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries is concerned.

The Navy Department has purchased the Marconi ship-to-shore stations, and has a monopoly of that service at this time. There is only one other company that has wireless stations engaged in ship-to-shore service, and that is the United Fruit Co. They have a station at New Orleans, built for operation in connection with their business. I understand the Navy Department in any event has no disposition to interfere with that service. But reflecting, as I believe I do, the opinion of the committee that has given such thorough consideration to that question, they are not ready to commit the Government to the ownership and control and monopoly of this service, and especially the high-power stations.

There are cogent reasons why the Navy Department should control the ship-to-shore service. It is absolutely necessary that the Navy Department should have efficient ship-to-shore service, as far as the Navy is concerned, and there seems to be a good reason why the service might be extended to the merchant marine. But beyond that it is not so clear that the Government should have jurisdiction of and control of operation of the service, except as now authorized by law.

After the hearings were concluded and printed I received a communication from the War Department, in reference to the bill, in answer to a request, on my part, for an expression of the views of that department as to the propriety of the Navy Department having monopoly of that service. As I anticipated, the War Department insists that the Navy Department should not have a monopoly of the service, and gives many very good reasons why that should not be done. The War Department suggests that it should be a triple control by the Navy Department, the War Department, and the Department of Commerce. But the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries have left the matter in status quo, and, in my opinion, that is the proper place to leave it for the present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, and also that offered by the gentleman from Illinois, because I believe the time has come when we ought to return to the ordinary practice of having the departments recognize the law once the law is enacted. During the war it has become the custom for departments to do very much as they please with lump-sum appropriations made by Congress. Many things have been done under the stress of war that would not be tolerated by Congress in ordinary times. The people are asking that Congress keep on the job and attend to its own business, and that it check up expenditures. I believe that where specific appropriations are made—and I think we should return to specific appropriations—the department should be held to a strict accountability for the expenditure of those appropriations that Congress intended. There should be no diversion of the funds. The gentleman from Illinois has made a statement startling in its nature with respect to a department proceeding to make purchases depending on the future without regard to Congress at all, to make expenditures on the assumption that Congress would ratify them once they were made without authority.

Now, I have here a case that leads me to talk briefly and specifically. It is the matter of an appropriation for the construction of an armor-plate plant. Gentlemen who have been in the House for several terms will recall that armor plate has been a bone of contention for years between the department and Congress and the manufacturers, and that finally on August 29, 1916, an act was signed and became a law which was intended to put the Navy Department in a position to manufacture armor plate in competition with private manufacturers.

I am not intending to discuss the old controversy, but I desire to put in the RECORD the specific provision of law under which authorization was made for the expenditure of $11,000,000 for the manufacture of armor plate for the vessels of the Navy.

I wish to say that in this year 1919 succeeding the armistice we should see to it that the $11,000,000 is expended specifically for the purpose for which it was intended when the appropriation was made in August, 1916. What are the facts?

I have some information that I am not prepared at this time to verify, and I am very regretful that it should apply to the Navy Department, whose record has been so excellent during this war—that the $11,000,000 for the construction of an armor-plate plant had been disposed of and that contracts or appropriations have been made equal to $24,000,000, and that we have no armor-plate plant. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE], who is on the floor, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], may have more information about the work which has been done toward the construction of the armor-plate plant, for which $11,000,000 was appropriated in August, 1916, than I have. I am not making charges; I am simply saying that it has been represented to me that the money has been spent, and that we have no armor-plate plant. I have before me certain information that was handed to me this morning by a Member of Congress—I do not know whether I am permitted to use the information or not——

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With respect to the manner in which some of this money has been expended. My distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], who is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, endeavors to keep thoroughly well posted upon all naval matters and upon expenditures by the Navy Department, and very properly so, and I found that while this information with regard to expenditures and the diversion of funds has come to me, he has been making inquiry along similar lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I find in a letter addressed to my colleague [Mr. BUTLER] that Rear Admiral Earle, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, undertakes to explain this very situation. With the consent of my colleague and the committee, I insert the letter at this point:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. BUTLER: Your letter of the 16th instant was only handed me yesterday upon my return from duty in New England and this will explain the delay in replying.

The Naval Ordnance Plant at South Charleston, W. Va., has developed in the natural course of events into more than a mere armor plant. Congress appropriated the funds for the projectile plant and it was deemed advisable, in the interest of economy and good management—lessening the running expenses, etc., as well as the cost of the original project—to build this plant at South Charleston, W. Va. Later on the decision to use 16-inch 50-caliber guns forced the department to either provide facilities for forging these guns at a station of its own or to further increase the facilities of the Midvale or Bethlehem plants which had already been increased at much expense to handle these heavy guns. Decision was therefore made to equip a large plant at South Charleston for this purpose. Hence, the Naval Ordnance Plant at South Charleston comprises a projectile plant, which is now completed and operating at a capacity of about 10,000 tons of projectiles per annum; a gun-forging plant, with a capacity of 10,000 tons per year, or one 16-inch gun per month, now under construction; and an armor plant, with an ultimate capacity of 20,000 tons per year, also under construction.

There is inclosed herewith a photostat showing the plant at South Charleston, W. Va., as it will appear when completed.

As previously noted the projectile plant is in operation and has fabricated over 4,000 tons of steel; the armor plant was commenced actively about October 1, 1918, no general contracts for the construction of the plant being entered into because of the high cost of such construction, the Navy undertaking to do most of the work by day labor. General excavation, grading, and trackage is well under way and the construction plant has been erected. Temporary storehouses, stables for about 300 head of live stock, and barracks and quarters for about 800 men engaged in the construction of the plant are finished. Excavation for the open-hearth building is well under way, together with some of the concrete footings. A large amount of material for this work has also been assembled.

Unless unforeseen delays and greater difficulty in the procurement of materials than is now anticipated are encountered, it is anticipated that the manufacture of 16-inch guns will begin in January, 1920, and production secured about March, 1920. The casting of armor will commence about July, 1920, with production in quantity in December of that year.

The appropriations and allotments for this plant are as follows:

(a) Projectile plant:
Act of Aug. 29, 1916, Public, 241	$705,611
Act of Mar. 4, 1917, Public, 391	1,375,345
(b) Armor plant:
Act of Aug. 29, 1916, Public, 241	11,000,000
(c) Gun-forging plant:
Presidential allotment, dated June 27, 1918, from appropriation "Increase of the Navy, armor and armament"	4,121,200
(d) Allotment of the Secretary of the Navy from appropriation "Extension of facilities at navy yards and stations"	100,000
Total appropriated and available	17,302,156

Of this amount $7,500,000 has already been allotted to the Bureau of Yards and Docks for the erection of buildings for the armor plant, gun-forging plant, and extension to facilities, and about $7,750,000 is to be expended under the direction of this bureau. Of the sum allotted to the Bureau of Yards and Docks, up to the present time, there has been obligated approximately $3,500,000, and the Bureau of Ordnance has obligated approximately $5,000,000. The projectile plant has been completed and the amount of $2,080,956 appropriated by the acts of August 29, 1916, and March 4, 1917, for its construction has been exhausted. It will thus be seen that there remains approximately $7,000,000 yet to be obligated under items (b), (c), and (d) above.

In the detail design work of this plant as a whole the strictest economy has been exercised and the department has endeavored to obtain the plant within the sum allotted, but it is evident that at least $3,500,000 additional must be provided. This is a much smaller increase over the original estimate than had been anticipated and indicates a lower percentage of advance in cost of labor and materials than has been shown in other projects handled by the Navy during recent years.

Trusting that this information is presented in sufficient detail for your purpose, I am,

Very respectfully,

RALPH EARLE,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. T. S. BUTLER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My information as to the armor-plate plant is that down at Charleston, W. Va., where this money seems to be going, we have now about 200 acres of land, and that on that land we have three buildings. I will ask the gentleman from West Virginia if I am correct as to that.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I would very much prefer, since the gentleman from Pennsylvania says he has no reliable information on the subject, that he talk with an officer of the Navy Department who is on his way to the Capitol before he indulges in a statement borne out by anonymous letters. I think the Government has at Charleston, in West Virginia, one of the best foundations for a plant of the character the gentleman has mentioned in the whole country. That plant is located in the center of what might be termed the coal, oil, and gas belt of West Virginia, where the item of fuel alone, it is estimated, will pay for the plant in 15 years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I grant that it is a delightful site, and eligible for this purpose; but I ask the gentleman how many buildings are there and if we have more than 200 acres of land.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I think we have about 200 acres of land all told. I delivered to the Navy Department a deed to 180 acres of land, and I understand that they acquired some 20 acres additional. I understand that there are four buildings completed. I have not been in them, but they are tremendous.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are they projectile factories or an armor-plate factory, for which we appropriated $11,000,000?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I think because of the necessity of the Navy Department in war they undertook to develop the projectile factories first and work on the armor-plate plant was delayed, but is now going forward rapidly and will be completed in due time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington objects. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the question on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks and print additional parts of the clippings from which I read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the life and career of Theodore Roosevelt.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman should submit his request to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL.

For general repairs and improvements, $30,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I realize that this item for general repairs and improvements is simply one of routine, but, nevertheless, as long as it has to do with St. Elizabeths Hospital it seems to me that some explanation ought to be offered here of the various criticisms which have been in the press in the last few days in connection with the management of that institution as applied to the care of returned soldiers. As I understand, St. Elizabeths Hospital is the insane asylum of the District, conducted by the Government, and paid for by the Government. This morning one of the New York papers contained a very severe criticism of the care or lack of care extended to returned soldiers, some of them, perhaps, in a nervous condition but not regarded as insane, as receiving no care or treatment whatsoever at St. Elizabeths Hospital. That item is copied in a Washington paper of this afternoon and ought, I think, to receive some attention from this body. If the accounts are entirely sensational we should know it for the benefit of the men who are there, and I therefore would ask if any information can be given by any Member of the House as to the conditions at St. Elizabeths Hospital, particularly as to the care soldiers have received there. I only ask for information. I know absolutely nothing of the circumstances myself.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have not even seen the article which the gentleman says is in the New York Sun of to-day, so of course I can not reply to it, not knowing what it contains, and I have no particular information touching St. Elizabeths, except that it is my understanding that men who are there are men who are mentally unsound and they themselves frequently do not know it. I know of one instance in which I received a letter from a man complaining about his being confined there, and, having had past experience with people confined in an asylum, before I undertook to get him removed I made inquiry, and I found he was suffering from a mental complaint which made it very desirable that he be retained in that asylum, although he does not think so, and he writes very bitterly about it. But I have no specific information in reference to the gentleman's inquiry touching the management of St. Elizabeths.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. TREADWAY. Whether or not he knows in regard to the care of the soldiers they are made a part of the regular patients and placed in wards with the regular men who are there and are shown no other care than that regularly accorded to any inmate of the asylum?

Mr. SHERLEY. The committee has had no hearings at this time touching St. Elizabeths that I am aware of, unless the committee on the sundry civil bill, of which I am chairman, had a hearing, and I have not been able to attend the hearings of that committee recently. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has been conducting most of those hearings. I do not know whether they went into the matter as it is related to returned soldiers or not.

Mr. TREADWAY. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to have some information on this score in view of the articles which have been carried in the press not only to-day but previously. It is a matter which has been referred to frequently in recent press accounts, and, while I am not one of those disposed to give undue attention to what may appear like sensational accounts, if there is any basis of truth in the method by which returned soldiers have been cared for at that institution, we should be informed of it and govern ourselves accordingly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I would be glad to do so, but I have not the floor—I do not think I have.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I desire to say I had a little experience in that matter myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I had occasion recently to take up the matter of St. Elizabeths Hospital in the interests of a man who was remanded there suffering from shell shock. My attention was called to it by the friends of this man going down to the hospital and securing a leave of absence and bringing him up to the office. I am not an expert on insanity, and insane people may deceive the very elect at times, I am told.

However, I took the matter up with The Adjutant General and I corresponded with the boy's people at home. After two or three days this man was taken out of the ward for the incurably insane. He assured me that if he was not relieved soon from that position he would be insane. After another week or 10 days we succeeded in getting a furlough for him for 30 days, and he is now at home under the direction of his own brothers, who are physicians. I think that if each particular case that is called to the attention of the Member was taken up in person with the proper authorities there would be a disposition to inquire into it carefully and to do the right thing. At least, I had the most courteous treatment, though in this case it required a little time before action was secured.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. IGOE. What about those men who have not anybody to go and appeal for them to The Adjutant General? What is it proposed to do for these hundreds who can not come to the gentleman and others for assistance?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The gentleman's question is certainly pertinent. I had reference only to any difficulties that particular Members might have. Unquestionably there should be some sort of investigation into that condition. If it is merely a sensational report, no harm will have been done, but, indeed, great good will have been done. And if there are conditions there such as have been reported they ought to be rectified.

Mr. McKEOWN. Was there any complaint in the case which the gentleman looked into as to their food and clothing at St. Elizabeths?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The gentleman said the food was abominable.

Mr. McKEOWN. I have had a case where they complain of the food and lack of bed clothing. I wanted to know if the gentleman had heard anything of that kind.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I may say that I thought the action was a little slow in the case I referred to on the part of the department. I have been loath, however, to bring a matter of that kind before the House without being thoroughly convinced that there was real cause for complaint.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say that I had one experience in relation to this hospital. One swallow does not make a summer or one case make an excellent hospital or a bad one. In the case I refer to, a young soldier from my district was an inmate, and in looking the matter over I found that he had the best of care and had improved very much during the time he was there. He was released very shortly after I called upon him and he went home with his parents a few days ago. The surroundings of that portion of the institution where he was located seemed to be almost ideal. But, of course, I want to observe that this statement is based only on the particular case with which I had experience. I thought I should say this in deference to an institution upon which we have to rely a great deal. I believe it is the only one we have anywhere near here to fill the demand of the emergency.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I yield.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I ought to say with regard to the case I had in hand that the person is very erratic, to say the least, and that he suffered from a disease that was being treated there. I felt, on the whole, that due care ought to be exercised by those in authority and that they should be thoroughly convinced that a man is sane enough to be discharged from the hospital.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I just arrived on the floor of the House and am not therefore fully informed of what has been said, but I understand there has been some discussion of an article which appeared in a Washington paper, said to have been copied from a New York paper, reflecting upon the management of St. Elizabeths Hospital. Some little time ago there was some criticism in the newspapers of that institution on the ground that soldiers suffering from shell shock, so called, were being confined there. Dr. White, in charge of that institution, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations a few days ago, the subcommittee having to do with the sundry civil bill, and the members of the committee interrogated him at length with regard to the institution and in regard to that particular claim, assertion, or charge. The doctor assured us that there had been no soldiers or ex-soldiers admitted to the institution suffering from what is popularly called "shell shock." He said there were two men among the many hundreds brought there who were suffering from disorders that might, to a certain degree, be classified as shell shock, but that these two men were also suffering from mental disorders that could not properly be classified as shell shock. One of those men was detained but a very few days in the institution. He was detained in a ward or building not occupied by violently insane patients. He remained there but a few days. The other man remained in the institution, but not in contact with the ordinary insane patients, for a couple of weeks and then was discharged as cured. He said that with the exception of these two cases, that might possibly be said to have been cases where so-called shell shock was a part of the trouble, there have been no men brought to the institution and detained there suffering from shell shock, so called.

I saw the headlines of and read very hurriedly, indeed, an article that appeared in to-day's issue of a Washington newspaper. I am sorry I did not read it more carefully, in view of the fact that it seems that it has been deemed worthy of attention by some one in the House. But I want to say this about St. Elizabeths. I have visited that institution. I have been a member of the subcommittee that appropriates for it for a number of years. I and other members of the subcommittee have very carefully and thoroughly and painstakingly interrogated Dr. White one time and another with regard to the institution. In order to verify his statements and satisfy myself, I have visited the institution, and my opinion is that it is one of the best-managed, best-conducted institutions of the kind in America, if not in the world.

Mr. PAIGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PAIGE. I want to cite to the gentleman a case that occurred in my district, of a young man who was an inmate of St. Elizabeths Hospital. A man at the head of the Red Cross stated to me and to his parents that he was not insane at all, and Dr. White insisted that he was, and after a great deal of correspondence back and forth they decided to let him out on a furlough. His father, a poor man, was subject to great expense, after long correspondence, in coming to Washington, and he brought the boy to yonder door, and if there ever was a bright and intelligent young man, it was that boy. They let him go home, and after he had been home about a week a notice came from the hospital that unless the parents stood for the expense incurred in connection with his trouble he must be returned to St. Elizabeths. That is what I understand; he has got to come back to St. Elizabeths. The man at the head of the Red Cross has told me, and his father has told me, that that young man is not at all insane; and it is a shame to keep him there.

Mr. TREADWAY. Was the young man, or is the young man referred to, a soldier?

Mr. PAIGE. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, controversies relative to the sanity or insanity of individuals have gone on since the beginning of the care of insane people by the public, and will be agitated, no doubt, to the end of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Dr. White is not only a conscientious and capable man, but he has a high reputation in the profession as an alienist. It is possible that Dr. White may be mistaken in some cases. I have never seen a mortal anywhere that was not at some time or other mistaken about something, providing that he had any considerable responsibility. I think it is possible that Dr. White may have been mistaken about the sanity of some individual person, but I know, and we all know—it is notorious—that a large proportion of insane people always protest, with more vehemence than a sane person can command, their sanity, and there are very few relatives and friends of insane people who will admit, except with very great reluctance, that those people are insane. They frequently become violent before insanity is admitted by relatives and friends.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. And it is not a proper charge against an institution that there may be some question in some cases as to the sanity of a patient.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes. I did not rise to discuss the question of who is going to pass upon questions of sanity.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let us suppose that the doctors pass upon it.

Mr. MONDELL. In the case referred to the doctors did pass upon it, and the doctor held that the man was insane.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman think St. Elizabeths was the proper place to send a soldier for ear and eye trouble? The doctor says they were treating him for that. I called the doctor up.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know who sent the particular man that the gentleman has in mind to St. Elizabeths; no entirely sane man should be committed to an institution of that kind; yet the surroundings of St. Elizabeths are such that no harm will come to him while the question of his sanity is being considered. Some one may have been sent there who was not insane, but that is not the question. The question is as to the management of this institution maintained by the Government.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman has had more intimate information as to the facts from his experience on the subcommittee than any of the others of us, and I would like to ask him this question purely for information: Does the gentleman consider that St. Elizabeths is a suitable place and a desirable place for returning soldiers to be committed, even if they have only what may be regarded as nervous disorders?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman had listened to the beginning of my remarks, his question would not be necessary.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have listened to every word of them.

Mr. MONDELL. He would know that they are not sending soldiers for what is known as shell shock to St. Elizabeths. I do not know what the gentleman has in mind when he says "nervous disorders." St. Elizabeths is an institution for the care of those who are suffering from mental diseases and disorders. There may be a question in some particular case as to the admissability or the propriety of admitting or detaining in this institution certain men, but that is not the question now before us.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. And even in regard to that question let me make this suggestion.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will ask that the gentleman be given five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the gentleman's definition of an insane person?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not an expert on insanity or definitions of insanity. I commend to the gentleman the various dictionaries that are available in the library adjacent to the Hall.

Now, gentlemen, this is true, and let us not forget it, that no one desires to have a friend or relative confined in an institution which is known as an insane asylum. One reason for changing the name of St. Elizabeths was that the name it now bears does not necessarily carry with it the idea that it is an insane asylum; but it is an asylum where people suffering from mental diseases are cared for, and cared for well.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will conclude as soon as possible. It is very necessary to proceed with the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I will conclude in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that the friends and relatives of soldiers regret and are loath to believe that their soldier friends or relatives are suffering from mental disorders. But if soldiers are suffering from mental diseases or disorders there is no other place in this part of the world except St. Elizabeths to which to send them, and I want to repeat and emphasize that it is a well-conducted institution.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. I know of one case of a soldier being held in St. Elizabeths because the doctor says he is a psychopathic liar. Now, is that a proper case for confinement there?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, is he or is he not? I do not know about that sort of a liar. I am not an expert on insanity. I know that since time began there has been a controversy as to whether certain people ought to be in any insane asylum or not. That is not a part of the issue here. The issue raised by the newspaper article is as to whether men are well cared for and properly treated in St. Elizabeths, and I rise to say I believe they are. We would every one of us be more or less responsible if they were not. We maintain that institution. We pay for its upkeep, and, in my opinion, it is well managed and conducted in a humane way. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Can the gentleman give this House any information as to whether or not they have dungeons out there where soldiers are kept in solitary confinement?

Mr. MONDELL. My opinion is that all of those statements or the major part of the statements contained in that article are without any foundation whatever. There is no basis of truth or fact for them. Some newspaper correspondent has evidently been taken in by some one who wanted to tell a sensational story. The Federal Government has a great institution within sight of the dome of the Capitol, in which institution there are many hundreds of unfortunate people, members of the Army and the Navy and others, and I want to emphasize the fact that at the head of it is a man who has proven himself to be competent and capable. That institution, supported by the Federal Government, is one of the best of its kind on earth. It is beautifully located. Its buildings are well adapted to their purpose, its equipment is good, and the people there are, in my opinion, receiving the very best possible care and treatment. I think that ought to be said for the comfort and satisfaction of those people whose friends and relatives are in the institution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, pending the gentleman's motion, I desire simply to say this: I have tried to be liberal in regard to debate. There is nothing in the bill that makes it in order to go into a discussion of this newspaper article, and I hope that the committee will realize the necessity of making progress with the bill. There have been 20 minutes' debate in connection with an article that is altogether extraneous to any matter now pending before the committee. I hope the gentleman will refrain from speaking at this time.

Mr. KNUTSON. In view of the gentleman's appeal, I will withdraw the pro forma amendment. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the widow of JACOB E. MEEKER, late a Representative from the State of Missouri, $7,500.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman object to my offering an amendment there to pay the widow of our late colleague, Mr. ROBBINS, a sum equal to one year's salary?

Mr. SHERLEY. I was just about to offer that amendment myself. I offer an amendment, to follow line 24, on page 18, to pay the widow of EDWARD E. ROBBINS, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, $7,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: At the end of page 18 insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"To pay the widow of EDWARD E. ROBBINS, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, $7,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, appropriations and authorizations recovered, Signal Service, $128,373,200.04.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: On page 20, after line 13, insert the following:

"Office of the Provost Marshal General: For all expenses necessary in the registration of persons available for military service and in selection of certain such persons and their draft into the military service, fiscal year 1919, $12,047,047."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, by an oversight the committee failed to have before it the Provost Marshal General in connection with appropriations which he had received and the amounts of money which he had expended; but in checking the matters up that oversight was ascertained, and the committee then asked of the Provost Marshal General a statement in regard to appropriations and expenditures, and what might be necessary for the balance of the fiscal year. There had been appropriated for his use in connection with the draft a total of $35,762,000. There had been disbursed up to November 30, 1918, $5,985,952.70. There is an estimate of expenditure for the balance of the year of $17,730,000, and an explanation given as to what constitutes that estimate of expenditure. It is predicated on the employees, rental, traveling expenses, and miscellaneous, and then general reservation is made of $8,000,000 for the payment of unpaid claims, and that is to be spent with this statement generally. Under the law as it existed the Provost Marshal General was authorized to pay not exceeding certain sums to the various members of these draft boards throughout the different States, and also, of course, to pay for rental of buildings. In many instances the buildings had been given without any charge having been presented, and in many instances services have been rendered without a charge yet being made by the persons for such service. But the Provost Marshal General said he would not like to surrender so much money as to prevent his being able to meet such obligations if they should be presented. It was his belief that there would not be need for all the money that is being held out. It is proposed now that the various State headquarters and boards throughout the country shall correct the records, devoting special attention to those recorded as delinquent and deserting, and under present instructions, after the records are corrected, they are to be tied in packages, sealed, and sent to The Adjutant General at Washington at such time as The Adjutant General is able to secure suitable buildings in which to establish them. It is estimated that the correction of the records will be completed and they will be ready for shipment from the 4,540 local boards on the following dates: Two thousand three hundred by February 15, 3,500 by February 22, and 4,540 by March 1, 1919. I shall, under leave to print, submit the entire letter of the Provost Marshal General.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL,
Washington, January 27, 1919.

Memorandum for the Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY, chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Subject: Unexpended appropriations, Office of Provost Marshal General, fiscal year 1919.

The several State headquarters and boards throughout the country are now engaged in correcting all records in their possession, devoting especial attention to those listed as delinquents and deserters. Under present instructions, after the records of the boards have been corrected, they are to be tied into packages, sealed, and held in readiness for shipment to The Adjutant General at Washington at such time as The Adjutant General is able to secure suitable buildings in which to establish them. It is estimated that the correction of the records will be completed and that they will be ready for shipment from the 4,540 local boards on approximately the following schedule: 2,300 by February 15, 3,500 by February 22, 4,540 by March 1, 1919.

If the selective-service boards complete the work according to this schedule, which, of course, can not be confidently predicted, we might contemplate a cessation of all expense on account of board members' compensation and the reduction of expenses for clerk hire to the salary of one chief clerk, who ought to be retained by each board, in charge of the records and to answer inquiry, which will not wholly cease for some time. The average salary of each clerk is estimated at $125 per month. There will also be an average monthly rental expense that is estimated at $30,000; miscellaneous expense, $50,000; traveling expenses, $10,000.

All State headquarters (except Alaska, where local boards can not be reached before July 1) should complete their work and be ready to cease operations by April 30; however, they must be kept in operation to supervise the shipment of records from the local boards. This shipment is dependent upon the arrangements that can be made by The Adjutant General of the Army for the proper storage of the records in Washington. While the records are in the possession of the boards there will be a constant source of expense for clerk hire, rentals, traveling expenses of inspectors, and small incidental expenses, which will total, approximately, $600,000 per month.

SHIPMENT OF RECORDS.

The records of the draft are now stored in State headquarters, district and local board quarters in the several States in filing equipment shown in the following table:

Questionnaires, 63,000 wooden filing cabinets, 27,000 steel filing cabinets.

Registration cards, 24,000 wooden cabinets.

These cabinets must each be placed in a crate or a box, and special boxes must be constructed to contain those records for which no filing cases have been provided. The total estimated cost of crating and boxing will be—

63,000 boxes (wooden questionnaire cases), $3 each	$189,000
6,000 boxes (24,000 registration-card cabinets), $3 each	18,000
27,000 crates (steel questionnaire cases), $2 each	54,000
6,000 special boxes, $13.50 each	121,000
Boxing and crating of miscellaneous records of State headquarters and of Territories of Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico	118,000
Total	500,000

Also demands not now definitely foreseen but which may be made upon the selective-service machinery in connection with the demobilization of the Army, and particularly in connection with the service of the war-risk insurance. There is much agitation in the press of the country on this subject, and it would be unfortunate if the further duties and demands should be imposed upon the selective-service machinery without adequate funds to meet the expenses incident thereto.

E. H. CROWDER,
Provost Marshal General.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman, Does the Provost Marshal General believe the money remaining under his control will be sufficient?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and in point of fact I think a greater sum might have been taken with safety, but in view of the desirability of cleaning up the matter without subsequent deficiency we left the amount as requested.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

For general appropriations, Quartermaster Corps, fiscal year 1919, $2,996,414,707.14.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Has the gentleman from Kentucky made a full statement of the necessity of this item?

Mr. SHERLEY. I would say to the gentleman that we are dealing with the amount that we are covering back into the Treasury.

Mr. LITTLE. I understand, but why?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not quite catch the gentleman's question.

Mr. LITTLE. Did the gentleman in his opening statement make a thorough explanation of this amount mentioned on the top of page 21, Quartermaster Corps, $2,996,414,707.14?

Mr. SHERLEY. As to the general appropriations for the Quartermaster Corps I did undertake to give to the committee information as to the major items that went to make up that sum.

Mr. LITTLE. Then it is unnecessary to repeat it. I can look it up in the morning RECORD.

Mr. SHERLEY. I shall not repeat it in full, but the gentleman will find on page 1176 of the hearings a table in regard to the Quartermaster Corps that I think will indicate the big amount of items that go to make up this huge sum—$700,000,000 for subsistence, $908,000,000 for clothing and equipage, and $654,000,000 coming from pay, and so forth, of the Army.

Mr. LITTLE. Can the gentleman explain why there was this misestimate

Mr. SHERLEY. I would not say there was a misestimate. The estimates were predicated on an army totaling 4,800,000 men by next June. The Army has been constantly reduced from its maximum and the reduction in size reduced the amount of money for subsistence, pay, and for the Army in other items.

Mr. LITTLE. Then it is due to the discontinuance of the war?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. That is not true altogether because there are some places in which I think they did overestimate that I called attention to last fall, but the great big items in the Quartermaster Corps are due to the fact of the reduction in the size of the Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, appropriations and authorizations recovered, Quartermaster Corps, $3,756,135,307.76.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, there is a statement I desire to make to the committee in connection with three artillery camps, in view of the action of the House heretofore and the subsequent events that have transpired since, and by virtue of the instruction of my own committee. The House will recall that when a deficiency bill in October carried two items, one for the purchase of land at West Point, Ky., and one for the purchase of land at Fayetteville, N. C., but did not carry a recommendation of the War Department for the purchase of land at Columbus, Ga. There was some discussion in the House as to the desirability of carrying an appropriation, which amounts in the West Point case to $1,600,000 and in the Fayetteville case to $1,500,000, and after debate and motion to strike out the amounts were carried. The Senate struck out the two items, and the House conferees finally agreed to the position taken by the Senate in striking those two items from the bill. I reported to the House in connection with the report upon that deficiency appropriation bill that we had acquiesced in the Senate's action in striking out of the bill those two specific appropriations, and that the Senate had insisted that they had not put them in, because they did not feel that the Congress at this time should determine upon the permanent retention of camps by the purchase of land; that the House conferees, while feeling that it was a matter of wisdom to buy the land as an incident to the very large expenditures that were being made, and were proposed to be made at these camps, had finally acquiesced in the viewpoint of the Senate. I assumed, as I suppose most Members of the House did, that that meant that until Congress should otherwise determine no moneys should be expended in the purchase of the land, though all of us knew that the building was going forward in connection with the construction of these camps. The West Point camp and the Fayetteville camp were intended as Field Artillery camps, where large bodies of artillery troops could be maneuvered and where the guns could be actually fired and used. As I recall, each was to be a camp for six brigades. The camp at Columbus, Ga., it was proposed should be an Infantry camp for small-arms practice, machine-gun practice, tanks, and so forth. It developed in connection with a review of the appropriations that had been made for the various camps that the department was going forward with the purchase of land at Fayetteville, West Point, and in Georgia. Immediately on behalf of the committee, and with their instruction, I went to the Secretary of War and stated to him that in view of the action of Congress in refusing the appropriations, we were surprised to learn that moneys were being expended in the procurement of land, and said that we would like to have the Secretary come before the committee in order that the subject might be gone into.

He stated that he would be very glad to come, but he would like opportunity of a day or two to make inquiry in regard to the actual facts. I then stated to him that the committee was busily engaged and would be for quite a while in connection with the hearings on other matters in connection with the bill, but that we did not want to have the matter foreclosed by our failure to hear him; that we would be very glad to suit his convenience; that the matter would be held in abeyance until the committee could go into the matter. He accordingly wrote two letters, dictating them in my presence, one to the Assistant Secretary of War and one to the Chief of Staff, asking that the data might be gathered touching these camps, and that, pending procurement of these data and the consideration of the information by the Appropriations Committee of the House and of the Senate, the matters be held in abeyance. I reported that action back to the Committee on Appropriations. Some time later I learned that they were going forward with the camps at West Point and at Fayetteville in the matter of the procurement of land, that the Georgia camp had had the work stopped upon it and as the matter then stood it was proposed to abandon that project. I immediately brought the matter to the attention of the Secretary, and told him that in view of the letters which had been dictated in my presence, the committee was surprised that this matter was going forward, and asked that he come before the committee to make a statement in connection with the matter. He did come, and stated in substance this: That in the first instance, the War Department had concluded that the failure of Congress to appropriate the moneys specifically asked for the purchase of land was not meant as an intention by the Congress that the land should not be bought, but simply that they did not consider it was necessary to appropriate the money at that time, and that the department, finding the money available, and feeling they could go forward with the purchase of the land, had gone forward; that he had been absent from the country at the time that the bill had passed; and that he had simply gathered that impression without having particularly looked to the congressional debates. I called his attention to the statement that I had made on the floor in regard to the matter. He then said touching the subsequent action of the department that he had gone before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, he and the Assistant Secretary of War; that they had there discussed pretty generally the policy that should be pursued in connection with cantonments and camps and also in regard to these three camps; that they had gathered the impression from the discussion that had taken place both formally and informally in the Senate committee and in the House committee; that it was their judgment that they should proceed with these two camps at West Point and at Fayetteville; and that the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate had adopted a resolution that further carrying out of the project of the Georgia camp should be abandoned, and that upon notice of that fact the department had abandoned that project, although it was subsequently stated, by either the Chief of Staff or the Assistant Secretary of War, that they had understood that there was a number of persons who were desirous of having the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate reconsider its action, and that the committee had made a request, as I recall it, of the department to send some officers to further look into that project, and that they had sent some officers for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations then went into a rather full hearing as to the amount of money that had been expended at these three camps, the amount of money it was proposed to expend in their completion, the amount of money that was involved in the purchase of land, the amount of money that would probably have to be paid in the way of damages in the event that the land was not purchased, and they came to this conclusion—and I desire at this point to say that touching these camps, I did not undertake to function, just as I have said to the committee before I would not do, in view of the fact that the West Point camp was near my home city, and I did not care to be in the position of acting where anyone might think my judgment would be swayed by the locality of the camp concerned, but I asked the subcommittee very fully to investigate into the facts and to take such action, if any, as they saw fit touching the matter.

Before telling you the conclusions that they arrived at it might be well to give to the committee a statement in round figures as to the expenditures that have been made. Upon the signing of the armistice it was determined to reduce the size of the camp at West Point, known as Camp Knox, from a six-brigade camp to a four-brigade camp. The project contemplates the expediture, exclusive of land, of sixteen and one-half million dollars. There has been expended in the way of buildings, roads, walks, sewers, and other accessories incident to the plant some $12,500,000. The site of the camp is not really at West Point, Ky., but it is at the little town of Stithton, Ky., just about 20 miles or less, I should think, from West Point, Ky., and about 40 miles or more from Louisville. They proposed to expend $4,000,000 in completing this camp. This is all exclusive of land. The original estimate was for 40,000 acres of land, to cost $1,600,000. By virtue of the location of the camp, and particularly certain buildings on the two sides of Stithton, they believed it was necessary to absorb the little town of Stithton and some 3,000 or 4,000 acres in addition to the original 40,000 acres of land, which would involve in the proposition as carried through the cost of $2,500,000 as against the original estimate of $1,600,000. The people upon this land have been instructed to move off this land, and the statement has been made that the Government expected to acquire the land, and in some instances houses have been torn down and in other instances considerable damage has been done to farms and to outbuildings and houses, and the little town of Stithton has in large measure been absorbed by the contracting quartermaster and contractor's force in the building of this camp.

The amount of money which has now been paid out for the purchase of land amounts, as I recall it, to about $154,000, but there have been acceptances of title to about $581,000 more for land for which the money has not been paid as yet, so the department proposes to go forward in the settlement of these land claims by paying for them and taking title as fast as title can be made and the lands to be paid for can either be agreed to or settled, where agreements can not be reached, by condemnation proceedings. At Fayetteville there is a camp which is proposed shall cost $11,000,000. It is to be a two-brigade camp, and there has actually been spent $7,500,000, leaving $3,500,000 remaining to be expended on the camp proper. The land will cost, they think, as originally estimated, $1,500,000. There has been actually paid out $48,000, and the balance it is proposed to pay as fast as they can get title and reports upon the balance of the land. Here, as at West Point, the people have in large measure been moved, though not to the same extent or character as happened at Camp Knox, because at Camp Knox for more than a year past in connection with some 10,000 acres of land the Army has been in possession and has been firing over it and using it as an artillery camp. Now, touching these two camps the War Department states that it was their desire under any condition that might arise to have two camps, in addition to the camp at Fort Sill, Okla., for the training of large units of artillerymen in the use of their guns and for a firing range for such maneuvers. They stated that if the program looking to an army of 500,000 men should be carried out there would be 20 brigades of field artillery that would go with an army of that size, and that with the facilities that exist at Fort Sill and at those two camps as it was proposed to complete them there would be facilities for taking care of 8 brigades, but that there would have to be rotation of brigades in order that all of them could receive this contemplated training; and that even if the army should be reduced to its present authorized strength that there would not be any greater facilities for the handling of field artillery troops than what already existed and that then not all of them could be at one time trained in this work. They very strenuously insisted that they desired to go forward with these camps and asked them as permanent camps; that if they were to have them as permanent camps they ought to buy the land and not to hold it as leased land. But if the camps were to be abandoned they thought the expense in the way of claims and of damages was such as to make the difference between the purchase and the settlement of claims not very great, and that the salvage that would flow from the buildings and the disposition of the whole plant would probably not be greater than what would have been obtained if they had the ownership of the land. In point of fact it is the view of the War Department we ought to acquire the land to the camps and cantonments we have now, and the question of their salvage——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask again that I may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. They stated that if the camp in Georgia was abandoned, and they hoped that it might not be, but if it was abandoned it was then stated, I think by the Assistant Secretary of War, that it was proposed to make Camp Bragg a camp for the use of small-arms practice and maneuvers for tank and infantry work, and to occupy simply West Point and Fort Sill as the two camps for artillery.

Now, the committee considered the matter very fully. The hearings, I think, give all of the information as to the expenditures made and which are proposed to be made that is obtainable. I think I state accurately the conclusions of the committee, in which I desire to say again I took no part, that as to Camp Knox, Ky., and Camp Bragg, in Fayetteville, N. C., in view of the amount that had been expended there in the creation of the camps and in view of the insistence of a military need for the camps as an incident to the peace organization and training of the Army, they considered it justifiable to go forward with those camps to completion and for the acquirement of the land; that as to the camp in Georgia, the situation was one in which the amount that had been expended was $1,500,000. The amount that it was first proposed to spend was $10,855,000, and $3,600,000 for the land, which have been since reduced, and that in view of the very limited expenditure that had been made in Georgia, the committee thought that that project ought not to be further prosecuted. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], as well as the other members of the committee, I think, will agree that I have stated the situation.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has stated it accurately, and I agree with him. I think in point of merit, and I believe for the good of the service, that West Point is the best proposition—better than Fayetteville—but I think Fayetteville is second, one for a four-brigade and the other for a two-brigade camp. As to Columbus, Ga., considering we have Fort Sill, and have one on the west coast, I think we had better lose the amount that has been expended than to proceed to its completion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The authorization of $65,000,000 for medical and hospital supplies of the Army, contained in the first deficiency appropriation act, 1919, is repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there are three items here, amounting to about $135,000,000, I think—reducing the funds available to that extent—for hospitals and medical supplies. While I do not doubt the committee gave full consideration to that subject, I would like to ask whether the Quartermaster's office and the Surgeon General's office think there will be sufficient money to fully take care of the needs of the returning soldiers for hospitals and hospital attendants? We passed a bill here the other day authorizing an appropriation of $10,500,000, and had quite a contest over it. We are reducing the appropriations now to the extent of $135,000,000, which is all right, but I think it is very essential that we do not cripple the Army in its ability to take care of returned soldiers in the hospitals where necessary, and in view of the fact that they have men, it is said, in St. Elizabeth's who ought to be in hospitals, and that men in the most modern army hospital in the world have to do their own washing. Various things of that sort have come to me from different directions, some of them through the press and some of them through private letters; and I hope we are not crippling the Medical and Quartermaster's office as to hospitals and hospital supplies.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish I was always certain that the voting of money for a given purpose accomplished that purpose. Unfortunately, it frequently does not. The Committee on Appropriations, from the very day that the war broke out to this hour, has given every dollar—and I mean that in its most liberal sense—that the Medical Department has ever asked in the way of building of hospitals, equipment of hospitals, purchasing of medical supplies, or anything else for the treatment and care of the soldiers. They did it from the very natural desire that they not only had but which they were sure the American people had, that there should be no failure through lack of funds in properly caring for the men who went into the Army of the United States.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that nobody questions that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am coming to the exact point the gentleman is speaking about.

Now, unfortunately, I hear, as the gentleman does, every now and then, of instances here, there, and other places, where things are not as they should be, and occasionally it has carried with it the suggestion that particular places have been short of funds. I was told, in a personal conversation with a lady the other day, that in connection with the Walter Reed Hospital there had been an absence of funds. Now, I do not know how much money has been allotted to Walter Reed Hospital, but I do know that all the money anybody in the Medical Department has ever said was necessary for all the hospitals has been given, and it ought to have been given to Walter Reed Hospital if it has not been given, in order to maintain it properly. As to these items, every one was conceded by the Medical Department on their own motion.

Mr. MANN. I do not want the War Department hereafter, as I have noticed departments are prone to do, to say, "Well, Congress did not give us the money," or, as in this case, "Congress took it away from us."

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not, either. That is the reason I am emphasizing this statement now. The Committee on Appropriations voted moneys in connection with the supplies when there was not a man who believed they were necessary. There were amounts carried in the second deficiency bill of 1919 in connection with surgical dressings that were so extreme that I knew no human being could justify them and no human being did.

I stood on the floor here and called the attention of the House to the fact, and I said to the House that I was not willing, and the committee was not willing, to deny the moneys in regard to a matter that related to the health and care of the soldiers of our Army, and therefore we voted these sums. And the very supplies they have on hand to-day is proof positive of the judgment of the committee that they did not need the large quantities of many things they have obtained. They have bandages, ligatures, and other supplies in many instances away beyond any possible need.

Mr. MANN. That is a question of contemplation.

Mr. SHERLEY. The question of caring for the soldiers and sailors of America is a question of administration, not a question of money. Congress has always given the money in every single instance.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I take it that the Army regulations do not provide that a man on his back, in bed, unable to move, shall do his own laundry work, or that a man with both arms off shall wash his own underclothing. It would be a foolish regulation if such exists, and if there is a law of Congress to that effect it would be still more foolish.

Now, I do not know, except what I am told by newspapers and private patients, what the situation is at the Army hospitals, but if it be true that one-armed men are compelled to wait in order, with a long waiting list, to get a chance at the bathtub in order to wash their dirty clothes in Walter Reed or any other military hospital, it is a sad reflection on somebody. If they have the money and refuse to use it, it seems odd. I can understand why men in the Army—well men—are not provided with laundry help. A good many of them do not have much else to do except to do servant's work for themselves and for the officers, and most of them would rather do it for themselves than for the officers. But I should not suppose that it was necessary in the hospitals for ill men or wounded men or crippled men to do that work. Of course, probably this matter was not before the Committee on Appropriations. But I do not want the Army to be able to say that they have not got money enough to do this because Congress repealed the appropriations which it had made.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not, either. We have carried these sums with the statements made and submitted by the Medical Corps as to the amounts that could be given up. This bill has been printed now for two or three days. There is not a department in the War or Navy Department that ought not to be familiar with its provisions. I have heard not a word from the Medical Department in protest against these figures. I repeat that the committee has never yet, even though its judgment indicated otherwise, refused a dollar that they have asked.

Now, they may get short at some particular place. A man may say, "We did not have money enough." It does not mean that Congress has not given money enough, but it simply means that there has been some bad administration or bad allotment in the distribution of the funds, and that a lot of money has been spent for a lot of ideas of particular men that bear no relationship to the actual well-being and the protection and care of sick soldiers. I know of nothing that requires more common sense, as well as technical skill, than matters relative to the health of men.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Is the gentleman aware that there is no provision made in the Army regulations for the washing of the underclothes of men who are sick in the hospital?

Mr. SHERLEY. If that be true, all they have got to do is to change the Army regulations.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. As a matter of fact, I was talking to a man who was in one of the hospitals five weeks. This matter was up yesterday. He said, "We did not think about it at the time, but I was in the hospital five weeks and not a bit of washing was done for me, and I could not get it sent out."

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, in response to the gentleman's suggestion, there is in the statement of estimated needs for the balance of the fiscal year something over $1,800,000 carried for laundries at hospitals; and I repeat if there is any regulation which prevents provision being made for the laundering of a sick soldier's laundry the remedy is perfectly simple. All that it requires is some common sense on the part of the men responsible for Army regulations to change them. Congress can not be expected to be able to foresee and make provision against the lack of common sense of men in connection with Army regulations.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. The gentleman is exactly right about that; but this man insisted that they told him that the funds could only be applied to the washing of the linen for the use of the beds in the hospitals.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition, subcaliber guns, and other accessories for mountain, field, and siege artillery practice, fiscal year 1917–18, and fortification appropriation act approved July 8, 1918, $85,418,177.38.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Very well.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is this the item from which the various appropriations to build nitrate plants have been taken?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is one of the items.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it not the only item?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. The gentleman will find in the hearings a statement as to the amount of moneys that have been expended on the four nitrate plants, the funds from which they have been obtained, the total of them, and what it is proposed to expend in the future.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I will modify my question. Is it not the item from which all appropriations were taken, except only the $20,000,000 nitrate item?.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I think that is not quite accurate. But I think it is the fund from which the major portion of the appropriation has been paid.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is the fund, I will ask the gentleman, is it not, from which the appropriation to build plants 2, 3, and 4 were taken?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that is true.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is, the Muscle Shoals plant and the two Ohio plants?

Mr. SHERLEY. As to No. 2 nitrate plant there has been some $60,000,000 spent or committed on it, and it has been obtained from "Armament of fortifications (c)," which is this item.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; and that is true also of plants 3 and 4?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. I think that is true of both of them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In other words, from this item $110,000,000 in round numbers has been taken for the building of nitrate plants?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; the gentleman's total is too large.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will put it this way: Sixty-odd million dollars for the Muscle Shoals plant and $23,000,000 for each of the two Ohio plants?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. There has been actually taken and spent——

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not speaking of what has actually been spent——

Mr. SHERLEY. Then of what is proposed to be spent there is proposed to be spent for nitrate plant No. 2 $60,000,000 and $5,000,000 additional in connection with the transmission of power, which would make $65,000,000 there; for nitrate plant No. 3, $9,000,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. For nitrate plant No. 3, $22,000,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I am talking about what it is going to cost now.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am speaking about what amounts were allotted from this appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I think my statement is correct that $110,000,000 were appropriated from this fund for the completion, if completion took place, of these three nitrate plants.

Mr. SHERLEY. It depends on what the gentleman means by "appropriated."

Mr. LONGWORTH. The heading here is "Appropriated and expended."

Mr. SHERLEY. That heading is a little misleading. There was allotted originally a total amount which looked to the expenditure of $157,000,000 for 18 projects in connection with the nitrate division of the Ordnance Department.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I still think the statement I made in the beginning was correct, that $110,000,000 was allotted from this appropriation for the purpose of building plants 2, 3, and 4. Now I want to ask the gentleman this question: When this appropriation was originally made, was it suggested by the War Department or by any Government official that any of this money appropriated for purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition, and so forth, was to be used for the erection of nitrate plants?

Mr. SHERLEY. In the first instance, I suppose, when the amounts figured were very small. When the amounts got very large I do not recall whether anybody suggested the amount of money that was to be used in the creation of nitrate plants. But I will say this to the gentleman: Without passing judgment on how wisely money may have been expended at particular localities for particular plants, in view of the very serious situation, and what at one time looked as though it might be almost the tragic situation of this country in regard to a shortage of nitrates, in my judgment the War Department would have been singularly remiss in its duty to the country if it had not taken steps looking to the supplying of the Army with the necessary nitrates for the manufacture of ammunition.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I quite agree with the gentleman; but that is not my question.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but the gentleman's question implies that something ulterior lay in the fact that the department used moneys for the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition in creating plants for the making of one of the ingredients to make this ammunition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman quite misinterprets my position. I was quite as much as he was in favor of the use of some fund somewhere to relieve the situation caused by the falling down of our Chile nitrate supply. I simply asked the gentleman whether it was contemplated to use this fund for that purpose, and the gentleman says no. Then I asked him, Why would it not have been possible to pass very speedily through Congress an appropriation designed for that purpose?

Mr. SHERLEY. In the first place, I did not say no, and, in the second place, I do not believe anybody had the knowledge, not even the gentleman from Ohio, as to the amount of money that ought to have been put into nitrate plants. It was a problem, like many other acute problems in connection with the war, that grew from week to week and month to month, and I doubt whether there was a man alive in America who had vision enough to foresee anything like the demand that was made upon America in the way of ammunition, and if this war had lasted a year more, no man could tell the amount which we would have had to supply. It was away beyond the dreams of the most extravagant advocate of extreme preparation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, as the gentleman states, it was absolutely impossible at that moment to have definitely contemplated the amount we might need for the production of nitrates. The fact is that we have actually spent now about $60,000,000 at Muscle Shoals, and we are committed to spend not less than $9,000,000 each in the two Ohio plants. I happen to be acquainted with the situation at the so-called Anchor plant in Ohio. It is merely a desert waste. Five million dollars has been expended there. Four million dollars more is to be spent, and the result is a ruin. It has ruined the entire surrounding country. It is of no conceivable use to any human being, yet the Government is going on spending money there to-day building some buildings, for what purpose the Lord only knows. And with all of that, not one cent has ever been paid to any property owner whose land was taken for this purpose. Those plants have been abandoned. They are ruins. The plant at Muscle Shoals is practically completed. A moment ago I saw on the floor the distinguished gentleman [Mr. ALMON] who represents that district. Now, what is the Muscle Shoals plant going to be used for? Is there any gentleman here who would have advocated the expenditure of $60,000,000 to build a fertilizer plant there in time of peace?

And yet that plant lies there, still the property of the Government, but which can be operated for no conceivable use whatever except to make a very inferior quality of fertilizer. Col. Joyes testified before the Appropriations Committee with regard to the use of ammonium nitrate, which is the sole product of this plant, for fertilizing purposes. It is not even good for fertilizer.

Col. JOYES. Ammonium nitrate is useful to some extent for fertilizer, but it has never been used very much for that purpose. Its prime purpose was for the war—for high explosives, for shell filler.

Mr. CANNON. And when the war is over——

Col. JOYES (interposing). It has no further usefulness in that connection except as it may safeguard us in a future war; and the real—

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Did I understand the gentleman to read that Col. Joyes said we would not use the plant——

Mr. LONGWORTH. For the production of anything except fertilizer—and an inferior quality of fertilizer. What, gentlemen, is the use in taking from another fund—the fund which Congress deliberately, and the only fund which it deliberately, appropriated for the manufacture of nitrate, the fund of $20,000,000 carried in the act of 1916—and spending that money in the making of a dam at Muscle Shoals? For what purpose? To furnish power to run this fertilizer plant; and which dam can not be completed, according to the Secretary of War, for three years from now. We have not only spent $60,000,000 there already, but we are in the process of spending $14,000,000 more to furnish power to run this plant, even if we agree entirely with what the gentleman from Kentucky said—that we were justified in using appropriations never designed for the purpose to supply necessities of war——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We were justified, perhaps, in using this fund of three hundred and odd million dollars for the purpose at that time. But the money has been spent; and now by Executive order we are using the money which is appropriated for nitrate plants in time of war to complete a dam whose sole purpose is to furnish power to produce fertilizer in time of peace, and the total amount of power it can supply can only be used for this one plant alone, according to the letter of the Secretary of War, which I introduced in the RECORD the other day.

There is $74,000,000 of the people's money being spent at this one particular place, and it can not be used for any other purpose except for the benefit of a private corporation to make an inferior quality of fertilizer. Why, the power generated by the steam plant which cost $15,000,000 makes it so expensive to operate this plant that it can not possibly compete with Chile nitrates, or any of the modern and up-to-date processes of making nitrogen.

But after we have spent $14,000,000 for the benefit of this one locality it is estimated that the cost will be reduced from $30 the horsepower a year to $5, according to Col. Joyes, which might make it possible, gentlemen, for this Air Nitrate Corporation to put over on the Government the scheme it expects to be able to—buy the plant at a scrap price and eventually to have furnished them without expenditure on their part a water-power plant which will produce power at $5 a year instead of $30. If they can buy the plant at a scrap price, it may be that they will be able to conduct a profitable business, and the result will have been that the American people will have paid $75,000,000 to accomplish only the result that the Air Nitrate Corporation may be able to make a going concern out of the Muscle Shoals plant, because they have not had to spend one cent of money in the development of the plant or the power to operate it.

I am not going into this matter fully to-day. It is a long story. When I do go into it fully, it is going to justify, in my judgment, a congressional investigation as to why this money was ever spent in this locality. I shall not make one statement in connection with it that is not borne out by information furnished by the proper officials of the War Department. Among other things, I will tell gentlemen interested that I propose to show that from the point of view of the three necessities of nitrate production—coal, coke, and limestone—there is a haul of anywhere between 30 and 100 miles to get that product there where the nitrate plant is located. I am not going to detain the committee longer, but I thought it wise now to bring out a part of the history of this transaction. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, the House has been furnished another contribution of misapprehension and misinformation by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] about the Government nitrate plants and the great water power at Muscle Shoals, on the Tennessee River in north Alabama. I am sure that the Members of the House, and in fact the country, will feel disappointment and regret that the gentleman feels it necessary to postpone placing in the RECORD the answer of the War Department to his "57 varieties" of questions to the Secretary of War, since I understand the Secretary of War answered his questions. I have postponed addressing the House at some length on the subject of the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals and the development of water power there, hoping that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] would be able by this date to go into this subject fully, and I am sorry he now tells the House:

I am not going into this matter fully to-day.

As the representative of the district in which Muscle Shoals is located, I feel unable to postpone longer a correction of some of the misinformation and misapprehension which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] so insistently and repeatedly presses upon the attention of the House. The very great solicitude and anxiety which the gentleman exhibits with respect to the Government developments at Muscle Shoals are well known to this House, for the gentleman told the House, as we find in the RECORD on the 25th day of April, 1916, that the first poem he ever committed to memory when he was a very young boy was this:

If 'tis a sin to steal a pin,
How much more great to appropriate
The electoral vote of a sovereign State.

And the gentleman has been industriously trying to find the "pin" at Muscle Shoals ever since. He told the House on the day he repeated this poetry that, proceeding by analogy, it was a great sin to obtain the people's money out of the Public Treasury on false pretenses, and he declared upon the same date, in referring to what is known as the nitrate provision in the national-defense act, approved June 3, 1916, the gentleman having Muscle Shoals in mind and never forgetting it, made this statement on the floor of the House:

This matter is the old wolf in sheep's clothing.

He told the House that the provision designed and proposed to provide a nitrogen supply for the defense of the country in time of war was an effort to take the money of the people under false pretenses, and the gentleman opposed the provision. He said to the House on April 25, 1916:

I tell you, gentlemen, water power as an instrument for making nitrogen is obsolete.

Against this statement by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], a distinguished scientist, Dr. Allerton S. Cushman, of this Government's research bureau, stated before the American Institute of Electrical Engineers April 26, 1916, the very next day after the statement of the gentleman from Ohio that—

The production of nitrogen, which is one of the three principal fertilizer ingredients, is distinctly a water-power proposition involving the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen.

I will leave the Members of this House to decide for themselves and the people of this country to decide for themselves which is the more reliable authority with respect to the problem of air-nitrogen fixation, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] or Dr. Cushman.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was so distressed when he read in the newspapers that the work on the Muscle Shoals Dam had been ordered resumed that he wrote the Secretary of War asking whether the statement published in the newspapers was true or not, and obviously the gentleman's inquiry of the Secretary of War was prompted by the gentleman's intention to further oppose the progress and construction of the Muscle Shoals Dam and criticize it in the future as he has in the past. Will the House please contrast the gentleman's opposition to the building of this dam and contrast his questions addressed to the Secretary of War with reference to the resumption of work on this dam with the resolution passed by the National Board of Farm Organizations in Washington on August 27, 1918, representing 17 different farm organizations in the country, and with 172 delegates representing 40 States of the Union present, as follows:

Whereas the building of the great nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, together with the water power which will make these plants available in time of peace for the manufacture of cheap fertilizer, is the one outstanding feature of necessary war development that will have a permanent influence upon the agricultural industry of the country; and

Whereas we hear with regret that work on this dam has been suspended and thus will prevent the realization of the hopes of the farmers that the product of these plants might be available during the reconstruction period at the close of the war, when it would be most valuable:

Therefore we most respectfully appeal to the President of the United States that some method be adopted by which this work can be at once resumed, if consistent with the effective prosecution of the war, with priority orders, if necessary, only for such material as will be required for the construction that can be accomplished at once, so that these plants, with their potential possibilities, shall not lie idle when their product is no longer needed for destruction, but can at once become an asset to the Government and of vital assistance to the farm lands of the Nation that have been and will continue to be called upon to yield and yield again that man may be fed.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] was no doubt glad when the work on the Muscle Shoals Dam was stopped and was sorry when the work was resumed, but the national board of 17 farm organizations regretted that the work was stopped and appealed to the President of the United States that some method be adopted by which this work could be resumed, and the President found a method to resume the work.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is as constant as he is inconsistent in his opposition to the building of the dam at Muscle Shoals, and the farmers of this country are as consistent as they are constant in pressing the construction of this dam to its earliest completion in order that they may get cheaper and higher-grade fertilizers, as Congress intended they should when Congress passed the so-called nitrate provision in the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, and as the President intends they shall have when he ordered the work on the dam started and when he ordered, through the Secretary of War, the work on the dam resumed, and when he located the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals as the best location in the United States for the nitrate plants.

In the discussion of the rivers and harbors bill in the House on January 11, 1919, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] said:

I have in mind a river improvement now in progress in the sunny southland, in comparison of which any item of this bill is utterly insignificant.

The gentleman's opposition to the joint improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee River and the development of water power by the Government at Muscle Shoals has gone so far, and his feeling of opposition is so intense, that he made the amazing extreme assertion to this House on April 4, 1918, that—

I myself have come to hate the words "Muscle Shoals."

Among the criticisms made of Muscle Shoals by some is that the spelling of "Muscle" is wrong and that it should be "Mussel." Some very interesting historical arguments have been made in support of changing the spelling to "Mussel," and some surprise has been felt that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], in asking his "57 varieties" of questions of the Secretary of War, did not ask the Secretary why "Muscle" is not spelled "Mussel." In the course of the investigations which the gentleman tells the House he proposes to have made he may have this spelling investigated also.

Can any Member of this House—can even the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]—treat this great development and national opportunity at Muscle Shoals with fairness and with justice who hates the words "Muscle Shoals"? He has been pleased to characterize the people of the Tennessee Valley and their organization, the Tennessee River Improvement Association, as "lobbyists." Will he be consistent and confess to this House that the Ohio River Improvement Association is also an organization of "lobbyists"? The people of the Tennessee Valley, in acting through their organization, the Tennessee River Improvement Association, now more than 20 years old, have been doing the same kind of work and striving to secure the very same ends, namely, the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee River, just as the Ohio River Improvement Association has worked to secure the improvement of the navigation of the Ohio River; but the Ohio River Association has been most remarkably successful and the Tennessee River Improvement Association has been, unfortunately, very unsuccessful. A comparison of the appropriations by Congress for the improvement of the Ohio River and the Tennessee River discloses how successful the Ohio River Improvement Association has been and how the efforts of the Tennessee River Improvement Association have failed.

The first appropriation made by Congress for the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee River was made in 1827 and the first appropriation made by Congress for the improvement of the navigation of the Ohio River was made in 1826. Since the year 1826 appropriations for the improvement of the Ohio River, and brought down to and including July 18, 1918, exclusive of appropriations for the improvement of the tributaries to the Ohio River, have amounted to $74,471,955.74, while appropriations for the improvement of the Tennessee River, exclusive of the tributaries to that river and brought down to and including July 18, 1918, amount to only $14,018,631.54.

The "lobbyists" of the Ohio River Improvement Association have been able to secure appropriations in 92 years at the rate of approximately $810,000 per year, while the "lobbyists" for the Tennessee River Improvement Association have been able in 91 years to secure approximately only $155,000 per year, but neither the members of the Ohio River Improvement Association nor the members of the Tennessee River Improvement Association are "lobbyists." They are the leading progressive people of the Ohio and Tennessee Valleys, and they properly desire and support the navigation improvement of the rivers in these valleys.

If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is willing to support and advocate the improvement of the tributaries to the upper Ohio River, how can he so unfairly carry his opposition to the improvement of the Tennessee River, also a tributary of the Ohio River, to the extreme point of saying to this House that he hates the words "Muscle Shoals," which is the greatest obstruction to the navigation of the Tennessee River?

Senator John T. Morgan, of Alabama, when he had completed his long years of distinguished service in behalf of the Panama Canal, turned his attention in his last days to the Tennessee River and the importance of its navigation improvement, and in a report upon the "navigation of the Tennessee River," which the Senator prepared and presented to the Senate in 1905, he also turned "lobbyist," like the Tennessee River Improvement Association, in favor of the Tennessee River, and in seeking to find to what these discriminations against the Tennessee River, as compared with the Ohio River, could be ascribed, says in his report:

Nor are such wide discriminations due to the difficulties or the proper expense required to make these watercourses equally navigable at any given depth of water. Nor are they due to the characteristics of the population of the watershed of either river, or to the topography, or healthfulness, or water supply, or the forests, or the fertility of the lands in these areas, or to the beauty of these regions, respectively; for there is no country in the world more beautiful than the valleys, hills, and mountains that are intersected and watered by the Tennessee River and its many affluents, great and small.

The committee are not in search of the reasons for the neglect of Tennessee River by Congress in the past history of the country, but they are impelled by a sense of duty to the whole country to present the facts that appeal to Congress for a just, wise, and national policy that will give to the Tennessee River its rightful position as the foremost of the tributaries of the Mississippi River as a contributor to the wealth and commerce of the country.

Woodrow Wilson, authorized by Congress to do so, and with a vision like Morgan's vision, has shown the courage and wisdom to adopt "a just, wise, and national policy that will give to the Tennessee River its rightful position as the foremost of the tributaries of the Mississippi River as a contributor to the wealth and commerce of the country."

Now, in regard to the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, which seem to be an affliction to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], I am utterly unable to understand why he singles out the nitrate plants as a case of war extravagance and why he insists that the Muscle Shoals project has been repeatedly turned down by Congress, when the RECORD does not show anywhere that Congress at any time ever turned down the Muscle Shoals project. Can it be because these plants are located in the "Sunny Southland," or is it because it is the purpose of the Government to carry out the intention of Congress that these nitrate plants in times of peace shall produce cheaper and higher grade fertilizers for the farmers of this country? Let him answer. He indicates to the House that it is his purpose to have an investigation made with respect to the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals and the building of the dam there. Speaking for myself and, I believe, for all of the friends of the great Muscle Shoals development, I have no objection to any investigation he may propose, and I do not fear that he will find anything except that which will commend the United States engineers in their conclusions and recommendations for the joint improvement of the navigation and development of water power at Muscle Shoals, for the reports of the United States engineers on the Muscle Shoals project will ever be a credit to the Engineer Corps, and they never can be justly or fairly criticized for their reports and recommendations on the Muscle Shoals project.

It may be shown, and no doubt will be, if an investigation is made of the cost of the construction of the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, that these plants, like all other Government enterprises during the war, have cost more than they would have in peace times, and more perhaps than they should have cost, but whatever may be discovered or disclosed by any investigation that may be made touching the construction of the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, I feel certain that it never will be discovered by any investigation that the Ordnance Department, in building the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, failed to perform their duty, and I also feel certain that an investigation will disclose the fact that Col. J. W. Joyes, the ordnance officer who has been immediately responsible for the construction of the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, performed a service for his country in a time of emergency second to none in the Government's entire war construction program. The Ordnance Department was called upon to meet the most unusual emergency connected with all of the country's war endeavors, and that was to provide the one thing that the country did not have to carry on the war with, namely, nitrogen with which to manufacture explosives and munitions for our armies in France. We had steel and steel plants, and the country possessed nearly all of the facilities and utilities for carrying on the war against Germany, but the country had no nitrogen plants to supply the great powder plants the Government was building for the manufacture of explosives. The Ordnance Department met the nitrogen emergency in a most praiseworthy and forceful way. The American Cyanamid Co., an American corporation with a large plant at Niagara Falls, on the Canadian side, owned an air-fixation process and had a technically trained staff and skilled operatives. This process was the only established and successful air-fixation process available to the Government. The Ordnance Department would have failed in its duty to protect this country with its needed supply of nitrogen if it had not secured this process and built a plant with which to operate this process. Whether the Air Nitrates Corporation received from the Government and charged the Government too high a fee for the use of the American Cyanamid Co.'s process and for the services of its trained technical staff and operating organization will be a question about which there will no doubt remain a difference of opinion, but there will be no division of opinion about the patriotic and prompt action of the Ordnance Department in the matter, even if the Government did have to pay the Air Nitrates Corporation more than should have been paid, and if more was paid to the Air Nitrates Corporation in the way of a fee and for operating experience than should have been paid the case is not different from other similar cases, and there is no reason why the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] should single out Muscle Shoals and nitrate plant No. 2 there as a horrible example any more than Hog Island, the powder plants, the cantonments, and the Government's aircraft construction. The Government paid a terrible bill for all of them, but the Government had to pay to win the war and the Government paid and won the war.

The nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals cost the Government a very large sum of money, but these plants, unlike nearly all of the war plants built by the Government, will not have to be scrapped. On the contrary, these great nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals will be operated and be of great value in time of peace, and though they were built as a national war necessity they will, I believe, prove a peace-time national blessing in the production of fertilizers, always needed but never more so than at the present time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. I have but little time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will ask that the gentleman have as much time as I had.

Mr. ALMON. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In the first place, I will ask this question——

Mr. ALMON. I think the gentleman said the other day in his speech that he had prepared about 55 questions to be put to the Secretary of War.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. Has the gentleman received answers to them?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman insert them in the RECORD?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will when the time comes. What I have said to-day is confirmed. Let me ask the gentleman this question. Let us leave out this business about war preparations. Let us grant we had put money in a nitrate plant——

Mr. ALMON. All right, sir.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not criticizing the gentleman, but would the gentleman have voted or would he now vote for an expenditure of $75,000,000 at Muscle Shoals or elsewhere to build a fertilizer plant in time of peace?

Mr. ALMON. If it was necessary to get fertilizer for the benefit of the farmers of this country in the production of food crops we are going to need in the next few years, I would have done so.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is criticizing what he has called the Chilean Nitrate Fertilizer Trust who are oppressing the farmer. Does the gentleman know what the cost of Chilean nitrate is per pound?

Mr. ALMON. The Government is paying $81 a ton for it, and a private individual, the farmer, can not get it for less than $100 f. o. b. at the port where it is shipped to this country.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is a war-time question, of course, when we had to have Chilean nitrate; but what was the price of Chilean nitrate per pound before the war and what is the lowest price at which it can be produced at this plant? Now I make the assertion——

Mr. ALMON. I do not care for the gentleman to make an assertion.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then I ask the gentleman if he knows the price of Chilean nitrate in ordinary times?

Mr. ALMON. No.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will inform the gentleman it is 2 cents per pound.

Mr. ALMON. I will say, in answer, we will make it at Muscle Shoals for less than we get it from Chile.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will read the gentleman——

Mr. ALMON. I hope the gentleman will not take up my time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Col. Joyes testified that the lowest cost of manufacturing ammonium nitrate at that plant is 6 cents per pound—three times the price of Chilean nitrate.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman does not know what it is going to cost after the war is over and after labor conditions settle and after the price of coal goes down. You do not know what the cost of nitrates will be. I declare that I believe that fertilizers can be manufactured at the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, when the water power is developed and available, much cheaper than the farmers have been paying for Chilean nitrates. Nitrate plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals is the greatest nitrate plant in the world, and the Muscle Shoals possible water-power development is one of the greatest power possibilities known to hydroelectric engineers; and the Muscle Shoals nitrate plants when operated with cheap water power will produce fertilizers and other products as much needed in times of peace as in times of war, and no war development or war enterprise in which the Government has engaged promises so great a contribution to the economic welfare of the country in the future as these Muscle Shoals developments. No doubt it will prove true, in spite of the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] will continue his criticisms of the President and the War Department for building the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals and for developing the water power there to operate these plants with; but he will stand alone in his criticisms and will be left with no one to cheer him and no one to sympathize with him in his hate of the words "Muscle Shoals."

The farmers of the country will look upon him as their enemy and will turn to the President and to the War Department and to their friends in Congress.

President Wilson, under the authority given him by Congress, located and built the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, and is developing water power there with which to operate these plants for the people of the United States and to free the country from its dependence upon a foreign source of nitrogen supply. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] stated in his speech here the other day that this plant had been turned over to a private corporation. There is nothing upon which to base such a statement.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I made no such statement.

Mr. ALMON. Then it is in the RECORD. I do not know whether you said it or not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman never read such a statement from me. The Government still owns it, and it is to be operated by a private corporation, and it will be.

Mr. ALMON. I may be mistaken about you saying the plant had been turned over to a private corporation, but you did say in a speech here on the 11th day of January that this dam was being built by the Government for a private corporation to produce fertilizer at Muscle Shoals. You have nothing upon which to base your statement that this plant will be operated by a private corporation.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will permit, I think the testimony is the Government has closed down on the manufacture of ammonium nitrate.

Mr. ALMON. That is where the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GOOD. That was the testimony before the committee on yesterday, that the plant had been closed down for the manufacture of ammonium nitrate for fertilizer purposes because no scientific way had been discovered to manufacture that ammonium nitrate so that it would not cake, and that is the problem they are now trying to solve.

Mr. ALMON. If my friend, Mr. LONGWORTH, will just now insert in the RECORD his 55 questions to the Secretary of War and Col. Joyes's answers they will give the House a great deal of information on this question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say that the information given is quite contrary to the information the gentleman is now giving to the committee.

Mr. ALMON. Muscle Shoals was selected for the location of this nitrate plant upon its merits. We had the water power, the transportation facilities, the raw materials, and the best climatic conditions, far distant from the Gulf and Atlantic coast in the event of an invasion of this country by a foreign enemy. There was no place in the United States where you could locate a plant and have water power with which to run it during the war if the war had continued as expected.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want to ask the gentleman a question. He said they had water power in time of war.

Mr. ALMON. Yes; but not developed. There was no place in this country where there was developed water power and where a nitrate plant could be built and operated by water power during the war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then, why did the Government spend $15,000,000 to build a steam plant there for any purpose?

Mr. ALMON. They had to build a nitrate plant somewhere and operate it with steam power during the war, and why should they not operate it with steam power at Muscle Shoals as well as anywhere else?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why did they select Muscle Shoals—because there was water power there?

Mr. ALMON. Yes; there is a great water power at Muscle Shoals, and the nitrate plants were located there because of this great water power, and when this water power is developed it will be used in peace time for the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products, as Congress intended, and for the operation of the nitrate plants there in time of war for the production of nitrogen needed in the manufacture of explosives. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has offered no evidence in support of his statement that only an inferior grade of fertilizer can be produced at the Muscle Shoals nitrate plants. On the contrary, successful manufacturers of air nitrogen fertilizers testified before the Military and Agricultural Committees of the House in February, 1916, that at Muscle Shoals, with cheap water power and with phosphate rock and other raw materials near by, high-grade fertilizers can be manufactured and sold to the farmers of the country for perhaps one-half of what they paid for them in normal times. These statements made by expert manufacturers before these committees of the House have remained unquestioned and undisputed by any competent authorities. As between the unsupported assertion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] that only inferior fertilizers can be manufactured at the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals and the undisputed statements of expert manufacturers that high-grade fertilizers can be manufactured there with cheap water power the farmers of the country prefer to accept the opinion of the successful manufacturers. [Applause.]

For ordnance stores and supplies, Army appropriation act approved July 9, 1918, and first deficiency appropriation act, 1919, $372,299,260.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of clearing up a little difference of opinion as to prices of nitrates between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] and myself. And I am quoting from Col. Joyce as to the question of the price of ammonium nitrate as produced in this plant and as to what Chilean nitrate costs in normal times.

In answer to the question put by Mr. SHERLEY—

What is the cost?

Col. Joyce said:

The cost has not been definitely determined, and can not be determined until we have had a more extended period of operation, but it is estimated that the cost of ammonium nitrate at full operation would be about 6 cents per pound, and possibly a trifle higher, but it is claimed by the owner of the process that the cost will not be as great as that. Experience to date, running at about one-fifth capacity and for a short period with the operatives green and with the plant overstaffed (because we were getting men ready for larger operation), indicates that even at this partial operation ammonium nitrate can be produced for a little over 8 cents per pound.

In answer to the question asked by Mr. CANNON, "What is the cost of Chilean nitrate in normal times?" Col. Joyce said:

Before the war the cost of Chilean nitrate was a little above 2 cents a pound.

That is an answer to the whole proposition, gentlemen. If this fertilizer trust from Chile has been crushing the farmers of this country, as the gentleman from Alabama says, by selling nitrate at 2 cents a pound, how will they benefit when it is proposed to sell it in this plant for something over 8 cents?

Mr. ALMON. What was the Government paying for Chilean nitrate during the war for ammunition purposes?

Mr. LONGWORTH. At what cost did the Government produce it?

Mr. ALMON. What has been made at Muscle Shoals, it seems, cost about 6 or 8 cents in war times, when the Government has been paying 15 cents during the war for Chilean nitrate.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The Government was contracting for all ammonium nitrate at 15 cents.

Mr. ALMON. You say 15 cents we are to pay for something that we can make in Muscle Shoals in war time at 8 cents a pound?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is talking about his plant in peace times as a benefit to the farmer, and it shows that it will cost the farmer at least three times as much if he buys it at that plant as it would cost him in the market.

Mr. ALMON. It is shown that in peace times we can make it cheaper than the Chilean nitrate.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The only reason we built this plant at all was because we were out of Chilean nitrate, and the cost was enormous if we could buy it at all. That is the reason we built the plant. I was talking about the price of fertilizer in normal time.

Mr. ALMON. If the Government can make fertilizer as good as that made in Chile, are you opposed to our Government making it because we can get it cheaper from a foreign country?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am opposed to the expenditure of $75,000,000 of the people's money to furnish nitrates for any purposes except war purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield the floor?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; I yield the floor.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just one word about these plants and Chilean nitrate, and then we will go on with the bill.

Without expressing an opinion as to the value of this plant for fertilizer uses in peace times, I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who is a fair man, will admit that it is not a fair statement to say that the Government has expended, or proposes to expend, $75,000,000 in order to go into the manufacture of fertilizer for agricultural uses. The truth of the business is, as the gentleman realizes, that whether the selection of the particular site was wise or unwise, the expenditure of $60,000,000 in connection with the plant was because of the then pressing war need, which, if the war had not ended when it did end, would have more than justified that much of the expenditure in order to relieve this country from a shortage that it dared not have in connection with so important a matter as ammunition.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will yield, I will say I am exactly in accord with the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason I state that is because the gentleman repeatedly talks about a $75,000,000 investment for fertilizer purposes, and the gentleman knows, because he has admitted it, that the $60,000,000 investment was not made with that end in view, but was made because of the war situation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So far the gentleman and I are together, and I will ask the gentleman, he being a fair man, whether he supports the expenditure of $15,000,000 in the building of a dam to furnish, three or four or five years from now, power for this plant?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will answer the gentleman with perfect frankness in this way: I have always questioned the advisability of the expenditure of as much money as seems to be necessary for the development of the Muscle Shoals water power. But I want to say to the gentleman that the development of that power differs, so far as I know, in no particular from the development of many other water powers and the improvement of many other streams in America the commercial justification of which has yet to be clearly demonstrated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if Congress did not authorize the expenditure of $60,000,000 to improve the navigation of the Ohio River?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Ninety millions in all.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not remember the total amount. I have believed that that was one of the rivers that might justify improvement, although I have in late years come to the conclusion that until we change basically our policy touching river navigation none of our investments in river improvement is going fully to be justified. I do not care to go into the question of river improvement at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN. This appropriation for Muscle Shoals was a joint affair, for not only the development of the water power but also to improve the navigation of the Tennessee River, which is really a larger river than the Ohio River.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not either attacking or defending the improvement of Muscle Shoals. The gentleman from Ohio asked me about it, and I very candidly expressed my opinion. All that I rose for was to correct the impression that might be produced by the gentleman's reiterated statement that $75,000,000 was put in for a commercial purpose, and I knew that he was too fair a man to be willing to stand by such a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, appropriations to be covered into the Treasury, Bureau of Ordnance, $164,833,843.69.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the appropriations for last year for the United States Employment Service amounted to about six and one-half million dollars. There is an estimate this year for that service of $14,801,382. As I understand it, it is proposed to expend that sum in finding work for the unemployed in the United States.

I have here a clipping from the Washington Star of last night entitled "Unemployment area spreading." It reads:

UNEMPLOYMENT AREA SPREADING—GOVERNMENT SERVICE SHOWS CONDITIONS IN COUNTRY BECOMING SERIOUS—GETS REGULAR REPORTS.

Conditions of unemployment are becoming serious in all parts of the country, according to telegraphic reports received by the United States Employment Service.

"The area of unemployment is spreading all over the country," the report stated. "Up to December 21 only six States were reporting any considerable amount of surplus labor. During the current week 20 States reported a surplus. On December 23, 28 cities reported labor shortages, and this number has been cut down in the current week to 15."

On December 10, it is stated, 25 per cent of the cities reporting on shortages and surpluses declared a shortage of labor, 12½ per cent reported a surplus of labor, and 60 per cent reported that the supply about equaled the demand.

SURPLUSES STEADILY INCREASE.

"From that date on until the current week there has been a steady and consistent decrease in the shortages reported and in localities where the supply equaled the demand, while the surpluses have been steadily increasing," the report says.

For the current week the percentage of cities reporting shortages has dropped to 13, the percentage reporting surpluses has increased to 44, while the cities reporting that supply equals demand have dropped to 43 per cent.

On December 3 there was reported a total shortage of labor of 34,000 and surpluses totaling only 12,000. During the following eight weeks this shortage was reduced to 12,000, while the surpluses reported reached the figure of 210,000.

The report deals specifically with various sections of the country. In Connecticut the surplus over demand is increasing. New Britain alone reports a slight shortage. In Massachusetts there is a surplus of about 3,000 boot and shoe workers, 700 factory hands, and 11,000 machinists.

NEW YORK STATE POINTS.

The surplus of labor in Buffalo has jumped from 13,000 to 15,000, and the surplus in Albany has increased from 3,000 to 4,000.

New Jersey reports much unemployment, with Trenton alone having 4,000 out of work. Erie, Pa., reports a large surplus.

In Cleveland the 40,000 unemployed of last week have been augmented by 15,000 more. Toledo reports a surplus of 10,000 and Dayton 7,000 more. The conditions throughout Ohio grow steadily worse.

In Detroit last week's surplus has increased from 25,000 to 30,000. The expected lay off in the Rock Island Arsenal will affect both Illinois and Iowa. Indianapolis reports a surplus of 4,400 and Minneapolis, Minn., 4,000. Butte, Mont., has 10,000 unemployed, and in Arizona 125 mining companies are cutting down their forces, while a large amount of unemployment is reported already throughout the State.

Heavy surpluses are reported in Pacific Coast States, San Francisco alone having a surplus of 8,000. Portland has 7,000 unemployed. In Washington there is great unrest in the shipyards at Puget Sound.

Notwithstanding the very serious condition presented by the United States Employment Service under the Department of Labor, I had only to turn over the paper to find another article to the effect that the Secretary of Labor is in favor of importing laborers who would take the place of discharged soldiers and other citizens.

The article is as follows:

WOULD IMPORT ISLAND LABOR FOR UNITED STATES FARMS—COMMISSIONER OF IMMIGRATION CAMINETTI SAYS 100,000 AVAILABLE IN PORTO RICO ALONE.

The use of labor from the island possessions of the United States in helping to produce a record food crop this year has been suggested by Commissioner General Caminetti of the immigration bureau. Extension of the plan of Commissioner Caminetti has been authorized by Secretary Wilson of the Labor Department to include Mexican and Bahama negroes to help in farm work in Texas and Mexico.

"The insular possessions of the United States are thickly populated," says Commissioner Caminetti. "Many of the people there are following occupations under the head of common labor, and large numbers of them are out of employment.

"There must be at least 100,000 laborers available in Porto Rico alone, and there is a considerable number in the Virgin Islands. Undoubtedly a vast number could be depended on from the Philippines."

The commissioner points out that these people are not barred from continental United States by immigration laws, and that they could be landed on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Think of it! Fourteen million eight hundred and one thousand dollars demanded by Secretary Wilson to provide the machinery to find jobs for the unemployed of America, and at the same time he is asking that the bars be let down in order to bring in from Mexico and the Bahamas negroes from those places to help perform the farm labor. Why, any man who has sense enough to know anything about the employment of labor knows that these boys who are coming back from France and the boys who are to be discharged from our cantonments will go out upon the farms and become most efficient farm laborers. We want to give them employment, and the Secretary of Labor on one hand wants $14,000,000 to aid in that. Yet, on the other hand, he wants to take that employment away from them by bringing in negroes from Mexico and other places. I am inclined to think that the gentleman who wrote to me from my State a few days ago was correct. He is a banker, and he used this language:

To my mind, we now have a large Cabinet of small men, and what is advisable is a small Cabinet of large men.

Here is a Cabinet officer asking for $14,000,000 to find employment for the unemployed labor of America, and at the same time he wants to let down the bars to bring in foreigners to take away the jobs which Americans should have. I can readily see how the Secretary of Labor can expend $14,000,000 if he is to find a job for every American, and as soon as every American gets a job to displace him with a negro from Mexico. When did it become a part of our duty to find a job for every man in Mexico? Has it come to this, that it is the duty of the United States not only to find work for all its citizens but to find work in America for every man, no matter where he belongs? That seems to be the plan, and it is all wrong.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for half a minute to ask the gentleman a question. Does not the gentleman think the $14,000,000 for the Department of Labor will be spent in finding jobs until the money is gone?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; every dollar we appropriate will be spent in finding jobs. I quite agree with the gentleman, for the money we appropriate will be spent in holding fat jobs.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. GOOD. That is one of the principal things for which the money is asked. But what I call attention to is the fact that this Department of Labor does not seem to be functioning at all. It does not seem to have a clear-cut program. On the one hand, it deplores the fact that there is unemployment in America. On the other hand, it wants to bring in more men—100,000 foreign laborers—to take the jobs of an equal number of our own citizens who are now profitably employed. If there is unemployment in the United States, and if we are in danger of being compelled to resort to public soup houses and bread lines, why add to our problem by the importation of foreign labor to take the place of American labor? So long as our condition is such that the Secretary of Labor can advocate the importation of foreign labor there is no grounds for an appropriation to find places for America's unemployed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. In connection with the statement about the unemployed I send to the Clerk's desk to have read a statement given out by one of the ablest public men in the United States. I think it is opportune to have this article read and given the greatest possible publicity in the interest of the American people.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the gentleman verified this article to know whether it is true or not?

Mr. AUSTIN. There is so much good common sense and patriotism in it that I think it will be beneficial to all the Members of Congres.

Mr. FOSTER. There are so many newspaper statements printed that are untrue, does the gentleman know whether there is any truth in this article?

Mr. AUSTIN. I take pleasure in vouching for the truthfulness of the article and the high standing of the author, who is one of America's truly great men.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read as requested by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

JOB PROBLEM IS NOT SERIOUS, ASSERTS GARY—BUSINESS WILL BOOM ITSELF IF PESSIMISTS KEEP SILENCE, HE SAYS—OUTLOOK IS PROMISING.

NEW YORK, January 27.

Building of roadways in the South, reconstruction of railroads throughout the country, and all other public improvements contemplated by the Government should be begun at once in the opinion of Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation.

Judge Gary yesterday deprecated any suggestion that the country is facing a serious unemployment problem. On the other hand, the country is on such a prosperous basis that it does not need any "booming," he said.

"Why should there be any talk about unemployment?" said Judge Gary. "The country never was more in need of its workers than it is now, and it will use all the workers it can get. I don't think there is going to be any permanent or menacing unemployment problem.

"Our country never has been so prosperous as it is now. We have resources of $15,000,000,000 annually coming out of the ground—more than we ever had before; we have more than $16,000,000,000 cash in our banks; we are a creditor nation to the extent of $15,000,000,000 or more, and our per capita wealth has jumped up to $56, as compared to $35 before the war. We are in an era of prosperity hitherto undreamed of.

"What we need is simply to get to work and not talk about unemployment. Psychology has a good deal to do with it. Pessimistic talk will do more to bring about unemployment than it will do to prevent it.

"But there isn't going to be any. Our men who have been fighting abroad will be taken back into industry just about as fast as they return. Of course, there may be a little talk here and there about a few not being able to find employment, but this will not be serious."

"Do you think the business men of the country at large should begin doing business on a large scale, so as to tide over any period of depression, as suggested by Secretary of Labor Wilson?" Judge Gary was asked.

"We don't need any booming," he replied. "Business will take care of itself. This time of the year is always cleaning-up time. It is not necessary for industry to do more than the demand requires. Business is going to boom itself without any help from anybody. There is no doubt about that.

"I do believe that all the public improvements that have to be done should be done now. Men should be at work all this winter on the roads that are to be built in the Southern States. The Government should begin the great reconstruction work necessary on the railroads of the country, and wherever there is public work to be done it should be done without delay.

"As for the steel industry, we are not thinking of any depression. We had a great many men in the war, and we are taking them back as fast as they return."

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, Charleston, S. C.: For storage facilities, $17,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "storage facilities" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "New superstructure for pier No. 314."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, that is to correct a mistake in designation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station, Great Lakes, Ill.: For additional land, $400,000.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, this provision, on page 29 of the bill, for returning this sum of $400,000 to the Treasury from the Great Lakes Training Camp is ample demonstration that they will not need all the young men they are holding there, and, it seems to me, with this provision in the bill they ought to discharge the boys and send them home if they are not going to use the money. If they did not need it, they might spend some of it in employing people in Chicago who are out of work to shovel the coal. I read the other day in the Journal-World of Lawrence, Kans., that—I am not sure whether it was the Great Lakes people or not—a young officer said to a boy who sought dismissal that if he did not quit procuring assistance from these "damned civilians" he would get into trouble. The civilians of the class the officer mentions are taxpayers and parents of fighting men. Their boys must fight because the experts are needed at home. We have reached a point where it becomes a serious question, and I think it is time for these men to get a little real information as to where the beneficiaries of the people's taxes stand and to peg away on the soft pedal. During the Civil War the Government necessarily put on many restrictions. They put them in execution, and the people of America in 1861, 1862, 1863, and 1864 were halter broke, taught to stand hitched, and pull single and double. In this war for the first time in history the American people have been saddled and bridled, bitted and spurred, cruppered and surcingled, and kicked in the belly. [Laughter.] Wherever the boys are not absolutely needed, as in this Great Lakes Training Station, the American people want their boys sent home. Pharaoh received mighty patient handling when he was notified five times to "Let my people go." He did not have sense enough to take a hint, and his fate should be lesson enough for any man who is fed and clothed and housed by the fathers of these soldiers of the Republic. If these gentlemen at the Great Lakes want to know what the American people think of such methods and what will happen to them if they keep on, let them look over the November elections and they will get the information that may be useful to them. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that we go back to page 9 where an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], to which a point of order was made by myself, and, at the instance of the Chair, went over.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order on the amendment went over until to-day at the request of the Chairman. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, end of line 3, strike out period, insert colon, and add the following:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein shall be used unless all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions appropriated for herein if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I say a word in connection with the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Looking at the RECORD this morning I noted that a point of order had been raised as to whether the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] was a limitation, or was subject to a point of order. It further appeared that the gentleman from Missouri, Judge ALEXANDER, had made a ruling a day or two since which was regarded as supporting the contention that this amendment was a limitation, and therefore not subject to a point of order.

I wish to suggest in this connection that possibly the gentleman from Missouri failed to draw the distinction between the effect of the words "until," and "unless," as they are found in the amendments which have been made the subject of rulings. In the very precedent relied on by Chairman ALEXANDER to support his ruling, the word "until" is found, whereas the amendment on which he ruled, uses the word "unless."

The word "unless," is also found in the pending amendment. I submit that there is a very material difference between the two words when the Chair comes to determine whether an amendment is, or is not, a limitation. All limitations are intended to accomplish the result intended by indirection. Hence a good deal of refining may be found in some of the precedents. It is competent to say that no part of an appropriation may be used for the construction of a sea-level canal. That is a limitation, but it is not competent to say in an amendment to an appropriation bill that this money provided shall be used to construct a canal with locks. Yet the very design of the first amendment is to secure by indirection the construction of a canal with locks. It is often said that the House can do what it pleases with respect to appropriating, or not appropriating. True. Further it can always say how an appropriation may not be used. But it is not equally true that the House can say affirmatively how the appropriation may be used. The House in an appropriation bill can not announce in direct terms to a bureau head, that the money appropriated, shall be used specifically to employ red-headed clerks, but it can secure this result by indirection.

The very moment that it is proposed to accomplish some specific end by direct compulsion, upon some official, or department at that very moment the amendment ceases to be a limitation. The House can say to a department, this money shall not be expended until certain conditions exist, or that the fund shall not be expended in the test of a certain machine (4 Hinds, p. 620). These would be limitations. But we can not say to a department, you shall not expend this money unless you affirmatively take a certain line of indicated action. That would be dealing with the situation, directly, and not indirectly. The very essence of a limitation is indirection. Take the famous precedent with respect to canteens. In that case an amendment was offered to the effect that no part of the appropriation should be apportioned to any national home for disabled volunteers, that contained a canteen where intoxicating liquors were sold. The amendment did not undertake to say to the trustees of these soldiers' homes, that they should abolish the canteens before they secured the benefit of the appropriation. The amendment did not require the trustees to do anything; it merely contented itself with saying that in those homes in which canteens were found the appropriation should not be expended.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

My DYER. I am perfectly willing to substitute that word. There is nothing in this that would prevent it. I have no special reason for using the word. I will make that request.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am dealing with the amendment in its present form. Of course if the gentleman offers it in a different form, it may be in order. I take it for granted that we would be all agreed that if the canteen amendment had been so phrased that it directed the trustees to remove the canteens as a condition precedent to securing the benefit of the appropriation, a point of order to the same would have been sustained. The result desired was secured by indirection. A matter of phrasing, you say. Yes. But all limitations must be accurately phrased so as to accomplish indirectly, what they may not accomplish directly. Even as it was, there was a very vehement contention over the amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] insisted that the amendment "was positive legislation, although in the form of a limitation." He said further: "It is true that Congress can refuse to appropriate, but it is also true that Congress can not against a point of order, by a limitation change the organic law. Here is a provision that though Congress has created these homes, a proposition through the form a limitation may take away the control of the board of managers, and by affirmative legislation in the guise of a limitation change the statute. The Chair might well rule, it seems to me, that while limitations are favored, a limitation in this guise changing the law, is positive affirmative legislation, as it would undoubtedly be construed by the comptroller, and therefore subject to a point of order."

The Chair overruled the point of order, and held that the amendment was a pure limitation, as it undoubtedly was—but if that amendment in anywise resembled legislation, by how much the more is the amendment now pending, obnoxious to this objection.

I do not say of course that an amendment can not be framed to this paragraph which would be a limitation, but I am dealing entirely with the amendment in its present form. I submit to the Chair that this amendment is certainly not an indirect way of securing a result. It does not limit the appropriation to be used only in a bureau, or department where certain conditions exist. It proposes in substance to compel those conditions, to bring them to pass directly. In substance it says to the authorities who would otherwise expend this money, that they shall not secure the same, unless they reinstate every soldier who has been honorably discharged from the Army, and who prior to that time had a position in that particular service. It matters not what may have been the record of the soldier since he was discharged, however unworthy he may have proved to be, the authorities without any exercise of discretion whatever must reinstate him, and all others once holding positions in that service, before the appropriation becomes available for any form of general or specific expenditure. Is not this amendment in substance a requirement, direct, positive, and emphatic, that the authorities shall restore these soldiers, before the fund becomes available for any purposes? Does this specific, and positive requirement, smack in anywise of indirection? If the amendment requires direct, affirmative action, then it is not a limitation, and the point of order is good. It is not a question of giving the discharged soldiers this preferred status. We are all agreed to do this. The question is whether it can be done by this amendment, which is in plain violation of the rules, and of the precedents. There are many rulings in this connection to which I can direct the attention of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption by the Chair?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in full sympathy with the views expressed by the gentleman from Virginia, but the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is entitled to have uniformity of ruling, and, after all, our rules in the House and in committee are based largely on the precedents made. This identical amendment was offered by some one to the legislative bill. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] was in the chair at the time, and after an exhaustive debate he held the amendment in order. The Chair feels inclined to follow that precedent in order that there may be uniformity of ruling and in order that we may not have a chaotic condition. For instance, in the case referred to the amendment, having been held in order, it was adopted to a former bill. In this instance, if it should be ruled out of order and for that reason not adopted, it would bring about a very anomalous condition. There seems to be a very serious difference of opinion among the best parliamentarians of the House as to the point of order—that is, as to whether or not the amendment is in order—and so far as the present occupant of the chair is concerned he concurs with the opinion of the gentleman from Virginia, but other parliamentarians of equal knowledge and probably superior logic have held otherwise. It seems to me in a case like this the committee itself ought in some way to settle what the future policy of the committee shall be. The Chair merely makes that suggestion for the benefit of a solution of the problem.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. May I say to the Chair in this connection, that while it is true that if the Chair should rule in accordance with his indicated attitude, he would overrule a prior occupant of the chair. Yet on the other hand I call the attention of the Chair to the further fact that the prior occupant of the chair appears to have overruled an occupant of the chair who preceded him.

The CHAIRMAN. But not with the identical amendment. The Chair calls the gentleman's attention to that fact. This is identical, word for word, with the amendment that was offered to a prior bill, and after a lengthy discussion in Committee of the Whole the Chair held the amendment to be in order. If on each one of these bills a different ruling should be made, we would be in a very bad condition. For instance, suppose the present occupant of the chair should sustain the point of order, and then suppose later in the consideration of the sundry civil bill, when a similar amendment was offered, the then occupant of the chair should overrule the point of order.

Now, we would have a condition in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union where the membership would be entirely at sea as to what was likely to be the ruling there, but it does seem to the Chair the present practice is where a ruling has been made on an identical amendment like this, if there is any doubt about it, it is the duty of the Chair to follow the precedents that have been set. In this particular case the Chair on this question would be inclined to do this with the suggestion that he would be very glad if the committee in its wisdom should see fit to overrule the Chair, because that would be but his judgment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the Chair I will conclude what I have to say in this connection. I have no personal interest in this question. It has not arisen in connection with any bill that I have had in charge, or in which I have other than a general interest. I am only concerned in maintaining a consistent body of precedents in this connection. It is more important for the precedents of the House to be established on a solid foundation of reason, than for the Chair to follow a single precedent which in the judgment of the Chair, as stated is totally wrong. Amendments offered as limitations frequently present questions of the very greatest difficulty to the Chair. Some of these amendments are so plainly limitations that they leave no room for controversy. Other amendments are so plainly not limitations, that the Chair is not in doubt a moment as to their proper determination. Then there are other amendments that approach the dividing line the twilight zone, so closely, that it is very difficult for the Chair to determine the head under which they fall. But I submit that the appropriate controlling principle to be followed by the Chair in passing on amendments of this character, should be that the artificial creation, known as a limitation, should not be so highly regarded, or carefully cultivated by favoring interpretation, as practically to destroy the rule of the House against legislation on an appropriation bill. This may easily be done, if we lose sight of the fundamental principle relating to limitations, which is that they seek to accomplish some desired end by indirection. It is not in order to legislate as to the qualifications of the recipient of an appropriation, but it is in order to specify that no part of an appropriation shall go to recipients lacking certain qualifications. (IV Hinds, 3942-3952.) A refined distinction, you say, admittedly, but after all a very real distinction. The rule against legislation on an appropriation bill is one so sound in principle, that it is likely to be followed in this House, whatever its political complexion.

We are not dealing with the merits of this amendment, but engaged in determining whether it is in order at this time under our rules. It is perfectly competent for the House to repeal the rule against legislation on an appropriation bill, but so long as the rule stands, it should be enforced.

The controlling feature of a limitation is that by indirection it brings to bear some compulsion, upon officials charged with the expenditure of public moneys. But indirection is not a principle to be admired either in an individual, or a legislative body. Hence indirection should neither be favored, nor cultivated. If an amendment is clearly a limitation, the Chair should readily hold it in order. But if the question is one of difficulty, it should bear in mind that every refining distinction which puts an amendment over the dividing line, and on the limitation side, is in further aid of indirection, and in derogation of the fundamental principle which prefers direction, to indirection. It seems to me that having these principles and the precedents in mind, this amendment is plainly not a limitation. The distinction afforded in IV Hinds, sections 3957-3966, is an obvious one, namely that when you are seeking to secure some result in the way of action, by an amendment to an appropriation bill, it must be done not affirmatively, not by direct compulsion, but by a simple negative on the use of the appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but a moment. It does not seem to me because a ruling has been made which is wrong, assuming it is wrong, that it must be followed because it has been made. We will never have any progress on earth on that basis. I am not a believer in chaos in either substantive or parliamentary law. I recognize the weight of precedents, and it is because I recognize the weight of precedents that I do not want what, to my mind, is clearly and distinctly and beyond dispute a bad ruling to become crystallized by being again followed within a short period of time.

It is perfectly patent upon the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] that it requires affirmative action and is stated in an affirmative way on the part of the department in regard to the reemployment of former men of the Army before these funds can be expended. Now, the question of the desirability of accomplishing that is one thing, and the question of parliamentary law is quite another. And the way to accomplish that, anyhow, is, I think, other than by the proposal of the gentleman, even if it were in order. But I am so clearly convinced it is not in order that I think the Chair ought to determine the matter according to his own judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, as indicated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], is thoroughly of the opinion that this is an encroachment on the legislative prerogative of the House, and that the better part is to construe the rules of the House, or rules governing the Committee of the Whole, so as to prevent, so far as possible, legislation on appropriation bills, or else the other committees of the House will finally be absorbed by the various appropriation committees of the House. But the Chair is confronted with this situation, suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, that the committee ought to possibly in some way arrive at this conclusion. The Chair will be glad to make a ruling either way if by so doing he could get the expression of the committee. His own individual opinion is, however, that this is not in order, and when he makes that ruling he is in direct conflict with the ruling made a few days ago on an amendment of this kind, and, unless a special ruling comes from the House itself, there will be a difference of opinion.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Chair is not responsible for another man's ruling. He is responsible for his own judgment. If the Chair feels that this is out of order he ought so to rule. The precedents are overwhelmingly in favor of the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Well they are not.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman makes that assertion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman makes one assertion and I make another. They are probably of equal value to ourselves. But the gentleman is seeking on his statement to overrule a decision which nobody disputes by his mere statement that the precedents are the other way. And I say they are not the other way. The precedents sustain the position taken by Chairman ALEXANDER the other day. That is the latest ruling.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman from Illinois raises the proposition that the precedents are the other way, I would like to submit about 25 precedents to the Chair.

Mr. MANN. And I will undertake to submit on any question of limitation a hundred precedents that tend either way and do not cover the case.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Very well. The precedents are here. If you have something to cover the case, you can submit it. I will cover my case by submitting others.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair undertook to look up the precedents as best he could, but there is a later precedent that can be found on an identical amendment, which was made not over 10 days ago. There was no appeal made. It is the latest opinion expressed on the subject. And the Chair is going to overrule the point of order. The Chair would be willing to see it appealed from in order to ascertain the opinion of the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think that this appeal is debatable under the five-minute rule. I do not know that I wish to take up much time in this connection, but I do desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to some precedents.

In Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, page 676, an amendment was offered:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended in the further maintenance of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.

That would seem to be a clear limitation, yet the Chairman who was presiding at that time, sustained the point of order, and held that the amendment was not a limitation.

Let me call the attention of the committee to Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, page 675, section 3991:

That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any employee who, in the opinion of the chief of the division of which he is employed, is incompetent and inefficient for the work in which he is engaged.

This amendment is apparently a limitation, but it was not so regarded by the Chair. I read from IV Hinds, page 679, in which an amendment provided that no part of the appropriation should be paid until the passing of a title. That language using the word "until," was held to be a limitation.

The limitation permitted on a general appropriation bill, must be a negative prohibition on the use of the money, not an affirmative direction to an executive officer, IV Hinds, section 3975. Mr. WEBB of North Carolina offered an amendment that certain money should not be expended, until a test was made to ascertain the hardness of certain armor plate. The Chair held that this amendment implied that the Secretary must do certain things to get the money, IV Hinds, section 3975. This precedent is precisely in point. Mr. MACON of Arkansas offered an amendment that no part of a certain appropriation should be used to pay transportation charges on American vessels where the transportation charges were in excess by as much as 20 per cent of similar transportation charges on foreign vessels, IV Hinds, section 3982. Held out of order. Mr. OLMSTED of Pennsylvania proposed an amendment that no part of a certain appropriation shall be paid the Public Printer unless he conformed the spelling in his documents to the rules of orthography in accepted dictionaries, IV Hinds, section 3985. Held not to be a limitation. Mr. Kerr offered an amendment that no part of an appropriation should be paid any employee who in the opinion of the chief of his division was incompetent, IV Hinds, section 3991. Held out of order. Mr. Hull offered this amendment that no part of an appropriation should be expended in further maintenance of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, IV Hinds, section 3993. Held out of order. A proposition that no part of an appropriation should be paid until the passing of a title was held to be a limitation, IV Hinds, section 3999. Mr. CLARK of Missouri offered an amendment that no part of an appropriation for stamped envelopes should be expended in printing return cards on them, IV Hinds, section 4006. Held out of order.

An amendment that no proposals to build vessels should be considered unless the bidder then had an adequate plant, was held out of order, IV Hinds, section 4007. An amendment limiting the purchase of seeds to rare and uncommon seeds was held out of order, IV Hinds, section 4014. An amendment using the word "until," was held to be a limitation in IV Hinds, section 3940. There are many other precedents to the like effect as those cited.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as it seems to me to be the manifest purpose of the other side of the House to kill time, I ask to be recognized for an hour.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The Chair would hold that inasmuch as the committee is considering bills under the five-minute rule, the five-minute rule applies to appeals. The Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I think the Chair's ruling at this time is correct. I am only going to take five minutes. The present distinguished occupant of the Chair asked me a few days ago, when this matter came up, whether in my judgment the man who took the floor on an appeal was entitled to an hour or to five minutes. I said to him, "Under the old rulings of the House in practice when I came here a man who took the floor on an appeal in committee was entitled to an hour's time, but under the recent ruling he is only entitled to five minutes." I could go through the precedents and find plenty of precedents giving me an hour's time, as the gentleman from Virginia can go through the precedents and find plenty of precedents on either side of a question of limitation on an appropriation bill. But the recent ruling just made on this matter by the present distinguished occupant of the Chair is right now, and the recent ruling made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] was right on this limitation. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] was right in following him.

We can provide on an appropriation a limitation that it can only be expended by redheaded girls. That is a matter of judgment as to whether we can do it or not. We can not under the form of a limitation require an executive to do something he is not previously authorized to do, but if he is authorized to do it we can say he can not spend the money unless he does it.

All these various rulings in the past have, as a usual thing, turned upon the effort of Congress to give to an executive officer additional authority over what he then had and require him to do something which he was not entitled to do before. Of course, if we put in the form of a limitation a requirement that an executive official spending the money shall do it in a certain way, he has to do it. That is his new authority. But we can provide such limitation as we please, that they shall not spend it otherwise.

Here is a case; here is an appropriation of a small amount of money for temporary employees of the Government, and the question is whether by limitation we can say to the department, "You must employ, in the expenditure of that money, old soldiers and sailors who have been discharged."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I regret I have not the time. We have a right to say that. There is no other way to reach it. We can not require by positive enactment that they shall do it, but we can put it in the form of a limitation that the money shall not be expended unless they give employment to those people. That is the only way we can really do it. That is a limitation. They can do it or not do it, as they please, now under the law. They have the power to do it or to refuse to do it. But if we say that they must give priority to the boys coming home in this employment, if they spend the money they will have to give them priority. That is the only way, and it is a limitation pure and simple. We ought to sustain the Chair in holding that it is a limitation. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this amendment is offered at the end of the paragraph which provides $4,000,000 for temporary employees of the War Department. The law now provides that men who are in the civil service and who resign can be reinstated. I think the provision of the law is that this may be done within one year. The President by executive order, I think, has extended that to five years, so far as soldiers, sailors, and marines are concerned. Now, all this amendment does is to provide not that they may be reinstated, but that they must be. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, it is only a direction to the executive department. Now, gentlemen, that is a limitation, and the purpose of it, of course, is to give these men an opportunity to get their positions back.

The law is already on the statute books covering that in effect. You and I and the majority of the Members of this House voted to take these men out of their positions in the Government establishments under the selective-draft law. We urged it as a matter of national defense and a necessity to preserve the honor of our Nation. These men have been taken out of their positions. They have gone into this war, and some of them come back and find that others have been put in their places, and when they go and ask to have their positions back as the law says they may be reinstated they find others holding their positions, and the Civil Service Commission says, "We can not give you any relief. We can not put you back and we can not compel the executive departments to put you back."

Gentlemen, there is a good deal to this proposition beside a mere parliamentary situation. There is a good deal to this beside a mere point of order as to what is the thing to be done; and I submit in all fairness and in all justice that not only is the decision of the Chair justified by law but it is justified by what is right as to our duty as a Congress to the men whom we took out of the departments and sent to war. It will be, I hope, an example that will be followed by the industries. We owe them a duty. The distinguished chairman of the Committee of the Whole a few day ago [Mr. ALEXANDER] in deciding this question decided it also according to the law, and it ought not to be necessary now to rise in our places and make technical objections to a question upon which you can find precedents upon both sides and all phases. We ought to submit this as a matter of right and justice. It is not that we shall create new positions for men who have been in the war. I am ready and willing, and I think Congress ought to be ready and willing, to go to the extent of enacting a law to provide that every honorably discharged soldier, sailor, and marine of our wars shall receive preference in employment under the Government. [Applause.] But that is not this question. This is only the carrying out in substance of the law as it is written.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the judgment of the Chair overruling the point of order to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in view of what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] has said, I desire simply to say this: It is known to every man who has had the responsibility of handling bills upon the floor that it is the peculiar duty of the chairman of the committee to make a point of order, irrespective of his judgment as to the merits of the proposal, if, in his judgment, it is subject to a point of order. It is very easy and it is very usual, particularly touching a popular matter, for men to rail at parliamentary points of order and the rules of the House; yet the experience of all legislative bodies from the beginning has shown that nothing is so conducive to wise legislation as a strict observance of the rules that are established by a legislative body. Without that observance you have more or less chaos. Therefore in considering whether a thing is in order or not men must consider something beyond the merits of the proposal itself. They must consider that the letting down of the rules that wisely prevent legislation upon appropriation bills, even for a good cause, will lead to results that frequently are far-reaching and very detrimental. Every older Member of this House who has had charge of bills has repeatedly made points of order irrespective of his personal predelictions touching any particular proposal. It seems to me, therefore, that it is hardly becoming in the gentleman to criticize anyone in charge of the bill for performing a duty that is recognized as necessary by every Member familiar with parliamentary procedure and what it stands for and means.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], to which a point of order was reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Page 9, after line 9, insert:
"The Secretary of War is directed to consider, ascertain, and recommend to Congress the amounts which in his judgment are due on claims of persons, not employees of the United States, for compensation for disability or death resulting from personal injury sustained from the recent explosions and fire at the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Co. at Morgan, N. J.: Provided, That claims shall not be recommended hereunder for persons or in amounts which would not be allowable under the United States employees' compensation act if the individual were an employee of the United States."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph was passed over in order that I might have a chance to examine the workmen's compensation act. I have examined it and prepared an amendment to the amendment and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin suggests a proviso to the proposal which is entirely agreeable to me and I offer it as an amendment to the amendment which I have offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment of Mr. Sherley:
"Provided further, That the report to be made hereunder shall contain a full statement of the facts in connection with the inquiry or death of any person for whom payments may be recommended."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, report the bill with sundry amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendations that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FOURTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 11984, and I ask unanimous consent that the House reject the report and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the conference report be disagreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee has asked unanimous consent that the House disagree to the conference report, and I think he coupled with it the request that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the request.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman. There were several gentlemen in the House who wished to be heard or make some motion on Senate amendment No. 12.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Would it be in order to disagree to the conference report and instruct the conferees? Would a motion to that effect be in order?

Mr. MANN. It is in order to move to recommit the conference report or reject the conference report, and then it is in order to agree to the Senate amendments or to amend them or ask for a further conference, and it is in order to instruct the conferees.

Mr. GARNER. I asked the question because there has been a ruling by the Speaker both ways on the motion to recommit, and it is liable to come up on a very important bill, the revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is wrong.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is aware that it is in order to recommit the conference report which the Senate has not acted upon. It is not in order to move to recommit a conference report that has been disposed of by the Senate. Here is the Senate amendment, and the language of the bill was that "whenever possible women and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors shall be employed in the positions herein provided for."

The Senate amendment was to strike out that language and insert:

That after the passage of this act preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and widows of such, in making appointments to clerical and other positions in the executive departments and in independent governmental establishments.

The conferees agreed upon an amendment providing that "wherever possible, women and honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines shall be employed in the positions herein provided for."

Several gentlemen of the House desire either to be heard or to have a vote or to make a motion in reference to this matter. I am told that gentlemen who have been taking an active interest in the Senate amendment have practically reached an agreement with the members of the committee who will be the conferees, and that if the bill goes back to conference that agreement will be incorporated in the conference report and will be satisfactory to the friends of the soldiers, sailors, and marines. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly satisfied with the statement which has been made to me upon that subject; otherwise, of course, there would be a vote in the House. I have not conferred with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] about it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement in regard to this matter, as to why it is that I have made the request I have. When the bill was sent to conference in the first instance, it was done by unanimous consent. I was asked at that time if I would be willing to grant a separate vote upon this Senate amendment No. 12. I said that I would be willing to do that. It was the understanding of the House, I suppose, that we were to have a separate vote upon that. When the conferees considered the matter we prepared a substitute embodying some of the features of that amendment, which we thought would be satisfactory to those who wanted a separate vote. However, it was not satisfactory. Then we also thought that a motion could be made by one of those gentlemen to recommit this bill with instructions on this one amendment, and that that would settle the question and give them an opportunity to vote upon the question that they understood they were to vote upon. That brings it up to the present point, when there is some confusion about it. I make the request that we disagree to the report and send it back to conference, and ask for a further conference.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, we accomplish nothing by that, unless——

Mr. HOUSTON. If there is a proposition involved that any Member of the House wants incorporated it seems to me that he can have a vote on that proposition now before we go to conference.

Mr. MANN. Of course, now is the time when you can have a vote. If the conference report is rejected, which, in fairness to the House, in view of the statement made by the gentleman when the matter was sent to conference, he would agree to——

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If the conference report is rejected, any Member of the House can get a separate vote upon any Senate amendment. Any Member of the House can have a separate vote on Senate amendment No. 12. He can move to concur with an amendment in the Senate amendment and have a vote on that. To merely send it back to conference with no further information given to the Members of the House would not advance the matter any, because it is assumed under such circumstances that the conferees will bring the conference report back to the House again identically as they have heretofore, and no separate vote can be taken when the conference report is made.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. I have been in conference with the gentlemen in connection with this matter, and I can state to my friend from Illinois that the object of this motion is to get the matter back to conference, that the majority of the House confcrees and the Senate conferees have agreed upon a provision that is satisfactory to the friends of the soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I made the same statement a while ago, that I understood that it had been settled satisfactorily, and I have been taking a little time in the House since then trying to get that statement into the RECORD from somebody else, because my information was purely hearsay.

Mr. CRISP. That is why I am making the statement. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] is opposed to this proposition, and that the House conferees will be the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON], the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NICHOLS], and I understand from my friend, Mr. VAN DYKE, who is the author of the compromise amendment and very much interested in it, that the gentleman from Louisiana and the gentleman from Michigan have agreed with the Senate conferees that if the bill is sent back in conference they will agree to this proposition that the friends of the soldiers have agreed upon.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Michigan has made the same statement to me—not that they have agreed with the Senate conferees but that a majority of the House conferees had agreed—and, as far as I am concerned with that statement, I have no desire further to put the House conferees on record in the RECORD.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, and also by the gentleman from Georgia, that some matter had been agreed to that is satisfactory to the friends of the soldiers, sailors, and marines I assume to mean is satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. MANN. Well it is certainly satisfactory to the men who are special friends——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the gentleman will permit, that being true, it occurs to me it ought not to go into the RECORD that it is satisfactory to the friends of the soldiers, sailors, and marines, and it is unsatisfactory to some Members here of the House.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, of course, the gentleman from Tennessee is a friend of the soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. There is no question about that, but the RECORD ought to show that or it ought not to show the contrary.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to confirm the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia that an agreement has been reached as far as possible for the conferees to reach it and that it is entirely satisfactory as far as we can ascertain.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield? Is it the thought of the conferees, that if they do not get substantially the Senate amendment to bring it back and let us have another vote upon it?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement in reference to the matter of anyone being a friend of the soldiers and sailors. As that matter has been brought out by remarks I want to state this, I am as much a friend to the soldiers, sailors, and marines as any man who stands on the American continent. The only question in this matter was to what extent soldiers, sailors, and marines who have been honorably discharged from the Army should be made eligible to appointment. One amendment is favored by a portion of the Members that absolute preference should be given to those who are honorably discharged. I insisted on the provision that provided that the director should select these men if they were otherwise qualified and competent to discharge the duties. Now, I want the soldiers and sailors to have preference in everything, but the real soldier, the good sailor, the real patriotic man ought not to want to get an opportunity to get a Government position in which he can not render good service. There might be some man who had a uniform and who might want an easy job, who might have had an easy job lately in some clerical position, and he might be swift to get one of these positions, and I did not want to have those men put upon the same footing as the men who fought at Chateau-Thierry and in the Argonne Forest, whether capable or fitted for the work or not. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield? I ask that the Clerk may read just what, substantially, they have agreed upon so that we may know as a matter of information.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am perfectly willing. I preferred the other amendment, as reported by the conference committee; other gentlemen preferred that, and that seems the end of it.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VAN DYKE] has the substance of it.

Mr. VAN DYKE. This is the amendment.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee what is in the amendment in regard to women?

Mr. VAN DYKE. The amendment will be read, and the lady from Montana can understand exactly what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter in making appointments to the classified and other positions in the executive departments and in independent governmental establishments preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and widows of such if they are qualified to hold such positions.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I want to make this one observation: That amendment, of course, can not be otherwise than satisfactory to the membership of this House. Now, that provision, provided they are qualified, is a mere statement of what the law now is. No man can be employed, no woman can be employed in the Government service unless they are qualified for the position that they seek; and putting that in there, in my judgment, is unnecessary. It is now the language of the law, and I can not see anything that can be accomplished by it. It is mere surplusage.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my request that the House further insist on its disagreement and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House insist on its disagreement and ask for a conference.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the House amendment included women and the Senate amendment included women, and I think it is not fair to include merely the widows of soldiers, inasmuch as there are many sisters and mothers of soldiers who would like this work. It seems to me that leaving out women, instead of including them, as both the House and Senate did——

Mr. HOUSTON. I will state to the lady from Montana that women were not included in the Senate amendment. This is the Senate amendment exactly, so far as reference is made to women.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I believe the lady from Montana refers to the amendment in the conference report that was submitted to the House and is now under consideration. The report did agree to include women, even though not related to soldiers, and to be given preferential consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Miss RANKIN. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report and move to reject it; and on that I ask the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Several things would have to be done first. The gentleman would have to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the conference report.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call up the report, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. It has been called up.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. MANN. It has been reported.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MANN. It has not been read. He would have to dispense with the reading of it. It was only reported by title.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the conference report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was rejected.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to disagree to all the amendments en bloc except No. 12, and to further insist upon the disagreement on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to disagree to all the Senate amendments en bloc except No. 12, and to insist on the disagreement to No. 12.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN DYKE. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment No. 12 with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to concur in the Senate amendment No. 12 with an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. VAN DYKE moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 12, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"That hereafter in making appointments to clerical and other positions in the executive departments and in independent governmental establishments preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and widows of such, if they are qualified to hold such positions."

Mr. VAN DYKE. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to amend this?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VAN DYKE] has just moved the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Give the lady from Montana a chance to offer an amendment.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the motion for the previous question is pending.

The SPEAKER. That is just what the Chair stated a moment ago. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. DYER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 41.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the ayes are 46 and the noes are 41, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] demands tellers. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I think we can settle this quicker by a yea-and-nay vote, and I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on ordering the previous question. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 77, answered "present" 1, not voting 174, as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CANNON with Mr. SLAYDEN.

Mr. WALSH with Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. LUFKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], my colleague, was called away. If he were here he would have voted "aye."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask for a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. MANN. While that technically does not send the Senate amendment No. 12 to conference, I suppose the conferees will consider it.

The previous question was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HOUSTON, Mr. ASWELL, and Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DELAWARE RIVER.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Speaker lay before the House the bill S. 5354, to extend the time for completing the bridge across the Delaware River, a similar bill being on the House Calendar.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the completion of the bridge now in course of construction across the Delaware River, which the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, were authorized to construct, maintain, and operate by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River," approved the 24th day of August, 1912; and for which the time of completion thereof was extended until the 24th day of August, 1919, by an act approved the 27th day of December, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, extended for a period of three years from the 24th day of August, 1919: Provided, That in all other respects said bridge shall be completed and shall be maintained and operated in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

House bill 14508, a similar bill, on the House Calendar, was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Van Dyke amendment.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Ohio ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the Van Dyke amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request on the same date for memorial exercises on the late Senator OLLIE JAMES, of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that February 23 be set aside for holding memorial exercises on the late Senator HUGHES, of New Jersey, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] makes the same request touching the late Senator JAMES, of Kentucky. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] may be excused for the day on account of illness, and I wish to announce that if he had been here he would have voted "aye" on the previous question and also for the Van Dyke amendment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks made this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Pending that, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Whether he desires to have the House meet at an earlier hour to-morrow?

Mr. LEVER. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, how long does the gentleman expect this evening session to last?

Mr. LEVER. We have 1 hour and 53 minutes left for general debate, and I thought we would conclude that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not expect to proceed under the five-minute rule?

Mr. LEVER. No.

Mr. MANN. And there will be no other business come before the House?

Mr. LEVER. No other business that I know of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. LEVER was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield some of his time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, shall we destroy monopoly in land ownership and at the same time furnish farms for the soldiers, sailors, and marines?

For years we have been wantonly wasting our landed resources while our tenant system has been robbing the fertility of the soil. Land monopoly has been wrecking the small farmer and driving him into the city. While these processes have been going on the farmer has been left to shift for himself. He looks for an honest market in vain, as there is none. He finds the speculators in control of his markets, and through their agencies the products are followed from the farm to the consumers.

The Government is spending millions of dollars in an effort to stimulate production on the farms. Much of these vast appropriations is of doubtful value. What the farmer needs is protection from the combination of speculators that is exacting nearly 54 per cent of the cost to the consumer of farm products.

Years ago when competition existed the farmer dealt largely with the consumer, but now the transportation companies, the packing companies, the grain exchanges, and the gamblers in food products have erected toll gates all along the market routes from the farmer to the consumer and are exacting unheard-of profits. They do so without any fear of action on the part of the Department of Justice.

In order to break up monopoly in land ownership, to reduce tenantry and assist those soldiers, sailors, marines, and others who desired to become farm owners I introduced, on December 12, 1918, House joint resolution 366. As a basis for this resolution I cite certain facts showing the extent of land monopoly in the United States. I cite the facts that there is in the United States a constant increase in landlord ownership and a constant centralization of ownership of lands in monopolies controlling vast areas, as evidenced by the following: Fifty-four foreign corporations and individuals own an area of land in the United States exceeding the combined areas of the States of New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, and Delaware; 63 owners, individuals and corporations, in the United States have holdings of land exceeding the combined areas of the former German Empire, Denmark, Belgium, Holland, and Switzerland; the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. has 4,381,000 acres of land in California and Oregon; the Northern Pacific has 3,017,000 acres of timberland and millions of untimbered land; the Weyerhauser Timber Co. owns 1,945,000 acres of timberland; in Florida five holders have 4,600,000 acres of timberland and 187 largest timber holders have over 15,800,000 acres of timberland; the Government has granted to railroads and for internal improvements subsidies of 337,740,000 acres, equal to one-sixth of the total area of the United States; the Texas Land Grant Syndicate owned 3,000,000 acres in Texas; a British land company owns 300,000 acres in Kansas; Sir Edward Reed controls 1,000,000 acres in Florida; an English syndicate controls 2,000,000 acres in Mississippi; 100 men in Sacramento Valley, Cal., own 17,000,000 acres; four men in one county in California own 1,500,000 acres, while 433 own 5,968,556 acres.

In addition to the citations in the resolution the following can be added: There are 35,000,000 acres of land in the United States that are rented out by owners, each of whom owns more than 1,000 acres; 32 men own 45 per cent of the northern peninsula of Michigan; 16 families own more than 47,000,000 acres of land in the United States; two English syndicates own 1,300,000 acres in the State of Missouri. The report of the Federal Bureau of Corporations shows that 105,600,000 acres, one-twentieth of the whole land area of the United States, is owned by 1,694 persons.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to acquire title by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise to large holdings of lands suitable for agriculture and take title thereto in the name of the United States: Provided, That all purchases of such lands must be at a reasonable value. That the land so acquired shall be divided in units of such size as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, and he shall have authority to place thereon necessary buildings and other appropriate improvements. The units thus provided shall be sold by the Secretary of the Interior to bona fide settlers, preference being given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines. The sale price shall be sufficient to cover the full cost of the land, improvements, and administration. Five per cent of the sale price shall be paid in advance and the remainder shall be distributed over a period of 40 years commencing two years after the date of the initial payment. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $100,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution, and the money received for the land sold under the foregoing provisions shall be placed in a revolving fund and used as necessary in the further administration of this joint resolution. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be required to give full force and effect to this joint resolution.

Home ownership of land will become impossible if monopoly of land ownership is not in some way restricted in the near future. The policy of this Government ought not to be in favor of unrestricted alien ownership of our land. Neither should the Government allow foreign or domestic corporations or individuals to obtain a monopoly on millions of acres of our best land, to the detriment of those who are anxious and willing to make their homes on and develop these lands in small tracts.

In 1880, 25.6 per cent of the farms were operated by tenants, while at this time the percentage of tenant farmers has risen to about 40 per cent. It is a startling fact that prior to the war we were losing 100,000 of our people every year by emigration to Canada. They were American farmers, and their incentive was to secure land on which to make their homes. This emigration is likely to continue unless we recognize the necessity of providing these people an opportunity to become home owners in this country. We must take action to retain our people, reduce tenancy, and make it possible for those who desire to become home owners.

We need not go far to ascertain the reason for the decadence of agriculture in the United States. When the public domain was opened for settlement the farmers largely refused to continue being tenants. It was natural that they should prefer ownership to tenancy, and they became homesteaders. From every section of the country came these homesteaders, ready to endure droughts, hardships, and trials as pioneers. Nothing could dampen their tireless energies in their effort to obtain homes for themselves and families.

But now since the good land open for homestead is practically exhausted, tenancy has increased year by year until it presents a perilous situation in this country. It is a startling fact that is everywhere recognized that eastern farms are rapidly being abandoned. It is said that 800,000 acres of agricultural land in the State of Connecticut alone have been practically abandoned. New Hampshire has 2,000 idle farms, many of which can be purchased for less than the cost of the buildings. Idle farms in great numbers are found in every Eastern State.

It might be well to inquire why farming in the Eastern States has ceased to be profitable and why the farms are being abandoned. The real fault lies with our present marketing and distributing system. When those in control of the terminal markets destroyed the local markets of the farmers and brought the farmers of the East in competition with the farmers of the South and West the opportunity for the eastern farmer to make a living was destroyed and he was compelled to retire. This in addition to the fact that industries in the cities offered better opportunities for the small farmer to make a living caused him to move into great manufacturing centers. When eastern farmers were in a large measure eliminated then these combinations became actively engaged in securing absolute control of the distribution of food products.

The tenancy system also in a large measure was a factor in the abandonment of farms. There is no incentive for the tenant to improve the farms. The more he increases the fertility of the soil, and the more he increases the improvements of the premises, the more rent the landlord requires him to pay. For that reason the tenancy system permits improvements to decay and does not conserve the productiveness of the soil.

Home ownership for the farmers becomes impossible if corporations and individuals, both domestic and foreign, are permitted to monopolize all the valuable lands. Alien ownership should be prohibited. It is said that 89 per cent of the farmers in Denmark are home owners, while in Great Britain 87 per cent of the farms are tilled by tenants. In one country we have home owners and in the other landlords.

History is but repeating itself. Ancient Italy was a country of small farms during the prosperous days of the Roman Empire. The money lenders made loans at usurious rates of interest, foreclosed the mortgages, and ejected the farmers. The lands became vested in landlords who imported slave labor to carry on the farming industry. This constituted the beginning of the decay of the Roman Empire. The Latin writer, Pliny, says that the large estates were the ruin of Italy and of her Provinces.

Let us look a moment at England. A few years ago the average duke owned 142,264 acres, the average marquis owned 47,500 acres, the average earl owned 30,217 acres, and the average baron 14,152 acres. Absentee landlordism was responsible for the emigration which drained Ireland of one-half of her population. England has seen the error of landlordism. The process of eradicating landlordism in Ireland commenced in 1903, and now a commission is at work preparing plans for doing the same in England and Scotland.

Since 1903 the English Government has expended $550,000,000 in the purchase from landlords of an acreage of land equal to one-third the total area of Ireland, and subdivided it for sale, and thus distressed Ireland has been converted into a nation of home-owning farmers. This plan will not cost the Government anything, as the purchasers are repaying the amount appropriated by paying for this land in installments with interest.

New Zealand has appropriated over $65,000,000 for the purchase of large estates, which have been subdivided and sold to home owners. Since this policy was adopted the agricultural population has increased more rapidly than the population of the cities. This same policy has been adopted by Australian States, and has been a great factor in increased production. Before the war commenced the Russian Government equipped farms for 3,000,000 home settlers and purchased millions of dollars' worth of farm machinery. Let it be remembered that the lands so provided for the farmers for homes was of the better class of land, and not land that had to be reclaimed.

My resolution creates no commission, but authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to purchase large holdings of agricultural land, and to resell it in small tracts to those desiring to become home-owning farmers, giving preference to our soldiers, sailors, and marines, who constituted the best Army the world has ever known. This will cost the Government nothing, as the purchasers will repay any expenditures made by the Government by making small annual payments for 40 years. The purpose of the resolution is not only to provide homes for soldiers, sailors, and marines, but, in addition thereto, it seeks to destroy landlordism and land monopoly.

If the policy I am urging is adopted, it will make immediately available for our soldiers, sailors, and marines millions of acres of the best agricultural land in this country, and it will not be necessary to wait for the reclamation of swamp, stumpage, and arid land.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DILLON. I yield.

Mr. BAER. I presume the gentleman is receiving hundreds of letters from soldiers asking what the Congress is doing with reference to providing lands for them. Does not the gentleman believe there will be a great deal of criticism of the present administration unless it brings some bill on the floor before long to improve or reclaim lands?

Mr. DILLON. I have received numerous letters on that subject, but if we are to rely upon reclamation of stumpage lands, arid lands, or swamp lands, we will not be able to furnish immediate land for the soldiers.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman's plan is to use the right of eminent domain?

Mr. DILLON. Yes; go out and condemn the land and buy it from these big landowners.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman is aware that Canada is doing that now, and I think in Australia they are also using the right of eminent domain, and they have appropriated $200,000,000 for that purpose, the equivalent in this country, according to proportionate wealth, of $2,000,000,000.

Mr. DILLON. No matter what kind of land is furnished, it will be necessary to reorganize our marketing system by breaking up combinations at the terminals and the control by combinations of the routes which farm products must take to reach the consumer if we intend to keep the people on the farms. It is useless to talk about placing the people on the farms unless they can be kept there. The decay of agriculture in this country is year by year becoming a menace and something must be done to make farm life more attractive. No nation can long survive and escape decay that has not a policy that will insure home-owning farmers. We should now adopt a progressive policy that will insure the stability of our Government. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON], a member of the committee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill carries an appropriation of $31,691,562. The last-year bill carried $27,875,353. The increase in the present bill over that of last year is apparently $3,816,209. Under various food-stimulation acts, however, we added to the last-year bill until the department was authorized to spend $38,907,216. Not all this sum was spent, and we have transferred the unexpended balance of $2,102,880 to this bill. While the present bill carries $3,816,209 in excess of that of last year, it is in fact $7,215,654 less than was available to the department during the last fiscal year. The Agricultural Department is not a leech on the people, like the War and Navy Departments. We appropriate billions to support and carry on the activities of those departments, and no good comes from them. That which goes in does not come out again. We sustain them simply because the evil of war is still abroad in the world. Not so with agriculture. Whatever goes into the improvement and the increase of its activities returns multiplied manifold. The Department of Agriculture at this time collects and turns into the Treasury $8,802,836 receipts from the national forests, the sale of seed and of nitrate of soda to farmers, and various other minor items—more than one-fourth of the amount it costs the people.

The importance of this bill can not be overestimated. All the activities of the Government as they relate to the importance of agriculture and farm life are under the supervision of and receive the sympathetic advice, support, and assistance of the department. The activities of the department are directed by different bureaus, the most important of which are the Weather Bureau, Bureau of Animal Industry, the Bureau of Plant Industry, Forest Service Bureau, Bureau of Chemistry, Bureau of Crop Estimates, Bureau of Public Roads, and Bureau of Markets, though there are a number of other bureaus whose work is quite as important.

BUREAU OF FARM MANAGEMENT.

Here a systematic and scientific study is ceaselessly carried on to assist the farmer in improving the methods of farming and managing his farm. The example of those who have succeeded and their methods are carefully studied by experts, and the result is given to those less successful. The economic use of animals, the cost of production with respect to animals and crops, the profits, and so forth, are all carefully gathered and distributed to the farmers throughout the country.

WEATHER BUREAU.

The work of this bureau is so well known and has become so valuable to all classes of our citizenship that a recitation of its activities would be a work of supererogation.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

This is one of the most important bureaus in the entire Government, and the capable and conscientious work performed by it, silently and unknown to most of us, has been of more importance to our country in the life and health not alone of animals, but of the people as well, than could possibly be measured by the dollar mark.

Under its control is the quarantine inspection, the eradication of animal tuberculosis, tick eradication, dairy products—in value second only to corn. The corn crop last year was estimated to be of the value of three and one-half billion dollars; dairy products, two billion; wheat, one billion eight hundred million; cotton, one billion six hundred million. Such a large income to our people can not be too carefully safeguarded—animal husbandry, the stamping out of the foot-and-mouth disease, dourine eradication, hog cholera, and related work of every kind. It is safe to assert that 10 times the cost of the department is saved to the American people annually by the work of this bureau alone.

On this bureau there also devolves the important work of inspecting every pound of meat which is slaughtered by the packing houses. When we reflect that this runs into millions of animals, weighing hundreds of billions of pounds and mounting into billions in value, we catch some glimpse of the magnitude of the task. On the importance of this work and its careful and painstaking execution depends to a large extent the life and health of the people, not alone of our own country but the entire world. Millions of tons of these products have been consumed since the beginning of the war, and there has been no "embalmed beef" scandal, largely due to the faithfulness and efficiency of this service. The employees, 2,950 in number, scattered throughout the country, are among the most able, skilled, and competent in the Government service. They are engaged in a peculiarly hazardous task; their work takes them over floors shoe-mouth deep in blood. They go from rooms of extreme heat immediately into those icy cold. They handle meat affected with every character of disease—tuberculosis and other infectious germs. By exposure to such germs they are likely at any time to contract typhoid, tuberculosis, and other forms of disease. They are called to their work at all hours of the day and night, to which no other class of Government employees are subjected. They are working in the great packing houses of the country, and are liable at any time to be injured by machinery or to contract blood poisoning from accidental wounds.

Moreover, the larger part of them receive pay ranging from $1,080 to $1,600 per year. We increased the basic pay of 2,932 of these men by $120 a year, which, when added to $240 increase temporarily carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, will give them a living wage. Laborers everywhere are entitled to receive a living wage. It is a short-sighted Government that will not come to the relief of those who toil. I am glad to say that this administration has exerted its every effort to better the conditions of the working people by fixing eight hours as a basic day's work, establishing a living wage, prohibiting child labor, and providing sanitary conditions. We hear some complaint, it is true, emanating from uninformed sources relating to the wages paid working people. It is complained that at a wage ranging from 30 cents to 80 cents an hour, according to the skill of the laborer, from $2.40 to $6.40 can be earned in a day of eight hours. Ought not a laborer receive this amount? The man who receives the highest wage, $6.40, is evidently a skilled laborer. Deducting 52 days from the 365 days in a year, for Sundays, there is left 313, allowing no holidays and no Saturday afternoons off. The working man is also supposed to be well at all times and to be able at all times to secure a job. If it were possible for such a condition to exist, his income during the year would be $2,003.20. Out of this he must purchase clothing for his family, feed them, send the children to school, and furnish them with such amusement as is possible. I am quite sure that no responsible person would complain that this was too large an income. I am not so much interested in seeing a few pile up great fortunes as I am that all should be reasonably prosperous. We hear a great deal these days about bolshevism. It seems to be an odious word. I feel—I am sure as all others do—that where conditions to which it applies exist there must be something radically wrong, but in our condemnation we should draw a distinction between the few wily agitators who have inaugurated that situation and the great masses who are its ignorant and unwilling victims. Even these agitators are not solely responsible for the conditions that have made possible the situation. Those conditions have their roots back through the centuries, when those who understood the great forces in human life, that controlled the feelings in living people were in control. This feeling can be kindled by the presence of one or several of a series of factors: A common country, especially if it is a well-defined physical region, like an island, a river basin, or a mountain mass; a common language, especially if it has given birth to a literature; a common religion; and that much more impalpable force, a common tradition or sense of memories shared from the past.

In Russia, by the exercise of all the prejudice growing out of these conditions, autocracy kept itself in the saddle and ruthlessly rode down the people for many centuries. The Government thus carried on became to those people a synonym of oppression, corruption, and plunder. They saw their earnings taken, their homes destroyed, and their families outraged and violated by the power of might. The great masses of the people where bolshevism prevails are ignorant and superstitious and do not know the truth. Vast bodies of people with brains and money at their disposal have been interested in obscuring the truth from them, and have used every instrument in their power to do so. In this situation they were easy prey for the agitator, who is interested in them just so long as they serve his purpose. As between the agitator, on the one hand, and the exploiter, on the other, as a disinterested people we can have no choice. Our interest is in the great masses that have been exploited by both. The time has arrived when the world is not so much interested in what a man has as in the use he makes of it. We are living in a new age and amidst a new civilization, though it may not yet be perceptible. We have not yet attained to the lofty heights of the golden rule, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them," but we are growing better from age to age. The best way to destroy socialism, bolshevism, and anarchy is to remove the cause. We can destroy neither by denunciation or destruction. "Faith without works is dead." There is no danger of bolshevism in this country, for our people are a reading and intelligent people. The great masses of them may not dress so fine, nor be possessed of so much of this world's goods as some, but they are quite as patriotic and perhaps much more intelligently interested in the welfare of their country and of mankind. One of the most dangerous menaces of our country is partisanship. Just a few days ago one of the leading men in my State, a Republican, who knew better, or could for the asking have known better, asserted by editorial and in a published interview that it was in the air not to make good the guarantee to farmers on their wheat. No such thought ever entered the head of anyone here. On the contrary, the matter has already been submitted to the Congress and is now before the Committee on Agriculture. Just as soon as we dispose of the pending bill a bill to make good that guarantee will be introduced, promptly reported, and will pass Congress and become a law before the 4th of March.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. And that bill will pass probably without a dissenting vote in the House.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think there will be a dissenting vote on either side of the House.

Those in authority, as well as the American people, have their honor at stake in this guaranty, and there will be no question about making it good. And again, now the foremost man of the world to-day, and not only of to-day but of all time, is across the sea devoting all the energies and resources of his giant mind to the establishment of a league of nations, which will forever drive war from the world. Every partisan big and little throughout the country is barking at his heels trying to discredit him in the eyes of the world, and bring shame on their own country. No matter what they may say, he is representing the sentiment of the American people at Versailles.

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

This bureau has to do with the protection of plants of all kinds from different diseases, investigation of soil fertilizing, crop climatization, dry-land agriculture, foreign seed and plant introduction, new and rare seed, forage-crop investigation, and kindred activities, and is one of the most important of our Government's activities.

BUREAU OF CROP ESTIMATES.

Among the most important activities of the Government is the work of the Bureau of Crop Estimates. The public at large, however, is so well acquainted with the work of this bureau that I will not enter into any detailed explanation. It is sufficient to say that under the activities of this department, the condition of the different crops of the country—corn, cotton, wheat, oats, and so forth—is estimated from time to time, and finally the amount of production is estimated. The work has been so conscientiously performed that I have heard no complaint against it. Both the producer and the consumer accept as approximately correct the conscientious work of this bureau.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. BAER. That statement seems to be contrary to the reputed statement of the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Houston, who seems to give out the impression through the newspapers that we have an overamount of production in this country all of the time, that we do not need wheat, or that we do not need something else. I do not know that Secretary Houston made that statement, but there are such reports in the newspapers.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not know whether the Secretary made such a report or not. We ought to have more production, and I think the Secretary has made that statement. I am sure the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER], who ought, if he does not, to represent the farmers of that State, should do what he could to encourage the Secretary in that statement.

Mr. BAER. Oh, I am discouraging him in the statement that he is not encouraging production.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman is entirely inaccurate. The Secretary is trying to encourage production, and if the gentleman from North Dakota has made a statement to his people that there ought not to be production, he is in error altogether.

Mr. BAER. But I am trying to counteract the reports that are coming out from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Department of Agriculture has never made any such report.

Mr. BAER. That we do not need wheat. He is not encouraging the production of wheat.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Secretary of Agriculture has never made that statement.

Mr. BAER. The newspapers report him as saying that, and I presumed it was on account of high prices.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish the gentleman would bring them in.

Mr. BAER. I shall, and I shall insert them in the RECORD.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the report I saw was to the effect that the Secretary of Agriculture had made a report that production of wheat this year would possibly exceed the production of wheat made in any past year, owing to the increased acreage, and the very splendid condition of the wheat crops. I have never yet seen where the Secretary of Agriculture discouraged it.

Mr. BAER. He said that he did not especially encourage wheat production.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I have not seen that statement.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will yield to me, the Secretary has sent out a notice to the effect that he thought it wise for the farmers to increase their production of feed crops and things of that kind rather than to increase their wheat crop and I think the Secretary is entirely right about it because there is a great shortage in feeds.

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, I do not know whether that is true or not, Mr. Chairman; and a little later on in my speech I will quote a statement from Mr. Hoover appealing to the American farmer to produce. We never have been in this country, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in need, we have always been appealed to from an international standpoint. The American people at all times have fed themselves, but there has been an appeal to the American people to which the American farmer has patriotically responded to take care of an international situation, a situation brought about by war.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman who asked the question, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] and my good friend, the chairman of this committee, that if it were merely a matter of taking care of the American situation there never has been such a situation that would have appealed to the American farmer to produce more. They have been appealed to to take care of a situation brought about by war. We did that during the war and now that the war is over, however, there are a great many of our enemies—the central empires, Germany, Austria-Hungary, the Polanders, Bulgaria, and Turkey—who must be taken care of. Now, I do not think, when we come to guarantee this wheat price—which we are going to do, and no Republican over there need worry about that, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] need not worry about that—we are going to take care of those farmers in this guarantee of wheat we have made. I do not think, regardless of that, that the wheat demand will be less than what it has been in the past.

Mr. LEVER. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the central empires will consume all we have, all our surplus, and consume it at the price at which we guarantee it.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to suggest I do not believe it is fair to assume that any Member of Congress would for a minute contend that this Government should repudiate any contract or that there can be any question of what a Member of Congress would have done in that respect. I take it that everybody will agree that the Government would be the last to repudiate a solemn obligation.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am sure, and the gentleman need not elaborate that any more, that we all agree to that.

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not believe the gentleman should refer to one side of the House in the language that he has, that anyone on that side of the House need not have any concern about it, which is implying that there is only one side of this House that stands for integrity.

Mr. THOMPSON. Oh, I do not for a moment refer to the other side of the House for that purpose. I simply referred to the gentleman from North Dakota, who apparently to me is attempting to make a partisan issue of this question.

Mr. BAER. Not in reference to price fixing. I simply wanted to bring up the fact of increased production, and I agree with the gentleman, when he reads Mr. Hoover's statement that he will find I agree with Mr. Hoover, that we want to increase production; but in the same report I read Mr. Hoover's statement I read a statement of Secretary Houston, who said it was not necessary to raise much more wheat.

Mr. THOMPSON. I read Mr. Houston's statement at St. Louis the other day saying that it would not be necessary to encourage spring planting. I presume that is the matter to which the gentleman referred?

Mr. BAER. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is quite a different proposition from what the gentleman made in his statement; the matter of encouraging spring production and the matter of the necessity of spring production are two different matters entirely.

Mr. BAER. I am in perfect agreement with the gentleman, and I certainly want to be fair with him.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will be glad to be questioned, but I want the gentleman to be fair entirely.

BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS.

There is no more important bureau in the Department of Agriculture, or, in fact, in the entire Government than this. It has to do with the construction of good roads—not peacock boulevards constructed from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, or from the Atlantic to the Pacific—but country roads, community roads, leading from the farm to the local market. No greater incentive to production can be extended than by the construction of a system of public roads which will enable the farmer at all periods of the year and under all weather conditions to haul his products to the local market or shipping point. If this can be done easily and expeditiously over a system of good roads, it will add materially to the production of the country, will increase the number of our population residing on the farms and decrease the incentive to remove from the farm to the city.

It is a demonstrated fact that consumption of farm products is increasing at a much more rapid rate than production. If this consumption continues to increase in proportion to the production during the next three decades as it has during the past three, we will be face to face in this country with famine. If we, as we should, are willing to look into the future and face this problem, we will begin at this time to encourage and promote every movement that looks toward making farm life more pleasant and agricultural pursuits more profitable. I do not believe there is any other one thing that would more promote a "back-to-the-farm" movement than the building of good roads. It has been often said that we have in the United States the best railroads in the world and the poorest dirt roads, and this is true. We have been, during all the history of this country, neglecting the farmers of the country, the source from which originates all wealth, and giving our attention, governmental and otherwise, to the promotion of the interests of those engaged in other lines of business.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield in this connection?

Mr. THOMPSON. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. LAZARO. I take it that when the gentleman advocates good roads, of course in order to help the farmers of the country, he means to give them better transportation?

Mr. THOMPSON. That is exactly what I mean; from the farm to the local place of shipment.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman will admit, I think, that in order to have real transportation you have to have not only good roads, but railroads and waterways? You have to have a combination, do you not?

Mr. THOMPSON. I agree with that.

Mr. LAZARO. Do not leave out waterways.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield me more time?

Mr. LEVER. I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more, because he is making a very interesting speech.

Mr. THOMPSON. In 1900 we produced 1,619,415,263 pounds of butter; in 1910, 1,491,652,602 pounds. In 1900 we produced 298,344,642 pounds of cheese; in 1910, 320,532,181 pounds, an increase of only 0.07 per cent. In 1900 we exported 209,348,284 bushels of corn; in 1910 we exported 36,802,374 bushels, a decrease of 172,545,910 bushels within the 10-year period.

By comparison it will be found that the quantity of the present crops produced in the United States increased about 10 per cent between 1900 and 1910. This increase is substantially the same rate as the increase in the number of farms, which is 10.9 per cent, and the increase in the acreage, which was 9.9 per cent, the aggregate average production of these crops per farm and per acre remaining substantially unchanged during the decade, while the population of the country increased at a rate more than twice as great as the crop production, and the increase in the population of our cities being three and one-half times as great. These figures need no elaboration; no comment. They speak a condition which, if permitted to continue even for an inconsiderable length of time, as we reckon time, with the rapid increase in population, will bring want and hunger to the country. There were 6,361,502 farms in the United States, according to the census of 1910. Of these 1,327,439, valued at $6,330,236,951, were mortgaged for $1,736,172,351, or 27.3 per cent of their value.

The world has not produced in all the tide of time another genius so great, so masterful, so overpowering as Napoleon. In war he was its foremost marshal; in peace its greatest constructive statesman; in literature and art its most generous patron; in law, the author of a code which for simplicity, brevity, and comprehension is without a peer; at all times the faithful friend and patron of agriculture. In the last days of his restless and eventful life he looked back with more pride on the encouragement that he had extended agriculture than on any other achievement of his illustrious career.

At the close of his life, when asked what he considered the greatest and most beneficial acts of his career, after a pause he replied: "The system of roads and agricultural fairs I have given France will be most beneficial to her."

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. THOMPSON. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. LAZARO. Napoleon also recognized the importance of building up the sugar industry in France at that time, did he not?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not acquainted with that. If the gentleman says it is so, I will be glad to accept it.

Mr. LAZARO. Yes; he did.

Mr. THOMPSON. It required almost a century of time and the recurrence of war to corroborate that statement; but there are none among us now who will not agree that the roads of France and her agricultural system saved her and civilization in the great cataclysm through which the world has just passed. [Applause.]

A few months ago I stood before his tomb and wandered about the galleries of the great dead. I saw no reference there to his achievements on fields of glory. His claims to immortality were based on achievements in civil life. I read the inscriptions surrounding the tomb of this man of immortal memory. They were:

1. The Legion of Honor. "I have aroused every possible emulation, rewarded every merit, and extended the confines of glory."
2. Public Works. "Everywhere that my rule has passed it has left lasting traces of its benefits."
3. Protection of Commerce and Industry. "Free trade favors all classes, excites all imaginations; it is identical with equality and conduces naturally to independence. True industry does not consist in working with all means known and bestowed; art and genius consist in accomplishing in spite of difficulties and in thus finding little or nothing impossible."
4. The Chamber of Finance. "It is my desire that, by means of an active supervision, infidelity may be repressed and the legal use of the public funds guaranteed."
5. The University. Decree of May 10, 1806: "There shall be formed, under the name of Imperial University, a body intrusted exclusively with the public instruction and education in the whole empire."
6. The Concordat. "The Church of France is reborn in light and concord."
7. The Napoleonic Code. "My one code, by its simplicity, has done more good to France than the mass of laws that preceded me."
8. Creation of the State Council. "Cooperate in the plans I form for the prosperity of the nations."
9. The Reformed Administration. "Without order, administration is but chaos."
10. Restoration of Public Order. "The principles of the unruly leaders vanish; faction bends; parties are blended; wounds are healed; order seems once again to emerge from chaos."

Not one relates to fields of blood. I am persuaded, Mr. Chairman, that long after the puny reputation of the best of us has faded away, we will be remembered by posterity by what we left rather than by what we consumed ourselves.

THE BUREAU OF MARKETS.

Perhaps of more importance than any of the other bureaus is that of the Bureau of Markets. We increased the appropriation for this bureau in this bill from $2,023,255 to $2,689,365.

At the very threshold of the question of production is the one of finding a market for that production. Without a market, and a profitable market, the farmer will soon cease to produce. Not only will he soon cease to produce but he will also soon cease to be a farmer. He will move away to the city and engage in some other occupation.

The last census discloses some startling facts in this connection. The increase of population in the rural districts is not keeping pace with the increase in the cities. The ratio of increase during the decennium between 1900 and 1910 was 3 to 1 in favor of the cities. During the same decade the increase in population in the United States was more than twice as great as the increase in farm products. During the same 10-year period the supply of meat animals—sheep, swine, and cattle—decreased a little more than 7 per cent. The census figures for the same period further disclose that the number of tenant farmers also increased. The average profit of the farmer on invested capital is about 5½ per cent, and the fact that he is compelled to pay an interest rate greatly in excess of his profits explains why so many farmers are abandoning the farms and moving to the congested centers of population. More than 60 per cent of our population reside in cities and towns having a population of more than 2,500, and less than 40 per cent reside in the country and towns containing a population of less than 2,500, and there is actually residing on the farm not to exceed one-third of our population.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. I can get through, I think, in about five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Well, if the gentleman thinks he can I will yield him all the time I have—five minutes more.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not like to take that.

Mr. LEVER. I will be glad to have the gentleman go on. He is making an interesting speech.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will be glad to yield some of my time to the gentleman.

Mr. LEVER. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] yields me five minutes, and the gentleman from South Carolina can reserve his time.

Farming is the most important industry in the world. Without the farm all other business would stagnate and die, the railroads would cease to run, the banks and mercantile establishments could no longer operate, and grass would grow in the streets of our cities. No other business can succeed without the farmer, but the farming business can succeed, if left unfettered, without the aid of any other business.

The establishment of a marketing system I regard as of the utmost importance. We can not hope to encourage agriculture except by making it a profitable pursuit. It struggles, naturally, under many handicaps. It is a year in and year out job. The work is hard and must be carried on during all kinds of weather conditions. The investment is large in proportion to the expected returns. The hazard is great. All character of pests and blasts constantly threaten the farmer. Drought and flood alternately injure or destroy his crops. He and his family are isolated. Schools are bad and inaccessible. The roads are impassable. There is no social diversion for his family. He produces without an assurance that he will receive a profit on that production. His production is subject to the whims of the board of trade gambler. He has no marketing system. He does not know to-day what market was flooded yesterday and where there was a demand for his production. He is a prey of the middleman. Every industry has been looked after and some governmental step taken to protect it, except the farmer. This bureau is busy right now trying to remedy these evils. Money appropriated is being used in an effort to bring the producer and consumer together, thereby reducing the overhead charges, doing away with the middleman, and procuring for the producer a greater price for his product while at the same time the consumer is enabled to purchase at a reduced price.

The importance of sustaining the farmer and continuing him in that important business is suggested in the headlines of the Washington Post of Monday morning over an interview given out by Herbert Hoover at Paris on the day before. These headlines read:

Aid farmers, he says—Hoover declares problem of food production serious—World will need it all—Serious thinking required to prevent prices falling below a fair return during the transition period before signing of peace—Thereafter economic law to rule.

There is a new element in the agricultural problem which we will shortly be called on to face. More than four millions of men who were called into the Army will shortly return to take up life anew. A large part of these men went to war from the farm. They have made sacrifies for us. While we remained safe at home, they went forth, some to come again wounded, some with an arm or leg gone, others blind, others still in health but with positions gone, and some will never return. They have answered the final call. These heroes, one and all, whether they return in safety or died at the front, offered all that we might be protected and that our country might live. I am among those who believe that a grateful country can not afford to be niggardly with these men. I favor giving each of them—officers and men alike—a year's pay, dating from their discharge, at the rate of $30 per month. This will amount to $360 each and be all too small for the sacrifice they have made. [Applause.] It will amount to about a billion and a half dollars, but what if it does? There has just been reported from the Committee on Appropriations and passed by the House a bill turning back into the Treasury $7,179,156,944 in cash and canceling authorization of contracts aggregating $8,221,029,294, making a total of $15,400,186,238 appropriations already made and authorized to carry on the war. This vast sum was saved by the heroism of these, our sons; and even if it costs a billion and a half dollars to give them a year's pay, they have saved us thirteen and a half billion dollars by the amount we are just now returning into the Treasury.

We must also immediately enact the law prepared by Secretary of the Interior Lane and recommended by President Wilson, which will provide for the irrigation of the dry and draining of the swamp land. This, together with the cut-over land of our national forests, will provide for these heroes a home. The money expended in the draining and irrigation projects will provide work for them and prevent a period of unemployment, which, if permitted, is likely to produce in this country what we are all striving to avoid—bolshevism. It comes with poor grace from us who remained safe at home to talk about high taxes when it comes to taking care of those who offered their lives for us. We can not do too much for them.

Mr. Chairman, he would be a poor patriot who would advance the welfare of one class of our people to the injury of another. He would be an enemy rather than a friend of his country. We have attempted to carefully avoid such in this bill. Instead I fear we have stopped short of giving the farmers that to which they are justly entitled. We have not yet traveled so far from the tragic circumstance of war that we can forget the debt of gratitude the world owes the sturdy farmers for the great part they played in the victory the allies have just won. The Nation owes a debt to itself to see that these faithful men are not driven from farm life.

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay;
Princes and lords may flourish or may fade;
A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroyed can never be supplied.

[Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] to use some time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I had agreed to yield time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER], but he has so generously yielded his time to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] that I believe we will not ask for any more time now.

Mr. LEVER. I ask that the Clerk read the first paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, for the purposes and objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

RESPONSE OF SOVIET GOVERNMENT OF RUSSIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, yesterday, in the course of my remarks, I was asked by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] if a certain response that had been made by the Soviet government of Russia had been put in the RECORD or was intended to be put in the RECORD by me. I responded then that I did not have such a response. This morning the Senator from Colorado has handed to me the response to which he then referred, and because of his suggestion yesterday and his request that it be put in the RECORD, I ask that it be printed without reading in the RECORD this morning.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The all-Russian congress of Soviets expresses its appreciation to the American people, and first of all to the laboring and exploited classes in the United States for the message sent by the President of the United States to the congress of the Soviets in this time when the Russian socialistic Soviet republic is living through most difficult trials.

The Russian republic uses the occasion of the message from President Wilson to express to all peoples who are dying and suffering from the horrors of this imperialistic war its warm sympathy and firm conviction that the happy time is near when the laboring masses in all bourgeois countries will throw off the capitalist yoke and establish a socialistic state of society, which is the only one capable of assuring a permanent and just peace as well as the culture and well-being of all who toil.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5354) extending the time for completion of the bridge across the Delaware River, authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River, approved the 24th day of August, 1912."

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses; recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 12 to the bill and agrees to the same with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; further insists upon its disagreement to the remainder of the amendments; requests a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOUSTON, Mr. ASWELL, and Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GERRY presented a petition signed by sundry citizens of Newport, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the national ownership and Government operation of all railroads in the United States necessary for the furnishing of transportation to the people of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. THOMPSON. I present petitions in the form of telegrams pertaining to good-roads legislation, one from the Kansas Editorial Association in convention at Topeka, another from the Kansas Good Roads Association, and another telegram from the governor of Kansas, transmitting information relative to the action of the Kansas Legislature. The telegram from the governor of Kansas is very short, and I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. On what subject are the telegrams?

Mr. THOMPSON. On good-roads legislation and the action of the Kansas Legislature in regard thereto. I only ask to have printed in the RECORD the telegram from the governor of the State, transmitting the action of the legislature and requesting Federal legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. To the telegram transmitting the action of the legislature, I raise no objection, but to the printing of the other telegrams I object.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like to have them noted. I do not ask to have them printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They can be noted by a presentation for reference.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is all I have asked.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. All right.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask that the telegram from the governor of Kansas be printed in the RECORD and, with the other two telegrams, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and the one from the governor ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 15140. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

VALIDATION OF WAR CONTRACTS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I must say that hereafter I shall request that the Senate proceed with the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. KIRBY. The Committee on Military Affairs had this bill under consideration for some time. It had the views of the War Department about it; it had the views of the different chambers of commerce and boards of trade of the great cities of the country; it had the views of their legal departments about the effect and scope of the bill.

The subcommittee reported the bill as insisted upon by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and so far as I know that bill was considered and reported by the full committee without taking into consideration the views of either the contractors, who were supposed to be given a remedy, or the War Department, which had authority or was to be given authority to settle these matters. At least, there was no statement——

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I merely wish to correct the Senator. I know he does not want to present the matter in any other than the true way. The committee heard representatives of the War Department and representatives of the contractors.

Mr. KIRBY. The statement of their views was not referred to the entire committee with the bill, so far as I know, and that is the reason I made the statement.

But coming down to the main proposition, and we had just as well face this matter and get through with it, I wish to say just a few words. These informal and defective contracts it is urged ought to be validated, that the men who made the contracts and did the work and expended money in compliance with them are not at fault and ought to be compensated. They are, however, asking for an additional and a better remedy than is vouchsafed under existing law to men who had valid contracts and whose contracts were canceled because the Government could not use the munitions and supplies that had been ordered and contracted for after the armistice. Those men who had valid contracts and whose contracts have been canceled because of the armistice having been signed must resort to the regional boards which have already been constructed. The claim comes through the regional board to a central board that has been established in the War Department here, then through the hands of the Secretary of War and then to the Court of Claims if the parties are not satisfied with the award made. These men came and said, "We want a remedy here for the validation of our contracts; we must be provided a remedy, we have none whatever; our contracts are invalid or informal or have not been completed, and we have expended our efforts and expended our money and we are entitled to compensation."

The bill as reported by the subcommittee, insisted upon by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], provides, as the other bill proposed by the committee does, that only when he regards that the public interest requires it the Secretary of War shall validate the contract.

The first bill introduced did not provide that on a quantum meruit a man might recover who had no contract at all, who had been ordered to produce certain stuff, and had, in fact, expended money in producing it.

The bill as proposed here provides that both the men whose contracts were valid and have been canceled and those who claim rights under informal contracts may have the benefit of this additional board, this commission of appeals or board established down here, to pass on these claims. They all may have that, as I understand it. The claim goes through the regional board, composed of the best men in the district—business men; it goes through the central board already created in the operation of the War Department; and it goes to the Secretary of War for a final determination, and then it will go to this new board proposed to be created in the Chamberlain bill, and from there, if the parties are not satisfied, it can be taken to the Court of Claims.

That certainly is providing enough machinery and a sufficient remedy for any man who has no valid contract to start with. This has been done in order that the matter may be handled expeditiously.

It is objected that the War Department ought not to be permitted to settle these matters, because it was through its fault that the contracts were not legally made in the first instance. That may or may not be true. The contracts certainly were not made through any intentional mistake of the War Department nor were they invalid on that account. It may be that there was not time enough to prepare and properly execute the contracts, and certainly the orders have not been regarded as executed contracts and could not be, the parties not having had time to reduce the terms of the contracts to proper form, the speedy delivery of the things that were necessary being insisted upon.

The War Department, under the law as it is, settles for the Government all the claims for compensation and damages under canceled valid contracts until there is some additional legislation provided. Why should not the War Department have also been permitted to settle with the contractors who have invalid and informal claims, as it is allowed to settle all of the claims under canceled valid contracts. The War Department is familiar with the whole transaction from its beginning to its completion, and has the machinery arranged for the settlement of such claims; but it is contended that in the settlement of claims arising out of these informal illegal contracts the War Department might be overreached or that some man in the War Department might be in collusion with the contractors and claimants. Certainly the very same objection would apply to settlement of claims under other contracts.

But grant that is an objection which is to be considered. We have had to trust the War Department for the making of previous contracts; we have trusted the War Department for the cancellation of valid contracts; and we, under the law, must trust the War Department for the settlement of claims for damages under valid contracts, subject only to appeal to the Court of Claims.

Now, the contractors who have these invalid contracts want an additional remedy over the remedy which was provided even for the settlement of valid contracts or claims thereunder. They say, "We distrust the War Department; we do not believe that they will do justice." But they do not distrust the War Department for the same reason which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] do. They, the contractors, distrust the War Department for fear that the War Department will do its duty by the Government too strictly and will allow them too small a margin on their claims. They say, "We want this additional court here," and their attorneys and the representatives of the 6,000 contractors say that they believe this constitutes a fair tribunal for the adjustment of differences that must necessarily arise under the conditions which now exist, and that they believe it will act speedily and give them that measure of relief which they ought to have. That is their understanding.

The War Department believe that under the system provided and proposed in the bill reported by the majority of the committee they can get these matters settled within a reasonable time, and if there is any complaint of favoritism shown by the War Department, or if there is any complaint of anything having been done wrong or by collusion with the War Department, that can be objected to and appealed to the commission that is proposed to be created. After the case has gone to the commission, if the claimants are not satisfied with the award that is made, they can then appeal to the Court of Claims. There is that much machinery to take care of the men who had not valid contracts in the first instance, and this is but an additional commission of claims that is created in order that they may have absolutely a fair deal, and they can not complain that they have not been fairly treated, that they have been paid too little, or their rights have been disregarded by the War Department.

Now, let us see whether or not there is necessity for it. The Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Tennessee say that there ought to be a new and entirely different system; that their commission of claims should investigate the conditions by agencies established by the commission—regional boards here, there, and yonder—and then let all of the cases go to the commission of claims, let them all be settled in that way, and that then the Government will be fairly treated and the contractors protected. Let us see what will be the effect of that.

Mr. President, there are 6,000 contracts which it is proposed to validate, which it is proposed to recognize as obligations upon the part of the Government, perhaps. In any event there will be 6,000 claims which necessarily will arise for compensation under these contracts. Under the Hitchcock bill as proposed they will go to this commission, and the argument of the Senator from Nebraska about the operation of the commission created by his bill is that the cases will go to the commission already passed upon by all of the agencies of the War Department, with a report stating whether they approve or disapprove of any particular thing. His idea seems to be that the commission will go into an examination of these matters, pass upon the justice of the award, and that there can then be no question but that the contractors and the Government will both be protected.

What will be the effect of it? Six thousand claims are to come before the proposed commission. The Supreme Court of the State of Arkansas consists of five judges, good lawyers, and most efficient in the transaction of the business coming before them, and yet that court can pass on—and does generally pass on—but 625 cases a year. In those cases transcripts are provided, and abstract of the testimony is made, showing just exactly what the claim is; the judgment of the lower court is filed, and the briefs of the attorneys, and yet it takes the Supreme Court of Arkansas—and I do not believe there is a more efficient court in the United States to-day—10 or 11 months to pass on and decide 625 cases and write the opinion therein. There are 6,000 cases here, and it will take the proposed commission—if they examine the cases that are brought before them—10 years to pass upon the justice of all the claims. At any rate, it can not be done, in my opinion, at all within less than six or seven years, if an examination is made such as would give the commissioners any idea of the fairness and justice of the claims.

That is the condition, I believe, that confronts the people who are asking for this remedy and who say that it is absolutely necessary not only to their own financial safety but to the prosperity of the country. A billion and a half of dollars are tied up in this kind of contracts in this kind of claims. It is provided in the bill that is proposed by the committee that, if the claimants are not satisfied with the award handed down by the commission of claims, they may appeal to the Court of Claims after being paid 75 per cent of the award. I do not believe they ought to be paid one cent of the award in case of appeal. I believe the Government ought to have a reasonable opportunity to settle these cases at what it believes is the right amount that ought to be paid under all the circumstances; but when it comes down to a settlement, if the Government says, "We will pay you so much," and the claimant says, "I ought to have so much more," and the Government says, "We will pay you that or you can go to the Court of Claims," then a man would take some little thought before he appealed to the Court of Claims, thus delaying the matter further. If he were offered a reasonably fair settlement he would settle, and the Government and himself would both be protected, and their interests promoted by the immediate settlement of the cases.

As to the Hitchcock bill, if there was ample time, I do not know that there would be any great objection to it. So far as I am concerned, I should like to see that court or commission stricken out of the bill entirely. It is said, "We ought not to let the War Department settle a claim where it has made the contract." Why not? They were authorized to make the contract in the first instance, and every officer is presumed to do his duty; then, why not let them settle it? If you and I have a contract in regard to a certain matter and I am to furnish you so much lumber and you come to me next week and say, "I do not want that lumber, I do not need it, I have changed my plans," and I say: "Yes; but you agreed to take it; here is your contract," and you say: "All right, I will not take the lumber, but I am going to pay you the damages; what are the damages?"

Then the two contracting parties get together and see if they can agree on the amount of damages. That has always been the practice; that is right, and it ought to be so, but every man must minimize his damages as much as he possibly can. That is the condition of the people who have made contracts with the Government. They, the War Department, say, "We are ready to negotiate with you about a settlement; we understand the whole thing." Then, under these circumstances, the bill proposes to provide a new commission that can hear these cases at some time in the near future and hope to conclude the consideration of them all without unreasonable delay.

It is provided that the commission proposed by the Hitchcock substitute shall enter upon the hearing of these claims, and I say it will take it from six to seven years to finish them up if the commission learns enough about each claim to pass intelligent judgment upon it.

It does not make any difference to me whether one or the other measure is passed, except from the standpoint of promoting the public interest and of dealing fairly and justly with the men who have expended money and delivered material for the Government's benefit in a time of emergency. I believe they ought to be reimbursed, but I do not believe that under the Hitchcock bill it can be done in anything like time enough to save the contractors and promote the interests of the country.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. POLLOCK. Mr. President, it is extremely unfortunate that the Congress of the United States should be called upon to consider legislation, such as that which is before the Senate, involving the payment of perhaps more than $2,000,000,000 on so-called illegal or irregular contracts. That situation could not have arisen under normal conditions, and we would not to-day be called upon to consider a bill such as that which is now before the Senate had it been possible for the United States to have remained out of the great war which has shaken the whole world. Therefore, it may not be inappropriate at this time to submit some remarks on the general situation which confronts the whole world at this time, especially in regard to the effort that is being made by peoples all over the world to try to work out some plan whereby war may be made a thing of the past.

Mr. President, it is not as a former Secretary of State who has well and ably guided our Nation in its international relations, nor as a distinguished member of the Foreign Relations Committee who has displayed great learning and ability in shaping our foreign policies in the Senate, nor yet as a great orator of long service and recognized ability the world over in this body, that I would address you to-day, but merely as an ordinary man and as a humble Member of the United States Senate, unknown largely beyond the limits of my own State, fresh from contact with the plain people of America, that I would try to-day to voice the sentiments and express the hopes of the plain peoples of America and the world on the question of a permanent peace of the world, as near as that may be attained, and to submit my views on the effort that is being made to organize a league of nations to secure and maintain the peace of America and of the world.

I feel some delicacy, sir, in imposing upon the time of the Senate, but each of us in this body, composed of 96 out of a population of more than 100,000,000 of free American people, has the voice and the vote of more than 100,000,000 citizens of this great Republic, and I feel, sir, that when this most momentous question of all the ages is hanging in the balance that I should be recreant to my duty and shirking a responsibility did I not raise my voice in protest at much which has been said in this Chamber and elsewhere in regard to this supreme question, which is in the mind of thinking people everywhere.

I have listened with some impatience at the petty partisan criticisms of the President of the United States indulged in by some Senators on account of his visit abroad to confer with the leaders of the other great nations of the world, with whom we have been associated, in regard to the great settlements that must come as a result of the great world war just ended. I have noted with pity the action of certain Senators in having inserted in the RECORD newspaper clippings and other articles tending or attempting to bring the President of the United States into disfavor and contempt and ridicule of the world. I have pitied these men because they are injuring not the President in his great undertakings, but they are making themselves small indeed in the estimation of the American people.

The question of establishing a league of nations to maintain the peace of the world is not a political or partisan question; it is earnestly championed and advocated by the only two living Presidents of the United States—the one a Democrat, the other a Republican; but both, sir, of the very finest type of patriotic Americans—the one with power to act for America while he speaks, the other with power only to help create the proper sentiment in the country and to counsel and advise with those who have the power to act. All honor to William Howard Taft along with Woodrow Wilson. They are both playing their part in this great hour when the world needs men, high-minded men who would advance rather than retrograde, who would build up rather than tear down.

It is very easy to find fault, but it seems to be very hard for a partisan to be fair. It is very easy to tear down, but very hard to build up. It is easy to be destructive, but impossible for the narrow-minded bigot to be constructive. There has been enough of destruction and death in the world during the past four years to satisfy even the most savage. It is now time for us to turn aside from war with all its ruin and misery and see to it, if possible, that nations are controlled as our Nation controls the several States and as our several States control the individuals in those States. There was a time when individuals settled their differences by might, regardless of right; likewise families and neighborhoods and clans settled their differences; but the human race has advanced, civilization has progressed, and law and order has evolved out of brute force. Men formerly fought duels, and thus settled their disputes. To-day he who kills his fellow man in a duel is an outlaw and a murderer, and the time will come—aye, it has already come—when a nation that makes war upon another except in self-defense or in the defense of civilization will be an outcast, an outlaw, and a murderer amongst the civilized nations of the world. The great anthem of the world to-day is peace—peace on earth, good will toward men. Every nation that has been at war has disclaimed responsibility for this war and declares that it only fought that fighting might be no more.

Every nation on earth yearns for perpetual peace, and I say that when the whole world wants the same thing at the same time for the whole world, then the world can and it will get that thing, and by the help of the great God of nations all the forces of hell can not prevail against it. This yearning for peace is in the hearts of the civil populations of the world, who have seen their loved ones wounded and bleeding and dying on the battle fields, who have seen their homes destroyed and their lands desolated, and who have seen their women violated and their innocent children tortured and crucified. This yearning for peace is in the hearts of the brave men who have gone forth to do and die for the cause of human liberty and freedom. They have seen the horrors of war; they have endured its agonies; they have witnessed its sufferings; they know the uselessness, the folly, the criminality of war except as it is fought in defense of home and country and civilization. They realize the crime of making unnecessary war, and he who to-day sneers at peace and every honest effort that can be made to effectuate the peace of the world as "a sort of international mutual admiration society, with the Sermon on the Mount for a constitution and the Apostolic Creed for a guide," will find that he is completely out of harmony with the spirit of the great American people, and especially that gallant army of 2,000,000 heroes who crossed the Atlantic Ocean to stop the mad dog of Europe in his wild orgy of destruction and murder. Let such a one read the letters from the men who have been over there, who have endured hardships beyond expression, who have laid out in mud-filled, water-soaked trenches for weeks at a time without changing clothes, who have gone out finally over No Man's Land and have witnessed the death of comrades all around them, who have finally fallen wounded on the field of honor with no one to render succor; fighting for you and fighting for me, fighting for loved ones, fighting for home, fighting for country, and fighting for humanity; read what these men say, learn what they have learned, see what they have seen, get their viewpoint, and you will no longer sneer at this great longing of the human race.

And he who sneers at peace is not much, if any, worse than that man who criticizes and finds fault with every effort, every suggestion for the accomplishment of peace. The conscience of the world is awake, the wisdom of the world is aroused, the mind of man has taken up the great problem, and it befits every man, and especially every one in high responsible position, to cease finding fault with others' ideas, except as he may point out other ideas that will the better effectuate the purposes of the world, and the greatest purpose of the world to-day is the peace of the world.

The President of the United States has been harshly criticized for going abroad at this time and not remaining here to advise the Congress by those partisans who would not heed and follow his advice if he were here. He has been criticized for not disclosing to these enemies of the administration what terms of peace he may have in mind when they well know that neither Woodrow Wilson nor the combined peace delegates from this country can dictate the terms of peace. He has been attacked by Senators in a partisan spirit for not telling them what are the details of his scheme for a league of nations for the preservation of the peace of the world when they well know that such details must be the result of the combined wisdom and judgment of the representatives of all the allied nations, and possibly later of the representatives of the greater neutral countries of the world. They say that they want a lasting peace, but they are unwilling that the President shall go amongst the peoples whose support we must have to attain that result to get their opinions and to give them his judgment in order that an overwhelming sentiment may be created throughout the world for that peace which all true men must wish.

They demand that he shall give them advice which they will not take rather than confer with our partners in this great affair, to the end that out of the common councils of mankind some plan may be evolved that shall insure the world against a recurrence of the awful carnage that has desolated a continent and put the whole world in mourning.

Sir, those whose voices and whose words are potent to fix the opinions and direct the actions of a considerable part of our people, and who have some influence over the people of foreign lands by reason of holding for the time being high positions at the hands of the American people, have a great, an awful responsibility resting upon them. They can aid or they can retard the progress of civilization. If they would but forget self for a while, if they would rise to the true stature of full manhood, if they would but consider the men in the Army and the Navy, if they would look upon the sick, the wounded, and the dying who have sacrificed the comforts of life that this free Nation might still endure, that we might still have the opportunity to declare the policies and enact the laws by the suffrage of these people for the conduct of this great Republic, if they would but look upon the almost endless rows of new-made mounds mid the poppy fields of Flanders, if they would but look into the once happy homes of the world and see there the vacant chairs that stand "mute witnesses of the dissolution of the grave," it does seem to me that at this time, when the fate of the human race is in the balance, that Senators could forget that they are Democrats or Republicans; that they would remember that they are first of all Americans—Americans above State or section or party and as true Americans they are citizens of the world, with the interest of the whole human race at heart.

Our soldiers and sailors were neither Republicans nor Democrats. They came from no State nor section. They went into the Army and Navy as Americans, and when they had gone to the fields of battle they were brigaded with the men of our allies. They fought under the supreme command of that greatest of all modern commanders, Gen. Foch. They fought as soldiers of civilization side by side with the men of other countries, having the same end in mind, saving the world for liberty and freedom, and making the world a decent place for the habitation of man.

Did America lose her dignity or sacrifice any of her sovereignty when Gen. Pershing placed at the disposal of the allied high command the whole of the American forces? Did America in any degree lose any of her independence when by an almost unanimous vote of the American Senate and Congress, under the advice of the President, she cast her lot with the peace-loving, law-abiding nations of the world against the brutal, savage forces of the central powers that would have destroyed free governments from the world and set up military despotisms in their place?

If that be true, then the vast majority of this body, the vast majority of the other branch of the Congress, the vast majority of the American people who indorsed and applauded your action, must plead guilty to the charge of treason to our country, and the soldiers and sailors who have written a new chapter of glory into the pages of world history must admit that they fought as they had no right to fight. We went into this war not alone to avenge our own wrongs, not alone to defend our own rights, but, in addition to this, to protect and preserve the freedom and liberty of the world. To quote the words of Henry W. Grady:

> We, sir, are Americans, and we fight for human liberty. The uplifting force of the American idea is under every throne on earth. France, Brazil; these are our victories. To redeem the earth from kingcraft and oppression; this is our mission, and we shall not fail. God has sown in our soil the seed of His millenial harvest, and He will not lay the sickle to the ripening crop until His full and perfect day has come. Our history, sir, has been a constant and expanding miracle from Plymouth Rock and Jamestown all the way, aye, even from the hour, when from the voiceless and trackless ocean a new world rose to the sight of the inspired sailor. * * * Let us resolve to crown the miracles of our past with the spectacle of a Republic, compact, united, indissoluble in the bonds of love, loving from the Lakes to the Gulf, the wounds of war healed in every heart as on every hill, serene and resplendent at the summit of human achievement and earthly glory, blazing out the path and making clean the way up which all the nations of the earth must come in God's appointed time.

I sprang from the loins of Virginia, where my father entered the service of the Southern Confederacy. I was born of a South Carolina mother in that State, which was one of the original thirteen Colonies that formed this wonderful Union, that State that was first to secede from the Union. I am a product of the Civil War; had it not been for it my parents would probably have never met and I would never have been. I love the State of my father. I love the State of my mother. I love my own State, and I glory in its people and its history, but I love my country more than I love any State, and I thank God that it was not in the divine American plan that there should be two countries where only one now exists. I find pride in Bunker Hill as I do in Kings Mountain. I find satisfaction in Appomattox, as I find joy in Yorktown. And when I say to you to-day that I am glad there is no Southern Confederacy, and I am overjoyed that the Union was preserved and has become forever indissoluble, I believe that I express the sentiments not only of the younger generation in the South but also the sentiments of the few remaining gallant men who wore the gray in the sixties and who after four years of brave fighting for what they conceived to be their rights returned to their desolated lands and ruined homes broken in fortune but undismayed in spirit, and beat their swords into plowshares and took up again with the same fortitude that had sustained them in war their peaceful pursuits as citizens of this great country to which they again had sworn their allegiance. And I call upon the whole world to witness that my people have been true to that allegiance; they have paid their share of the burdens of Government when they had but little from which to pay; they have poured their paltry earnings into the lap of industry; they have furnished all sections of this land with many of its brightest minds; they have furnished much of the very finest of American character uncontaminated by evil foreign influences; they have supplied their full quota of men for the Spanish War and for the great world war that is just happily coming to an end; those men joined with the men from all sections of America to make up the great American Army of freedom, liberty, and peace. They fought side by side with the men from every State in the American Union under the same flag that is loved in South Carolina as ardently as it is loved in New England. They mingled their life blood with the blood of all America on the battle fields of Europe, and the pages of American history are the richer for the sacrifice, and so to-day the American people are nearer one in purpose and in spirit than they have been for more than a half century.

The Army, with a northern man at its head, and the Navy, with a southern man at its head, know no North, no South, no East, no West—they know no section nor creed except America and what for America and the world is best. And, sir, in the Army and the Navy there are no Democrats nor Republicans—there are only American patriots, in civil life of all creeds and faiths and peoples banded together for a common purpose—the freedom and liberty and peace of the world, and I say to you to-day that the world can not be satisfied with anything less than the full fruits of all the sacrifices that the world has made—I say to you that we did not go into this war merely to humble the proud spirit of the central powers—we did not go into this war merely to tear down empires and thrones—we did not go into this war merely to banish kings and kaisers, but above all we went into this war to destroy militarism and destroy it for all time, and that can be done and it will be done by the creation and establishment of a league of nations to preserve and enforce the peace of the world. This is no new idea with me. As far back as the Fourth of July, 1912, speaking in South Carolina on the Nation's birthday I used this language, and these figures seem so small in the light of the present:

> The total ordinary disbursements of the United States for last year amounted to more than $650,000,000. Of this amount about 70 per cent was for the War and Navy Departments and for the payment of pensions growing out of former wars. In other words, my friends, the idea of war—wars of the past and preparation for wars of the future—is costing the American people $438,000,000 annually, and this, my friends, is growing every year. This appalling statement of itself, it seems to me, is enough to make a practical, common-sense people stop and think.

Permit me to say right here that when we consider that this war has cost the American people more than $30,000,000,000—more money than has been spent by this Government since its beginning up to the outbreak of this war—when we consider that England has spent more than $40,000,000,000 and France a corresponding amount, if for no other reason the people of America and the people of the whole universe ought to stop and think of the burdens that are being placed upon the present generation, and upon generations yet unborn.

> But when we consider that war never settles a controversy according to the justice of the cause—when equity and righteousness have no place in the final termination—when power and force are after all the determining factors in the question, and when the green valleys are painted a rich red with the lifeblood of thousands and tens of thousands of human beings who are called upon to sacrifice home and family and life on their country's altar, is it not time for us, a great Christian Nation, the hope of the world, in the great march of progressive thought and of civilization to seek about for a way to abolish war from the face of the world?
> Just as 50 years ago, on the old muster field, the biggest man in the eye of young America was the one who could lick any other bully—just as a few years ago the biggest man was the one who, after a quarrel with his neighbor, could shoot the truest in the duel, just as the result of force settled differences between man and man, so still to-day the most powerful nation, with the greatest navy and the biggest army and the fullest treasury, lords it over the weaker nations of the earth, and every big nation feels called upon to be as fully prepared for war that may never come as its strongest competitor for world power.

In the great Civil War the Federal Government put in the field 2,722,000 men—the Confederate Armies numbered about 750,000 men—the Federal Government lost about 350,000 men and the Confederate Army lost about 133,000 men. Think also, my friends, of the other wars of the United States and of the other nations of the world. Remember that it is to the advantage of every country on earth that the enormous expenses of war and fearful sacrifice of human life should cease, and I ask you is it hoping for too much when I suggest that this Government should take the initiative and try to get the other nations of the earth to join in a treaty whereby they would agree to submit all their differences to an international court of arbitration in which all nations have a representative except those who might be parties to the controversy—disband their armies except enough to insure domestic tranquility—disarm their navies except to jointly maintain a navy sufficient to cope with the navy of any one country which refuses to enter into the compact, and then say to the world, "Thou shalt not commit murder."

South Carolina has always been progressive; she has always dared lead the way; she can on this anniversary of the Nation's birthday send out a message to the Nation and to the world of "Peace on earth, good will toward men," and I verily believe that that message taken up by the great Democratic Party and carried to the four corners of the earth by that greatest of American statesmen, William Jennings Bryan, who, like Clay and Webster and Calhoun, is too great to be president, commissioned by that other great man, Woodrow Wilson, the next President of the United States, will be received and acted upon by all the great Christian nations of the earth.

A part of my prophecies in that speech have come to pass. Woodrow Wilson has twice since that been elected President of the United States. Bryan was made Secretary of State and sought to draw the Christian nations of the world together in treaties that would have made war a remote possibility, if not an impossibility; but Germany, fully prepared for war, would not enter into such a treaty as was proposed. She had her great army and navy and her ambition for world domination staked upon her power, which was being increased daily; she had to justify her military preparations, with its enormous burden of taxes, before the German people, who were groaning under the burden, and so it was not given to the world to see that peace for which the plain people of the world prayed without another, and, we all hope, a final trial of armed force.

But to-day the only country, Germany, that stood in the way of the peace of the world lies prone and prostrate at our feet, stripped of all her power for evil and compelled to make any kind of peace that the conscience of the world may dictate, and I say, sir, that we, the American Senate, whether we be Republicans or whether we be Democrats, will be recreant to our duty and false to our people and traitors to the human race if we do not here and now highly resolve that we will lay aside all partisanship and all carping criticism, all faultfinding, unless we can suggest something better, and encourage, and advise with our representatives at the peace council at Versailles as to the best way to effectuate the hopes of mankind and the plans of God for the peace of the world for to-day, to-morrow, and forever. We have the great nations of the world banded together now in a way they have never been before—we see them linked together by a common purpose and a mutual interest that was never before conceived—we find them hating together the common foe of humanity and loving together the purest dream of the world, and while they are so banded and linked together there can be nothing of so great consequence as the perpetuation of the peace of the world. To-day is the time, to-morrow may be too late, and so I say that he who would postpone the consideration of the creation of a proper league of nations is hardly less an enemy to the human race than he who comes out boldly in full opposition and prates about the sovereignty of the United States and declares that he will not consent to arbitrate the Monroe doctrine and will not agree to send American boys to fight other peoples' battles thousands of miles away.

I shall not attempt to go into minute details as to the exact terms and provisions of a treaty or agreement for a league of nations. That must be worked out, if at all, by the peace delegates at the council, but, Mr. President, as I think of the world my mind turns back to nations; as I consider nations the United States of America rises before my vision, and I see here 48 sovereign States, originally 13 sovereign independent States or countries, bound together into the greatest Nation of the world. How came this about? When the Declaration of Independence was published to the world on the 4th day of July, 1776, 13 free and independent States were born, and until the adoption of the Articles of Confederation on the 15th day of November, 1777, there was nothing to bind these States together save the Declaration of Independence and the words therein contained, "We mutually pledge to each other our lives and fortunes and our sacred honor."

Then, Mr. President, on the 15th of November, 1777, was adopted the Articles of Confederation by the delegates of the United States of America, wherein it was provided "that each State retains its sovereignty, freedom, and independence," and wherein it was provided that "the said States hereby severally enter into a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defense, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare, binding themselves to assist each other against all force offered to or attacks made upon them or any of them on account of religion, sovereignty, trade, or any other pretense whatever." It was also provided that "no State shall be represented in Congress by less than two, nor by more than seven Members." Again, it was provided that "no two or more States shall enter into any treaty, confederation, or alliance whatever between them without the consent of the United States in Congress assembled," and again it was provided that "no vessels of war shall be kept up in time of peace by any State, except such number only as shall be deemed necessary by the United States in Congress assembled, for the defense of such State or its trade; nor shall any body of forces be kept up by any State in time of peace, except such number only as in the judgment of the United States in Congress assembled shall be deemed requisite to garrison the forts necessary for the defense of such State."

Again, it was provided that "no State shall engage in any war without the consent of the United States in Congress assembled, unless such State be actually invaded by enemies * * * and the danger is so imminent as not to admit of a delay till the United States in Congress assembled can be consulted." Further, it was provided that "all charges of war, and all other expenses that may be incurred for the common defense and general welfare, and allowed by the United States in Congress assembled, shall be defrayed out of a common treasury which shall be supplied by the several States" proportionately as the Congress of the United States shall from time to time direct and appoint, and finally it was provided in Article IX: "The United States in Congress assembled shall have the sole and exclusive right and power of determining on peace or war" except in cases of invasion or imminent danger of invasion, and of "entering into treaties and alliances, provided that no treaty of commerce shall be made whereby the legislative power of the respective States shall be restrained from imposing such imposts and duties on foreigners as their own people are subjected to, or from prohibiting the exportation or importation of any species of goods or commodities whatsoever." And, further, it is provided that "the United States in Congress assembled shall also be the last resort on appeal in all disputes and differences now subsisting or that may hereafter arise between two or more States concerning boundary, jurisdiction, or any other cause whatever," which authority, it was provided, was to be by arbitration fully set out in the Articles of Confederation, and was to be "final and conclusive."

The Congress was further given the power "to build and equip a Navy, to agree upon the number of land forces, and to make requisitions from each State for its quota."

Such were some of the provisions of the Articles of Confederation, adopted November 15, 1777, and ratified by all of the 13 States, save Georgia, by their respective delegates July 9, 1778, and ratified by Georgia about two weeks later. Such was the compact of peace and friendship among the States until the adoption of the Constitution of the United States in a convention held for the purpose on the 17th of September, 1787, and ratified by the requisite number of States in June, 1788.

And what changes in the scheme of the league of States for "to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity" were made in the Constitution from that provided in the Articles of Confederation? Turn to Article I, section 10, and you there find "No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation." "No State shall, without the consent of Congress, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State or with a foreign power, or engage in war unless actually invaded or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay."

A Congress is provided, composed of two Houses, in which each State has equal representation in the one and proportionate representation in the other. The Congress is given power "to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water." "To raise and support armies." "To provide and maintain a Navy. To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces. To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions. To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States." "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof."

A Chief Executive is provided, elected by the States, not according to population alone, but by reason of the sovereignty of the State; each State has two electoral votes in addition to what it might have if the electoral vote were based on population alone. He is made Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.

A Supreme Court is provided, with "such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish," and the judicial power extends "to controversies between two or more States; between a State and a citizen of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States; and between a State or the citizens thereof and foreign States, citizens, or subjects."

This, Mr. President, is the plan adopted by the fathers of our country to provide peace on the North American Continent. This plan, conceived in the minds of the pioneers of democracy, has kept the peace of America for nearly a century and a half, except for the unfortunate Civil War, and that war would probably never have occurred had the right or absence of the right to secede been made clear in the Constitution. The framers of the Constitution and the authors of the Articles of Confederation had nothing similar to guide them, they had no experience of a great Republic, such as ours, to point the way. They had but to trust in the God of Nations to guide their intellects, circumscribed as the human understanding must be. They went out into the trackless ocean and uncharted seas and made the greatest human experiment in political government that has ever blessed the world, and while they groped in the dark with a divine faith in the wisdom and integrity of their purpose, we of to-day have the benefit of more than a century of the light of experience to guide us and the whole human race in the greatest governmental venture of the ages.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the fathers of the Republic have written out the chart and have pointed us the way to the peace of the world to-day, to-morrow, and forever. When they thus provided for the American States we were far away from the balance of the world. We had no steamships, no telegraphs nor cables, no wireless that flashes the happenings of the whole world through distance, and it was because of these things that George Washington warned the American States "to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world," and it was because of this that he directed the attention of America to the fact that—

> Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none or a very remote relation.
> Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collusions of her friendships or enmities.

It was because of our "detached and distant situation," as it then existed, that he wisely asked:

> Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

To those who would to-day say that America should not form a league of nations to preserve, maintain, and enforce the peace of the world I would say that conditions have changed, our situation has been altered, distance has been destroyed, and time has been annihilated; we do not longer occupy a position of aloofness and isolation from the balance of the world; we to-day have reached that position in our upward march that we are not only a great country and a wonderful Nation, but we are to-day a very large and important part of the whole world and of the whole human race.

And this leads me, sir, to say that we have not followed this advice at all times, neither does that advice conjure us not to enter into temporary alliances nor to stay out of the extraordinary vicissitudes of the world. And surely no one will say that the present European conditions are "ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations of her friendships or enmities."

I would direct attention to the fact that we entered into a temporary alliance with France to obtain our freedom and independence—our country was born out of an alliance with France, whose aid in the American Revolution was so timely; we entered into an agreement with England to prevent the French settlement of the great country beyond the Mississippi, and thereby made possible the great Louisiana Purchase from France. We entered into an agreement or alliance with England whereby we were able to announce and maintain the Monroe doctrine—we, by that doctrine, practically set up a protectorate over the American hemisphere—we committed ourselves, for our own protection, to the preservation of the sovereignty and integrity of the American countries in Central and South America—all foreign countries—and we have in this great world war formed an alliance with the great civilized nations of the earth against the central powers of Europe. So that to those who quote Washington's Farewell Address I reply, conditions have changed and our situation is altered; that this is no ordinary condition that might menace our peace by entrance into a league of nations, but it is an extraordinary condition out of which we seek to preserve and protect the peace, not only of America but of the children of men the world over.

It has been asked, "Would you be willing to arbitrate the Monroe doctrine?" Let me first ask, what is that doctrine and what stands behind it? The Monroe doctrine is merely the declaration of this Government that the American Continents are not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power, and that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their systems to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety, and that we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing any of the established, recognized governments of America, or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

This doctrine, enunciated by President Monroe December 2, 1823, could not have been maintained and enforced by the United States alone, and would never have been proclaimed even had it not been for the fact that the British Government, speaking through George Canning, its minister of foreign affairs, proposed to the United States that Great Britain and the United States should jointly announce that they could not see any South American territory transferred to any power "with indifference," and the British Government pledged itself to aid in the enforcement of this declaration. When President Monroe received this assurance he turned to Thomas Jefferson for advice, and Jefferson's reply to Monroe, upon which Monroe acted, shows that we have maintained the integrity of the Western Hemisphere and the peace and safety of the United States only by the acquiescence and assistance of Great Britain. Jefferson said:

> One nation, most of all, could disturb us in this pursuit; she now offers to lead, aid, and accompany us. By acceding to her proposition we detach her from the bands, bring her mighty weight into the scale of free government, and emancipate a continent at one stroke which might otherwise linger long in doubt and difficulty. Great Britain is the one nation which can do us the most harm of any one, or all, on earth; and with her on our side we need not fear the whole world. With her, then, we should most sedulously cherish a cordial friendship, and nothing would tend more to unite our affections than to be fighting once more side by side in the same cause.

From that day to this the British Navy has been our first line of defense, alike in our youthful weakness and our matured strength, and we have at last fought "side by side in the same cause"—the cause of liberty and freedom and civilization—the bonds of friendship have been strengthened; they have been cemented by the mingled blood of Briton and American, shed on a soil foreign alike to both, made sacred alike to each.

You ask, "Would we be willing under a league of nations to arbitrate the Monroe doctrine or questions that might arise under it?" I reply, sir, that there can be no such thing as arbitration of the Monroe doctrine. It is merely America's statement of her will or pleasure, but the enforcement of it might raise questions that would have to be settled by force, by diplomacy, or by arbitration; and I take it that if a league of nations for peace shall be formed that the principles enunciated in President Monroe's message are so clearly a statement of justice to the United States and to the other American countries over whom we single-handed and alone, with the friendly assurances of Great Britain as our sole hope of assistance, have stood guard that this statement of principle would be incorporated into any compact that may be entered into not only for the countries of the Western Hemisphere but for all countries of the world. If a league of nations shall be formed, the combined nations of earth would enunciate and promulgate a new Monroe doctrine—a Wilson doctrine—that all the allied nations of the world "could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing any free nations or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any power on earth in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the people of the world," or, to paraphrase the statement of the Monroe doctrine by President Roosevelt: "The doctrine is simply a statement of our very firm belief that the nations now existing on earth must be left to work out their own destinies amongst themselves, and that free countries are no longer to be regarded as the colonizing ground of any foreign power." Thus, Mr. President, if a league of nations shall be formed, instead of a doctrine for free peoples of the American Continent, upheld and maintained by the United States alone, we would substitute a broader doctrine for all the free peoples of the world, upheld and maintained by the combined civilized nations of the world who may enter into the league of nations; and the Monroe doctrine will be the safer, for that it would have more sponsers.

It is objected, Mr. President, that a league of nations to preserve and enforce peace must be backed by force, and that we would have to make war to restore peace. I agree that to have a league that will be effective there must be force to back up the decrees of civilization and justice. We have our police to put down crime and disorder in our cities, we have our sheriffs and constables to put down crime and disorder in our States, and they are armed, that the citizens generally may go unarmed and safe. We would need a limited national police force, and we would need an international police force to preserve the peace of the world and to enforce the decrees and judgments of the courts of the international league; but, sir, with armies reduced and navies dismantled, and an absolute prohibition to the countries of the world of the manufacture and having more than a supply of arms and munitions to meet the reasonable immediate needs of any country for its purely domestic peace and safety—that to be determined by the parliament of the world—a very small quota of men from each of the contracting nations would be able to bring law and order and obedience to the findings and decrees of the league of nations should any nation attempt to break the peace of the world.

It was objected by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that to raise this quota for service in international fields conscription would have to be resorted to. That, Mr. President, in my judgment, is not correct. There are enough of adventurous men—soldiers of fortune in every land on earth—to make up the quota that such country would be called upon to supply, and especially would this be true if the standing army was small and the pay increased to such an amount as would be attractive, and with greatly reduced military and naval forces every nation could pay its men liberally. But, sir, even if the draft should be resorted to, I say that it is far better to carefully select 50,000 men and compel them to serve for a few years to preserve the peace of the world than to be called upon to draft millions upon millions of men to restore peace after war with all its horrors and hardships has drenched the world in blood.

Mr. President, I have spoken too long, but I shall not be in this body much longer. I fear that the treaty of peace, embodying a reasonable and proper league of nations for the preservation of peace, will not be concluded and submitted to the Senate for ratification before my term of service shall have expired. I have spoken from the depths of my heart; I have tried to express the hope of the world; I have tried to utter the prayer of humanity; I have tried to aid, in my feeble way, in pointing out the path marked out by the teachings of Him who came to save and not destroy; I have tried to voice the sentiments of the plain people everywhere, who see in war, in most cases, a useless sacrifice of the children of God on earth.

I can not close my remarks without expressing my sorrow and disappointment at the utterances of some of the most distinguished Members of this body. As I have noted the great learning and scholarly attainments and giant intellects of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has so long led the Republican Party, and at times the Nation in our foreign relations in the Senate, and of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], who has in days past so ably and creditably represented my country and his as Secretary of State; as I have sat in rapt admiration of the massive intellects and dynamic force of appealing oratory of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]; as I have noted these first two gentlemen advocating procrastination, and the other two not only advocating procrastination but declaring that a league of nations for the preservation of peace can not and should not be adopted, I wonder why, in this supreme hour of the world, the wonderful endowments of these gentlemen could not be used for construction rather than for destruction, why they do not use their great powers to build up rather than tear down, why they do not aid rather than criticize. They have an opportunity, this whole body has an opportunity, the Nation, the world, has an opportunity that was never afforded before to hasten the coming of the kingdom of God on earth.

There is a tide in the affairs of men, which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune; omitted, all the voyage of their life is bound in shallows and in miseries. On such a full sea are we now afloat, and we must take the current when it serves or lose our ventures.

I warn the gentlemen in this body that this is no ordinary political question. I warn the gentlemen that the American people will not look with favor upon any man who would play politics in the people's blood. I do not question the motive that actuates those who oppose the advanced thought of the age—who assert opposition to the policies of Wilson and Lloyd George and Clemenceau, as expressed at the greatest feast since the Passover—but the American people, the people of the world, the God of the universe will hold them responsible if they place obstacles and obstructions in the way of saving the world from a repetition of its anguish of the past four years.

ADDRESS BY ASSOCIATE JUSTICE CLARKE.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on Monday last there was ordered printed in the RECORD, on motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], an address by Hon. Albert J. Beveridge, at one time a member of this body, on the subject of a league of nations. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD an address on the same subject by Hon. John H. Clarke, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered before the American Bar Association in the month of August last. I submit this address at this time, Mr. President, because it seems to me exceedingly appropriate, in connection with the eloquent and inspiring address to which we have just listened from the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. POLLOCK].

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A CALL TO SERVICE.

THE DUTY OF THE BENCH AND BAR TO AID IN SECURING A LEAGUE OF NATIONS TO ENFORCE THE PEACE OF THE WORLD.

(By Hon. John H. Clarke, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.)

In January the last week of August seems so far away, and it is so difficult to deny Mr. Whitelock anything upon which he has really set his heart, that not long since I awoke to find myself face to face with an outstanding promise to address you here this evening, but without anything formulated or even formulating in my mind which seemed in the least likely to prove of interest to you.

As I sat in my study, confronted by this situation, my eye fell upon the forty-odd volumes of the reports of the American Bar Association, and as I reflected upon the hours and days of intense and intelligent labor which is there buried—I weigh my words—I forthwith determined not to discuss any of the recondite problems of the law—any of those things which Stephen Leacock would say lie "behind the beyond"—but that I would speak to you of some phase of the subject which fills the minds and hearts and souls of us all.

And so my subject has become, the duty of the bench and bar of the country to awake, as it is not yet awake, I am sure, to the responsibility which the great war has cast upon us, as an influential and learned profession, of putting forth all of the power and influence which we possess for the purpose of securing, as the most important result of the war, the establishment of "a league of nations to enforce the peace of the world."

I am quite aware that there is nothing new that I can say upon this subject, which has been the dream of mankind for centuries and the theme of wide discussion for many recent years, but the selection is made because of the conviction on my part that new conditions have made the times ripe for such a league and because I believe that, next after the winning of the war, the matter of first importance to our country and to mankind is the securing of a peace so guarded by new sanctions that the immeasurable calamity of modern war, through which we are now passing, may not again return to desolate the world.

I shall not address myself, gentlemen of the bench and bar, to the expert international lawyers among you, but rather to those of the rank and file of the profession, upon whom will fall the duty of creating and giving leadership to that public opinion of our country, without which it will not be possible to take this fateful step forward in the organization of the international relations of the world. The detail of the constitution and organization of such a league will be for statesmen and international lawyers, but the securing of the acceptance of the principle involved and the answering of the objections to it will be for the general practitioners of the land, trusted counselors that they are of their neighbors in all matters of great public concern.

Fundamental to all that I shall say are these assumptions: That the German autocratic government shall be beaten to its knees and shall be definitely convinced that never again can a war of aggression be profitable in this modern world; that its military and naval establishments, as well as those of the other great nations, shall be greatly reduced and their arming for the future be greatly and strictly limited; and that after the war the German people, chastened as they will be in spirit and in purpose, shall be invited to share in a just, even in a generous, peace, without which the permanent peace of the world can never be secured.

Public international law, as we all know, first assumed definite form in the writings of the great philosophical jurists of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. It is made up of a blending of moral principles—of natural justice and reason—with the customs and practices of the more enlightened nations of the world in their dealings one with another.

With such an origin, naturally, some of the principles of this law had become more clearly defined than others prior to the outbreak of the present war, but none had been more generally accepted and observed than this: That the open seas are not the territory of any nation and are not subject to the jurisdiction of any power, but that they are the public highway of all nations, provided by God and nature for carrying on the business and intercourse of the world. It was determined with equal definiteness that the open or high seas comprise all that part of every ocean which lies without a line drawn parallel to the shore and distant 1 marine league from low-water mark. To that boundary the jurisdiction of the sovereign of the adjacent shore extends, but beyond it all waters are the common property of all nations. Long prior to this war it had also become the perfectly settled law of nations that private citizens of neutral States should be allowed to go to and fro on this ocean highway on peaceful errands in neutral ships or even in belligerent ships, not men-of-war, as safely in time of war as in time of peace, subject only to visit and search and to the law of blockade.

The German Government had frequently and solemnly assented to all this as perfectly established international law, but nevertheless, in arrogant defiance, it proclaimed exclusive dominion over more than a hundred thousand square miles of the open ocean adjacent to the British Isles and, without notice or mercy, proceeded, to the limit of its power, to destroy every neutral ship, its passengers and cargo, which had the temerity to enter the area thus proscribed.

The right of every nation to remain neutral during the war and the duty of every belligerent to respect such neutrality has long been a rule of the customary or unwritten law of nations. When to this we add that in 1839 and again in 1870 the Kingdom of Prussia bound itself by solemn treaties to guarantee the neutrality of Belgium, and that in 1899 and again in 1907 the Imperial German Government, by Hague conventions, bound itself in equally solemn agreement with many nations to respect that neutrality, the utter lawlessness of the invasion of Belgium would stand confessed even if the chancellor of the German Empire had not publicly and scoffingly proclaimed it to be in open defiance of international law. "German faith," not "Punic faith," for all time to come will be the world symbol for international perfidy and dishonor.

In a Hague convention the German Government and its allies agreed with the other civilized nations that in case of war undefended towns or villages should not be bombarded in any manner whatever; that in sieges and bombardments measures should be taken to spare as far as possible buildings dedicated to religion, art, science, or charitable purposes, and hospitals in which the sick and wounded are collected for treatment; and the use of poison or poisoned weapons, projectiles, and materials calculated to cause unnecessary suffering were expressly prohibited.

And yet, further flouting this law which it had shared in making, the German Government has now for four years persistently bombarded undefended towns and villages, used poison gases, and selected libraries, churches, and hospitals as special targets for destruction.

These instances, a few from many, will suffice to recall to us all how completely international law has broken down under the stress of the great war. It has been trampled upon as ruthlessly by the central powers as it was by Napoleon a century ago; and in presence of the international anarchy which is the result men who prefer reality to self-delusion must be convinced, reluctantly but definitely convinced, that moral sanctions are not enough to restrain great nations engaged in war within the boundaries prescribed by civilization in time of peace, and that unless the coming settlement is to prove but an angry truce, a time of preparation for another war, the most pressing problem now before us is how we may furnish new and effective sanctions which will cause international law to be respected and obeyed as fully in time of war as it has been heretofore obeyed in time of peace.

But what is this next war to be?

Military writers of Europe, obsessed with the belief that it is impossible for the future to improve upon the past and that another general European war is inevitable, are already busy discussing what its character shall be, and, in barest outline, this is the picture which they draw:

The Prussian military system, adopted by the other nations in this war, will be continued in preparation for the next and will result in creating armies of unprecedented size. So organized Russia should yield an army of 35,000,000 of fighting men. Germany and Austria 25,000,000, Great Britain, France, and Italy 25,000,000; and to go no further, our Army should exceed 20,000,000 of trained soldiers. To support such armies the industries of all of these countries must be organized primarily for purposes of war and the best energies of their peoples must be devoted to devising means for the destruction of human lives. Women must be conscripted for industry as men for fighting, and noncombatants will be destroyed as ruthlessly by other nations as they have been by Germany in the present war. Great guns now used by thousands will be numbered by tens of thousands, and machine guns by millions. Submarines will infest every sea and hundreds of thousands of airplanes and dirigible ships will fill the air. Chemists confidently declare that, released from the restraints of civilization, poisonous gases will be devised which, used by aerial flotillas and by guns of constantly increasing range, will destroy whole armies and cities in a single night. And, finally, revolting though the thought of it be, other nations, driven by desperation to the use of disease germs, now hinted at as the lowest depth to which Germany has sunk, will let loose a scourge upon the world, the ultimate effect of which upon the human race no man can measure.

The mind turns away in horror from this prospect of another war which would involve the destruction of modern civilization, if not of the human race. And yet in the presence of the experiences of the past four years, of the unprecedented extent and merciless ferocity of the present war, it would be rash to say that this picture has been overdrawn, that it is not a probable description of the abyss that lies before us if measures be not taken to prevent the coming of another war.

Three solutions have been proposed to avert this measureless calamity:

The first, made in Germany, aims to establish a consolidated empire extending from the North Sea to the Persian Gulf, sufficient in extent to be self-sustaining in time of war and peace and with vassal populations great enough in numbers to support a German military establishment which it is believed could dominate the other nations, separated as they are, and thus be able to impose a permanent even though a sullen peace upon the world. To state this is to reject it.

The second, advocated sometimes by combinations of statesmen and men of business and sometimes by labor unions, proposes to strip the central powers of their military and naval strength and of their colonies, to impose upon them huge indemnities for the crimes against civilization of which they are so clearly guilty, and then by boycotts to continue against them a trade war after the present war, and thus to hold these powerful nations in permanent poverty and thereby in an unrighteous, which can not be an enduring, peace.

The third is a league of nations to enforce the peace of the world. The aim of such a league is to substitute conference for strife, justice and peace for cruelty and war, and in the happy phrase of President Eliot to bring "Peace on earth to men of good will."

This dream of mankind for centuries has been brought within the grasp of practical statesmanship by the declaration of President Wilson, assuredly voicing the desire and purpose of our whole great Nation, that the period of American isolation has passed, and that we are ready to unite with the other nations after the war in an international concert which shall hold the world at peace and render it impossible that such a catastrophe as is now upon us shall overwhelm us again.

Ladies and gentlemen, I have dwelt thus at length upon the necessity for a league of nations and upon the desperate alternatives of our failing to obtain it, not because I think that your choice, or that of the country, could be different from that which has been made for us by our President, but because when we shall come to the adoption of the league as a practical agency in international government such grave difficulties must be met that we shall be obliged to recur for encouragement and resolution, perhaps again and again, to what the result will be if we reject this which now seems the last, best hope of the world—and to that end we should keep it vividly in mind.

For us, as a Nation, there are grave constitutional questions involved, which it will be the duty of the bar to argue to a conclusion with the people and in the courts, but of which it would be obviously improper for me to speak beyond recalling that the Supreme Court has declared that the Constitution is not a strait-jacket by which the past is to be imposed upon the present, and that it is not a mathematical formula of undeviating application of public affairs. I may be permitted to add that it is the result of the decisions of that court that the Constitution is a working charter for a living Government, which has proved in experience perfectly adaptable to conditions of life and society of which its framers never dreamed.

For other governments there are questions of dependent nationalities; the extent to which existing alliances may be continued without being inconsistent with such a league; and what prospects of fair treatment the nations failing in the war would have in its councils for many years to come.

There are difficulties for all the nations in determining what the membership of the league shall be, and what the system of law which shall govern its deliberations. There must be delegation, if not surrender, of power, a difficult thing with men and nations, and a new restraint must be put upon national ambitions and pride. But above all there must be cultivated here and throughout the world a larger sympathy and vision—no less than an international mind. We must learn to look beyond frontiers and to find our national welfare in the general welfare of the world.

Yes; the difficulties in forming the league, in devising a constitution for it and in putting it into practical operation are many and grave, but they are not greater than were met and solved by our forefathers when they formed the league of the thirteen original States, framed and adopted our Constitution, and established this indissoluble Union of indestructible States. The problem before us now is more complex and, if possible, more fateful, but it is in character the same, and with this experience to guide us, ours is the Nation which least of all should be discouraged or dismayed. The crisis is unprecedented in the history of mankind and the difficulties in meeting it, here, as on the field of battle, constitute a challenge to all that is strongest and best in the free nations of the world.

But what is this league of nations to be?

The representative men of many nations are in singular accord in the conclusion that an international organization will not be accepted which goes further than to imperatively provide that war shall not be commenced until the subject in dispute shall have been submitted to an investigation by an impartial tribunal and its merits reported upon, with a further delay after such report, for new negotiations and for the public opinion of the nations involved to assert itself, informed as it would be by the disinterested investigation and opinion of the league.

It is widely believed that rarely would a nation assume the moral odium of going to war against the impartial conclusion of such a report, but it is also believed that in the present development of world opinion upon the subject the governments would not consent to unite in an agreement to enforce the acceptance of such a report upon an unwilling and dissatisfied nation.

In this belief a group of distinguished American statesmen, lawyers and publicists, with former President Taft as their leader, have rendered a great public service by formulating a constitution or convention for such a league, which may serve as a starting point for discussion now and when the time shall come for settling the terms of the treaty of peace.

The fundamental principles of this constitution are only two and they are very simple:

The first is that no nation which enters the league shall make war upon any other member until the question in dispute between them shall have been submitted to an international court, yet to be constituted, if the question in dispute is a justiciable one, or to a council of conciliation if the question involved is nonjusticiable in nature. The disputed question shall be investigated, with every assistance from the parties in the way of evidence and argument which the tribunal may desire, and a decision or report on the merits of the controversy shall be rendered in a written opinion, which shall be published. Such decision or report shall be published within a year after the case is submitted, and neither party shall comence war against the other within six months after it is rendered.

The acceptance of this principle should present little difficulty, for 30 nations have already accepted it in treaties with our Government which with great propriety have been officially termed "Treaties for the promotion of peace." These treaties have all been executed since August, 1913, and all of the important nations at war have joined in them excepting Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Turkey—a significant circumstance in fixing the blame for precipitating upon the world the calamity of the present war.

The second principle of the proposed league is that if any member shall commence war upon another without submitting to the preliminary investigation and decision or report provided for, all of the others shall unite in the use of their economic resources and, if necessary, their military power to punish the recalcitrant member for violation of its pledged international faith.

Four years ago the first of these principles marked the extreme verge to which nations could be induced to go in the interest of peace, but the harsh teaching which they have received in the hard school of experience during the past four years has brought the responsible statesmen of the great nations to such a new sense of social duty and of international responsibility that the incomparable statement of President Wilson in favor of coercion to secure the peace of the world has called forth acceptances of it in principle from leading statesmen of Great Britain, France, Italy, Austria-Hungary, and for what it is worth from a chancellor of the German Empire, as well as from leaders of many of the lesser and neutral States.

The constitution proposed contains many administrative provisions, but these two are the fundamental principles on which it proceeds. It is to be observed that the agreement to resort to economic coercion and to war is only to compel delay until there shall be investigation and decision or report, and that it does not extend to enforcing such decision or report when either shall be rendered. After the requisite delay, without incurring the odium of violating any covenant of the league, the savage tribunal of war would still remain open for any nation which should choose to resort to it.

While such a league would be a great advance toward permanent peace and should be accepted if a better can not be secured, yet personally I prefer the counsel of those who would strive to have the covenant of the league provide not only for delay until there shall be investigation and decision or report, but also that all of the resources, military and economic, of the members shall be used to compel its acceptance when made and obedience to all of its commands.

This, not only because I do not share the confidence which many have that a year's delay would suffice to prevent war by cooling fierce national hatreds, such, for instance, as exist among the Balkan States or within the Austro-Hungarian Empire, or by calming national ambition such as that of Germany, which has been half a century in cultivation and development, but also because I believe that the world is ready for this longer and final step forward toward permanent international peace.

Millions of men will return to their homes in every one of the important nations which should be members of the league, convinced by the lapse into savagery which they have seen with their own eyes, that trial by battle is as irrational a manner of settling a national as a private quarrel, and that the nearest approach to securing a just decision of a dispute by human agency is to be found in a council of conciliation or a court selected from the wisest and best of the citizenship of the advanced nations of the world. In the free nations these men will return to a deserved and dominating leadership as the saviors of free government, and in the enemy countries they will be all that will remain not discredited by defeat. Yes, I would confidently put my faith in the men who have seen the most of war, not at a distance, but in the trenches, "on the red edge of battle," as competent and willing to enforce a conclusion which makes for the enduring peace of the world.

Neither do I share the confidence which many persons have that our experience with our Supreme Court in settling disputes between States is conclusive evidence of what may fairly be expected of a similarly constituted international court dependent wholly on moral sanctions for the enforcing of its decrees. Not to dwell upon the futility of the Dred Scott decision, so hopefully relied upon to avert civil war, or the unfortunate party divisions of the judges of the Electoral Commission of 1877, it is sufficient to say that it may be convincingly advanced that the Supreme Court from very early times to decisions rendered in the current year has steadily declined to take jurisdiction over questions falling within the scope of the powers of the political—the executive and legislative—departments of our Government, and that it has been from political, not from justiciable, disputes that most of the past wars have sprung.

Here, if there were no other, is furnished to the bench and bar ample opportunity to serve our country in assisting our neighbors in determining whether this fateful league shall be one merely to enforce delay and investigation, or one the decisions of which shall have a sanction which will make them the accepted and obeyed international law of the world.

But whether this wider or the narrower scope shall be given to the league, the chief opportunity for service on the part of our profession will be in counsel with our fellow citizens as to its constitutionality and its membership, as to the wisdom of our country entering into any covenant—an entangling alliance it will be called—to engage in war it may be, to settle a quarrel which, it will be urged, may be no concern of ours, and as to the answers which should be given, to objections which will range from those of the hopeless and timid who think progress impossible and that future wars are inevitable, to the Chauvanists and selfish who declare that war is not an evil, but is a discipline necessary for the development of all that is best in the physical and spiritual qualities of mankind.

To the objection that we should not expose ourselves to the risk of becoming a party to the future wars of others, the sufficient answer is that it is no longer possible for us to avoid being a party to them. For three years our Government strove with indomitable resolution to avoid participation in the present war, protesting, reasoning, warning, that there was a limit to our endurance of injury and insult, but with the result at last that we were obliged to take up arms "to conquer or submit." These years of experience have demonstrated that the modern world is so knit together that our frontiers touch those of every other important nation; that the innocent must so suffer from future wars; that self-respecting neutrality has become impossible in any general war; and that all wars are likely to become general, and that therefore it has become the chief concern of all the peace-loving nations of the world that all war shall cease. Unless the league shall utterly fail of its purpose, membership in it will involve a covenant on our part to join the honorable nations of the world to protect ourselves and them from nations which are predatory and false, and waiving aside all higher motives, it is the part of prudence if we must make war to make it for a just cause and in the company of honest nations.

Shall Germany be an accepted member of this league of peace? Yes; by all means, yes! and Austria-Hungary also, and necessarily the six other great powers of the world—France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Russia, and the United States—for without all of these the league would not be one to enforce the peace of the world at all, but an alliance offensive and defensive to prepare for the next war. Alliances and coalitions of nations rarely have long lives. Great Britain and Germany were allies in the Napoleonic wars and France was their enemy; Great Britain, France, and Turkey were allies in the Crimean war and Russia was their enemy; Germany and Austria were enemies at war in 1866; Russia and Japan, allies in this war, were enemies in 1905; the friendship of Great Britain for France and Russia is of recent origin, and Italy was in terms an ally of Germany and Austria when the present war began. The teaching of this reference to the experience of a hundred years is plain. If Germany and Austria shall be excluded from the league, all of the ingenuity and resource and power which they possess will forthwith be used to strengthen their alliance and to sow discord in and weaken that of their adversaries, and all Europe, divided again into hostile groups, will inevitably return to the old suspicions and to rivalry in arms and armaments in preparation for another war.

This also must be accepted as fundamental, that no peace can be enduring which is not a just peace and that no league can be permanent which does not afford a reasonable prospect of just treatment to every member of it.

To exclude the German and Austrian people from the league, to attempt to impoverish two such great nations and to hold them permanently poor, possessed as they have proved themselves to be of approximately one-half of the military power of the world, would be to invite new coalitions and alliances and would render inevitable that next war which the prophets of evil so confidently predict.

Equally unfortunate would it be to confine the membership of the league to the great powers. The presence in the league of the secondary and now largely neutral powers, including from America at least Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, will be clearly necessary to persuade Germany and Austria to enter it, for otherwise they would see themselves opposed in the league, as they are now on the field of battle, by the six other great powers, and it would be futile to try to persuade them that for many years to come they could expect from such a court that impartiality and freedom from prejudice so necessary to securing a just settlement of any disputed questions by conference and argument. But in such larger group suggestions of disinterested fairness and sympathy would be possible on which all of the present combatants might confidently rely for an impartial hearing and a just decision.

It is just as necessary to the success of the league that every member nation shall believe that it will receive just treatment as that it actually shall receive it when the time of test shall come. We must aim at a constructive and healing peace—not at an angry, sullen truce which will lead to further war.

There is evidence enough of opposition in this view abroad in the world to make the cultivation of it an opportunity for fruitful service by the members of our profession, natural leaders that they are of that public opinion of our country, to which the responsible statesmen of the allied powers have already shown the greatest deference, as it has been formulated on this subject by President Wilson, in statements which it is not exaggeration to say have been "heard 'round the world."

Shall all questions in dispute between nations be submitted to the league, or shall those relating to vital interests, to independence, or to national honor be excepted, as they have been in arbitration treaties of the past? Or, differently and specifically, are we ready to submit the validity of the Monroe doctrine or the necessity for our going to war with France or Great Britain, with Argentina or Brazil, to the decision of a body in which we should have no greater vote than each of the seven other great powers would have?

Here is the test of our faith—the measure of our confidence in that international tribunal of peace and justice which we are recommending to the other nations of the world.

Not until our allies and friends shall become as internationally faithless as the Germans are can we be called upon by the league to make war upon them, and that is a contingency which we refuse to consider.

Do we lack confidence in the moral basis of the Monroe doctrine? There is one of us who does not. Whatever infirmity may have been thought to be in a doctrine of such comprehensive scope when it was announced has disappeared in the experience of almost a century in which it has preserved all America from sharing in the conditions which precipitated the conflagration in Europe and South America from the untoward fate which the partition of Africa has brought upon that unhappy continent. The noble conception which set apart this hemisphere to development under institutions of its own creating, which cut it off from the intrigues and jealousies of Europe, and which, insuring it from alien influences, has made possible the development of the strong and free States which have emerged one after the other to the south of us has so justified itself that the doctrine could confidently be submitted for approval to any tribunal which such a league would constitute. We all submit our private differences, involving our lives, our fortunes, and our honor, to domestic tribunals, and many of us with equal confidence often submit our rights to the determination of the tribunals of foreign States. Why should we prefer the gun and the torch for the settlement of public controversies? Does the cynical definition of a question of honor still hold true, as one which men refuse to solve by reason?

But I can not pursue objections further in an address which I am admonished must be short. Their name is legion; they will come from the genuine and from the false in every part of our land, and I am pleading with my professional associates that we accept it as our patriotic duty to be ready in every town and hamlet to answer them and to advocate the taking of this step forward toward the realization of the reign of law, without which the allied nations will have fought this desperate war in vain.

The President calls us to this service in his declaration that "mere agreements may not make peace secure. It will be absolutely necessary that a force be created as a guarantor of the permanency of the settlement so much greater than the force of any nation now engaged or any alliance hitherto formed or projected that no nation, no probable combination of nations, could face or withstand it. If the peace presently to be made is to endure, it must be a peace made secure by the organized major force of mankind."

The young men going forward to take their places in the line of battle call us to this service. In every land, with a unanimity which makes it all but a battle cry, they declare that for them this is a war to end all wars; that it shall not cease until the authors of it are punished and freedom and justice and peace are made secure in the world; and that never again shall such a calamity return to desolate the earth. These men will return to dominate, I repeat, to deservedly dominate, the governments which they have saved, and they will not be balked in the accomplishment of their purpose.

But, nevertheless, it is believed that there is as yet no such general thinking or discussion of this vital subject throughout our land as is necessary to the creating of a public opinion sufficient to sustain the President when he shall press it upon the attention of the nations as the most important provision of the treaty of peace—and assuredly there is no agency for the creating of such public opinion comparable to the bar of the United States.

Ladies and gentlemen, the achievement of our country since we entered the war has been very great. Overwhelmed by the magnitude and horror of the struggle, the European nations did not realize the ultimate purpose of the evil genius of the German Government until, in accepting the challenge of the central powers, President Wilson put a new face upon the war and raised it to a new level by declaring, what all the world instantly recognized as true, that this is the fateful, final contest between autocracy and freedom; that it is a war on Germany's part to restore the dominion of kingly government throughout the earth, and on our part and that of our allies to make the world "safe for democracy." This definition alone, watchword and ideal of the free nations that it has become, has proved a moral inspiration to them all equal to the winning of many battles.

When the failure of Russia released great armies for use upon the western front, how splendidly did our country respond to meet the crisis thus precipitated in the fate of freedom and of mankind! By a marvel of energy and organization, a million of men, since proved to be as good soldiers as any in the world, were safely and swiftly transported over 3,000 miles of stormy and pirate-infested seas to meet the savage onslaught upon heroic France. They met and turned back the tide of invasion, and with our brave allies made the Marne "a river more fateful than the Rubicon," and gave us sure promise of abundant military glory yet to come.

But a greater honor lies beyond. When the war shall end and the roar of the great guns shall cease there is reserved the supreme distinction of all history for the nation which shall have the inspiration of vision and the greatness of soul to lead the other nations of the world out of the valley of the shadow of death of recurring wars into the haven of enduring peace. Pray God that nation may be ours!

VALIDATION OF WAR CONTRACTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Hitchcock bill was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, as has been stated, and reported by a majority of the committee and the unanimous vote of those present, and therefore took its place upon the calendar. The fact that the committee took such action, and afterwards the inconsistent one of favorably considering a bill largely different in its character and scope needs a word of passing explanation.

The Hitchcock bill was very carefully considered by the subcommittee; indeed, the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] does his full duty upon every committee of which he is a member. The Senator gives his best thought and his best work to every task that is imposed upon him by his senatorial duties; and it is no reflection upon him that the bill now before the Senate was recommended in its place, but the attention of the committee was called to some of the operating features of the proposed measure, which convinced me that the bill which was offered as a substitute for the measure advocated by the Senator from Nebraska, and which the committee subsequently reported as a substitute for the House bill was, as an operating measure, not only a more effective but perhaps the only effective one of the two.

Mr. President, the subject matter of this bill is composed of a large number of items; that is to say, of different contracts—contracts executed improperly, contracts written but not executed, and oral contracts. It also embodies a geographical condition, these contracts being spread over a large portion of the United States, and involving a detail of production comprehending practically every element essential to the necessary prosecution of the war.

There is no question that these contracts should ordinarily have been signed, and signed in the manner required by the statutes. As an abstract proposition, no one can gainsay this. The statutes of the United States necessarily require care in the execution of contracts calling for an expenditure of public money and in accordance with formulas deemed by Congress to be essential to the public welfare and protection. These were not so executed, and I think for the best of reasons. When engaged in a great war, when in the midst of a great offensive, when conditions crowd upon each other with tremendous rapidity, and when emergencies arise requiring the utmost expedition to meet them, the department would have been false to the country and to itself if it had done otherwise than to act as the emergency required, notwithstanding the necessary disregard of statutory requirements. To have done otherwise might have involved the country in disaster; and I do not think it is fair to reflect upon the action of the department in the making of these contracts in view of these conditions.

There are times, Mr. President, when to follow the law may mean disaster; there are times when to disregard it and take the chances is the highest form of patriotism; and I am satisfied that the course pursued by the War Department with regard to the great, the overwhelming majority of these contracts was the only one to take, and without which the country, indeed, the allies, might have suffered very seriously. And because, Mr. President, they shouldered this responsibility, we should applaud them.

On the other hand, the contractees, men and corporations, who took the chances and came to the help of the Government under these circumstances are entitled to our gratitude and to our thanks; and the least we can do is to save them from the loss with which they are now confronted, and to do it as expeditiously as possible. So that the situation is an unavoidable one. If anybody is to blame for it, it is the nation or the nations responsible for the war. It is not to be attributed to any lack of conscientiousness upon the part of public officials or to any disregard of the law, but to the necessity of the situation, which is said to know no law.

Nor, Mr. President, am I impressed with the idea that the War Department, in its transaction of the public business during the last two eventful years, should be subject to no general criticism of dishonesty or laxity in the performance of its public duties. This department has been intrusted with the expenditure of somewhere in the neighborhood of twenty or twenty-five billions of dollars, the largest sum of money ever intrusted to any department in this country or any other.

There may have been, and probably are, instances—it would be remarkable if it were not so—where men engaged in the public service have, directly or indirectly, profited by their positions. It may be—it would be singular indeed if, under the temptations everywhere surrounding them, in view of the enormous amounts of money at their disposal and the opportunities coming their way—some official here and there did not yield to the surrounding temptations and fall by the wayside. I do not know of any individual instance myself; but, as I say, I shall be immensely surprised if numbers of them are not developed as these contracts are considered and allowed or rejected.

Mr. President, I want to say as a general fact that in the management of this great enterprise, from its commencement to its successful termination, speaking broadly and generally, the War Department has administered the affairs of the Government with honesty, with efficiency, and with success. It is entitled to, and should receive, the warm thanks and gratitude of the people of the United States; and, because here and there a man is under suspicion, I do not think that the Secretary and his able assistants should be subject to a reflection resulting from these individual instances, however well founded they may be. In other words, I am willing to trust the War Department, which made these contracts, with the duty of adjusting them and making appropriate settlements. Indeed, I do not think any other department is so competent to do it, or any other commission which we may provide for or which the President may appoint.

The purpose of this bill is to provide for the settlement of contracts, not their adjudication. It is to provide for the setting aside of those statutory requirements, the nonobservance of which invalidates the contract. It is very much as though you and I were face to face with a contract which we had made and which for some reason was invalid, but which nevertheless we entered into in good faith in an emergency and which, therefore, should be recognized. Now, who are the best people to consider that situation if our minds run in the same direction? Who besides we, who are parties to the contract, should interfere, or can interfere, in the absence of controversy? I do not think, Mr. President, that there will be much controversy with regard to the bona fides of these transactions. I do not see how there can be. If a man has a contract irregularly executed, or not executed at all, but upon which nevertheless he has acted, there is no ground for adjudication but for recognition and for action upon such recognition; and this brings me, Mr. President, to that feature of the Hitchcock bill which my better-informed judgment has forced me to reject. I refer to that provision of the bill which creates a commission and refers all these contracts to it for adjustment.

The idea is an excellent one, and if but half a dozen, or even a hundred or a thousand contracts were involved it might be the better one; but I am afraid, Mr. President, that in practical operation it will prove to be not only unsatisfactory but delusive, and that instead of granting a remedy it will virtually interpose an obstacle to the ultimate determination of these very insistent matters.

Now, let us see.

It was stated here yesterday afternoon by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] that the Assistant Secretary of War had informed him yesterday morning that there were 6,000 of these contracts, involving $1,766,000,000. The State of Colorado was admitted into the Union on the 1st of August, 1876, or 43 years ago. Its Federal district court has been one of the busiest in the land, and the amount of business it has transacted is enormous; yet I think its general docket numbers scarcely exceed 6,000 up to this time. The Supreme Court of the United States has been in existence since the Constitution was adopted. I think its general docket number is under 20,000, although it has been doing business for a century and a quarter. Six thousand contract cases, Mr. President, present to the mind a number the magnitude of which it does not fully comprehend, except upon reflection; and when these 6,000 contracts represent an average of $294,333 apiece in amount, then the number of the contracts assumes additional dignity and importance because of the average amounts they involve. Of course, many of them involve far more and many far less than this average; but I undertake to say that it would be difficult to conceive of an aggregation of 6,000 controverted cases, the average of which are nearly $300,000 apiece, except the one which we here are considering.

Mr. President, how long would it take a commission doing its duty between the Government on the one side and the contractors on the other to dispose of these 6,000 cases? First, they must investigate the facts concerning the execution of the agreement—the manner, in other words, in which the contract was evolved—and the circumstances surrounding it; second, the amount of money to be allowed as a fair adjustment upon its recognition. How long will each case take? The average case of importance tried in the courts requires more than one day. There are 300 working days in a year; and if this commission were able to dispose of one case per day, or 300 cases per year, it would have to be in session for 20 years before the 6,000 contracts would be disposed of.

It is true that the Hitchcock bill provides for the appointment of regional boards of examiners; but these regional boards have not the power of determining upon the facts. They take testimony, and the board or the commission, in order to acquaint itself of the facts, must read that testimony, must digest it, and then pass upon it.

Suppose that the commission tried two cases a day; there is 10 years. Ten cases a day would take 2 years; 20 cases a day would require 12 months after the commission is appointed to dispose of these 6,000 cases, and of course that is an absolute impossibility.

To my mind, therefore, the creation of a tribunal of any sort to handle exigent matters of such tremendous scope, comprehending so many items and so much money, would be a practical denial of justice to the holders of these claims against the Government.

On the other hand, the War Department has its machinery already in operation, and only awaiting congressional action to go ahead with this important business and transact it as expeditiously as possible. Up to the time that the question of the validity of these contracts was raised and determined adversely, they were proceeding, and proceeding very expeditiously, to dispose of the matters. The Senator having charge of the bill yesterday inserted, at page 2289 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and following, an outline of the staff of the commissions or boards, or whatever they may be called, which have already been provided for, and which, upon the enactment of this measure, can in their respective jurisdictions take hold and dispose of these claims.

I am willing to trust the Secretary of War, I am willing to trust the boards, the commissions, and the individuals that have been selected for the purpose of transacting this very important business. I know that with the possible exceptions that may occur, the great body of these men are just as anxious to serve the Government and just as honest as you or I.

Mr. President, in a matter of this sort, time is of the utmost importance. As lawyers say, it is of the essence of the situation. Delays are expensive, not only to those having claims against the Government but to the Government itself. Every day that these claims remain undisposed of is an added expense of millions of dollars to the Government of the United States. In France alone there are claims involving over three-quarters of a billion of dollars—claims which, in my judgment, are not affected by the statutory requirements relating to the execution of contracts in the United States; claims needing adjustment there and here to save from bankruptcy men and corporations who have tried to help the Government, and have taken these chances; claims the settlement of which is necessary to the continued employment of labor in this country; claims the justice of which is beyond doubt in most cases; claims the settlement of which is essential to the welfare of the Government and to those who hold them.

That being so, let us give jurisdiction to that tribunal whose machinery will enable it to act upon these things at once, and have them all practically determined and disposed of within the next four or five months. That is beneficial to the Government. That, and that alone, Mr. President, is the extension of true and adequate justice to the men and the corporations who need this legislation so badly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I shall ask for a roll call on the vote between the committee bill and that which bears my name. I should like to ask the chairman whether he has any objection to substituting my bill for the House bill without a record vote. If by consent it can be substituted for the House bill, then we will have only one record vote.

Mr. KIRBY. I should object to that. It would be adopting the Hitchcock substitute.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the question first comes on substituting the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; my amendment is an amendment to the House bill; that is, it is perfecting the House bill; and after it is perfected the Senator from Oregon will move to substitute his bill for the House bill as perfected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think probably the record vote had better come on the pending question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; but I was just suggesting that we will avoid that by adopting my amendment as a substitute for the House bill at this time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that I think the record vote had probably better come on substituting his measure for the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As a preliminary, then, to a vote, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Smoot
Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Spencer
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sutherland
Cummins	King	Penrose	Swanson
Fletcher	Kirby	Poindexter	Thomas
France	Knox	Pollock	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Reed	Trammell
Gay	Lenroot	Shafroth	Underwood
Hale	McKellar	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Hardwick	McNary	Simmons	Walsh
Henderson	Martin, Ky.	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Hitchcock	Moses	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] are detained on official business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the principal difference now between the substitute amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the committee bill is the original jurisdiction of the commission which is provided for in both bills to determine these claims, the Hitchcock amendment giving full and complete jurisdiction to the commission, with certain limitations, which I shall refer to in a moment. The committee bill provides that the Secretary of War shall in the first instance adjust these claims and with the approval of a representative of the Department of Justice may pay them to the contractor, but the contractor, and in certain cases the Department of Justice, may appeal to the commission.

I think we are all in sympathy with the purpose the Senator from Nebraska desires to accomplish if it were practical, but even the Senator who proposes this amendment recognizes the fact that it is not practical to give original jurisdiction to this commission to investigate fully and determine all these claims, because to do so would involve months and months of delay and disaster to many, many industries in the country.

The Senator from Nebraska has sought to avoid that very serious difficulty by the provision in his amendment which provides that the Secretary of War shall file with the commission a statement of the award that he believes to be just and the amount which the claimant is entitled to. Then he provides that if the claimant shall file a statement with the commission "offering to accept the amount awarded by the War Department in full for said claim the commission shall, within 10 days, order the same paid in the absence of evidence that it is excessive."

Mr. President, to my mind this language, if it shall be adopted, will prevent the commission from examining the very cases that it ought to examine and investigate. It will deprive the commission of the jurisdiction where it will be beneficial to the Government and give it to the commission only where it is in the interest of the contractor. Why do I say that? Because with the very minimum number that has been suggested of 6,000 claims, and the Senator from Tennessee suggested it might run from 10,000 to 60,000 claims, with the War Department now prepared with a very large percentage of them to immediately make adjustments, what would happen if the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is adopted? We would have immediately filed with this commission some thousands of claims. Supposing there were only 100 claims a day, every one of those claims under the Senator's amendment must be paid at the end of 10 days, unless there is evidence produced before the commission that the claim is excessive.

Mr. President, it would be a physical impossibility for this commission to get before it evidence that these claims were excessive within the period of 10 days. The commission would have no authority to retain jurisdiction of these claims longer than 10 days, unless after the filing of the claim it had proceeded upon investigation of that claim and had before it some evidence that the claim was excessive.

It may be said that it might call upon the War Department for all the files and testimony and records. I call attention to the fact that under the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska the War Department is not required to file any papers other than a statement of the amount awarded and the name of the contractor. But suppose the commission pursued that plan and asked the department for all the files and all the claims and all the testimony it had upon file before it, the commission certainly would not go upon the theory that some of the claims were excessive and permit payment of same, and take jurisdiction of others, because if it had only 100 claims a day for 10 days what would it mean? It would give the commission about six minutes for the investigation of a claim to find out whether, in its judgment, there was some evidence that the award was excessive—an absolute impossibility.

So the result would be, in my judgment, under the Senator's amendment, that, if there are awards that are excessive by the War Department, the contractor, of course, would immediately file his acceptance of that award, and the commission would have no opportunity within the 10 days to secure or produce evidence that it was excessive, and it would then become mandatory upon the commission to pay that excessive claim.

Now, contrast that with the provision in the committee bill. In my judgment, the phraseology is not happily worded, but I do not think there can be any question as to the construction. Under the committee bill the provision is as follows:

> That within 30 days of the date when the Secretary of War tenders any contract or compensation as provided in this act, or refuses to tender such contract or compensation, the party to whom said contract or compensation is tendered or refused or the Government, by a duly authorized officer from the Department of Justice, may file with the chairman of the commission a notice of appeal: Provided, however, That if the representative of the Department of Justice agrees with the action of the War Department there shall be no appeal by the Government, but settlement can be made at once.

As I construe the committee bill, it is contemplated that representatives of the Department of Justice shall work with the War Department at all times, acting as counsel for the Government in the investigation of these claims; that when the Secretary of War shall make an award if counsel for the Government shall be of the opinion that that award is or may be excessive he then has 30 days in which to further investigate that question and make an appeal. Then if he believes that it should be investigated by the commission he files his appeal.

In other words, under the committee proposition counsel for the Government sits in and is familiar, as counsel for a private party would be, with all the proceedings, and then when the award is made he still has 30 days within which to file his appeal, unless he is satisfied that justice is done to the Government and that the interests of the Government are protected.

As I said, I do not think that this provision is happily phrased. I do not think that the word "tenders" is a proper word to use in this connection. Certainly, it is not used here, I think, in the ordinary sense of a legal tender. The phraseology later on is absolutely contrary to any such idea, because to tender compensation ordinarily would mean that the party to whom compensation is tendered could immediately accept it. When it is said in the same paragraph that if the representatives of the Department of Justice agree with the War Department a settlement may be made at once, it seems to me that that negatives the idea that the word "tenders" is not used in its ordinary meaning. It does seem to me that that should be cleared up, and I think the word "offers" or "proposes" should be used.

Mr. KNOX. Where is that to be found?

Mr. LENROOT. On page 7.

Mr. McKELLAR. In what line?

Mr. LENROOT. In line 20 of the reprint.

I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether in his opinion I have given the interpretation to this language he thinks the committee intended to give to it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That was the intention of the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the chairman think that there should be some other word than the word "tenders" to express the purpose?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator can suggest a word, I will be glad to accept such an amendment, because that was the purpose of the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator then agree to strike out the word "tenders" and insert the word "offers"?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. I think that that would clear it up. I will then offer an amendment on page 7, line 20, to strike out the word "tenders" and insert the word "offers."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the original print, page 7, line 12, after the word "War," strike out the word "tenders" and insert the word "offers."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. My next amendment is to strike out the word "tender" and insert the word "offer" after the word "to" in the next line.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 13, before the word "to," strike out the word "tender" and insert the word "offer."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I think it must be very clear that before payments can be made under the committee bill the counsel for the Government must agree that the payment is proper and the interest of the Government is protected. If he is not so satisfied, under the committee bill he has 30 days in which to further investigate, and either agree or appeal, while under the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska these things must be determined within 10 days, and in cases where an award is excessive the interests of the Government are not protected under his proposition.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I feel very clear that for the protection of the Government the bill as reported by the committee is preferable to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before the question is put, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

So Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe the vote now is on the committee amendment as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote is on the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes."

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13308, known as the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first acted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Senator from Alabama to consent to have his bill laid aside temporarily in order that I may secure the disposition of a conference report.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How long does the Senator think it will take?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. About five minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well. I ask unanimous consent that the Post Office appropriation bill may be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Post Office appropriation bill will be temporarily laid aside for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Georgia.

SALARIES OF JUDGES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the conference report on House bill 12001 be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report referred to by the Senator from Georgia, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12001) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 7.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall receive salaries the same as salaries provided by this act to be paid to judges of district courts of the United States, and such salaries shall be paid as now provided by law.

"The judges of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia shall receive salaries the same as the salaries provided by this act to be paid to judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, and such salaries shall be paid as now provided by law."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That the judges of the United States Court of Customs Appeals shall receive salaries equal in amount to the salaries provided by this act to be paid judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, payable monthly from the Treasury."

And the Senate agree to the same.

HOKE SMITH,
WILLIAM H. KING,
J. O. WOLCOTT,
FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
LEBARON B. COLT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
H. J. STEELE,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
GEORGE S. GRAHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

THE CENSUS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me, in order that I may make a motion in reference to the conference report on the so-called census bill heretofore submitted by me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Texas for that purpose, if it will take only a few minutes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. A few days ago I submitted the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses. I now ask unanimous consent to withdraw that report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report is withdrawn.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on the census bill be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12 to the bill, and agreeing to the same with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; further insisting upon its disagreement to the remainder of the amendments to the bill, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments and agree to the further conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. ASHURST, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, before the Senate proceeds with the consideration of the pending bill I think I can make a statement which perhaps will facilitate that consideration.

It will be observed that quite a number of changes have been made in the figures as printed in the bill. That is made necessary by reason of the fact that the House of Representatives in passing the bill made its estimates upon the basic law without reference to increases which have been made, and when the House came to run out its figures and make its totals there was a failure to carry out the figures which should have been carried out in order to meet the appropriations. Therefore the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on the part of the Senate had to correct those figures, and they are indicated in the bill. I make the statement in order that Senators may understand why it is that, as I have said, there are so many changes in the figures as presented in the House bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama what increases were allowed by the committee in the case of carriers and clerks of post offices?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The increase is the same as that contained in the bill of last year, $200, and the bill restores automatic promotions.

IMPROVEMENT OF PUBLIC ROADS AND HIGHWAYS.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, there is a provision in the bill to increase the appropriation for good roads, to which I desire to address myself for a few moments.

Mr. President, there is no question pending in America to-day more important to the well-being and development of her people than the improvement of public roads and highways. I have always considered this as the most paramount of our unsolved practical problems. One of the first measures introduced by me when I became a Member of the Senate in 1911 was a bill to extend over a period of five years an appropriation by the Federal Government to aid the several States in the construction and improvement of their public roads. Upon the presentation of this bill I made a very extended speech urging Federal aid to road improvement and pointing out both the justice of such action and the great advantages which would accrue from Federal participation in road improvement. Those of us who were deeply and earnestly interested in this subject in season and out of season persistently continued our efforts and finally achieved success when the Congress, in 1916, enacted legislation extending Federal aid for five years to road improvement in the States. There is no act of Congress in the passage of which I actively aided and participated that I take more pride in than this piece of legislation. I was a member of the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee from which the legislation was reported to the Senate and a member of the conference committee which finally determined its provisions. We were content to commence with small appropriations until the Federal Government and the States obtained suitable road organizations and methods, thus insuring that the money would not be wasted and that its expenditure would result in substantial benefits. We expected when these organizations had been perfected that the Federal Government would largely increase these appropriations. We were satisfied that the great benefits accruing from the cooperation of the Federal Government with the States would be so apparent and so marked that there would soon be a demand for a large increase in the Federal appropriations. Our expectations have been fully justified. An impetus has been given to road construction and improvement which previously did not exist. The benefits from Federal aid have been so immense that the President of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture, under whose direction the expenditures have been made, have earnestly recommended the increase in the appropriations granted under this legislation.

The pending bill proposes to largely increase the appropriations granted by the Federal Government under the provisions of the existing law. I was a member of the subcommittee that examined the matter thoroughly and favorably reported this measure to the full Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate, which committee, after hearing the report of the subcommittee, practically unanimously recommended the increases provided for in the bill. I had previously introduced an amendment to the pending bill carrying provisions substantially similar to these now reported.

The amendments contained in the pending bill increase the appropriations made by the act of 1916 to the extent of $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919; $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; and $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, making an aggregate increase over the amount heretofore appropriated of $200,000,000. The amount unexpended out of the appropriations heretofore made is about $75,000,000. This, added to the $200,000,000 increase provided by the pending bill, will make a total of $275,000,000 to be expended by the Federal Government up to June 30, 1921, toward aiding communities and States in the construction and improvement of their public roads and highways.

Under the method of distribution adopted Virginia would receive out of these appropriations up to June 30, 1921, the sum of $5,458,162.37, to be added to a like amount from the State and local communities, to improve and develop her public roads. Thus, the practical effect of this amendment, if adopted, would be to secure for road improvement in the State of Virginia to June 30, 1921, the sum of approximately $10,900,000.

In addition the bill authorizes the Secretary of War to transfer to the control of the Secretary of Agriculture all available war material not needed for the present purposes of the War Department and suitable for use in the improvement of highways, to be used on the roads constructed in whole or in part through Federal aid. This provision, if enacted, will cause to be furnished immediately to the State authorities a large amount of road material and machinery which will be of inestimable benefit. This will make available a large quantity of valuable material and machinery that otherwise would be of little benefit to the Government and might ultimately be wasted.

Mr. President, there is no bill pending in the present Congress the passage of which I more earnestly favor than this measure, and none that I believe will obtain for the various sections of our country more beneficial results and advantages. The world is entering upon a great era of competition in production and sale of agricultural, mineral, and manufactured products. This future commercial competition will far exceed all such conflicts of the past. The nation that is best equipped will be better prepared to successfully produce and sell. The progress of this Nation in nearly all directions has been phenomenal. We are to-day the greatest manufacturing people in the world. The products of our factories exceed those of Britain and continental Europe combined. Our mines furnish the world more than one-half of its mineral products and wealth. Our plains and prairies are recognized as the granaries of the world. Cotton continues the king of plants, and the world's comfort and clothing are dependent upon the white fields of the South. We occupy to-day the foremost place in the world's commerce. Our exports now exceed those of Great Britain. Our wealth to-day far exceeds that of any other two nations combined. We have become supreme in finance, our banking capital and supply of gold being the greatest possessed by any people. In miles of railroads, navigable rivers, and improved harbors we are unsurpassed. We have shown recently in an amazing degree our ability to mobilize in a very short time a great army and navy, win great victories, and successfully conclude a world war. These are achievements of which any nation may well be proud.

Yet, Mr. President, with all these wonderful material advantages, it is admitted to-day that we have the poorest system of public roads and highways of any civilized nation. We have to-day, roughly estimating, 2,500,000 miles of highways in the United States, and of this mileage about 296,000 miles, or 12 per cent of the total, are surface roads. No other civilized nation possesses such a wretched condition of public highways. With our wonderful energy displayed in every other field of human endeavor, with our amazing wealth, there is no justification for such wretched road conditions. Our energy and our money have been generously expended in every other direction except in the betterment of our highways. After careful examination and thoughtful consideration of this subject, I am satisfied that our neglect in this respect has been one of the greatest misfortunes that has affected us as a people and should be remedied as quickly as possible.

No one can estimate the annual loss incurred by our people in traveling and hauling over these wretched public roads. Our internal commerce exceeds the interforeign commerce of the entire world. It is estimated that 90 per cent of our internal commerce must, first or last, be hauled over the public roads. The average haul of this vast commerce over the public highways, after a careful investigation, has been estimated at a little more than 9.4 miles. Careful investigation fixes the cost of hauling these products at 23 cents per ton per mile. The cost of hauling per mile over the splendid roads of France is, on an average, 7 cents per ton; the average cost in England about 11 cents per ton per mile.

If the more important and main lines of our public-road system were improved equal to those of France and Britain, it is estimated by good authorities that our products could then be hauled over our entire system of roads at a cost of 12 or 13 cents per ton per mile. A joint commission of Congress on Federal aid in the construction of post roads, of which commission I was a member, reported it was estimated that in 1914 718,000,000 tons of produce were hauled over our public roads. The amount now hauled over our public roads will exceed 900,000,000 tons each year. If our main lines were improved, as suggested, we would certainly save, under all conditions about 8 or 9 cents per ton per mile in hauling this immense tonnage, which would save in transportation cost over $700,000,000 per year. Our loss in transportation over wretched roads certainly aggregates yearly this vast amount. In other words, the United States pays annually a mud tax of $700,000,000. If half of this loss was annually appropriated for road improvement for many years, all of our main and important lines of roads could be splendidly improved. We can not compete with other nations in the marketing of agricultural, mineral, and manufactured products unless we promptly remedy the seriously wretched condition of our highways.

But the foregoing does not include all of the loss occasioned this country by its bad country roads. The poor condition of the highways renders it impossible to market much of the products of the farm. When the cost of transportation and the cost of production exceed the selling price it is impossible for the producer to dispose of his products at a profit; hence production is arrested. In many sections farmers fail to raise certain important crops because the cost of hauling them over miserable country roads is so great that they sustain loss instead of profit. It has been estimated that more than one-third of our perishable foodstuffs never reach the consumers on account of bad roads. This country sustains a loss of many, many million dollars each year, to both producer and consumer, on account of this wretched condition. Our bad roads have also made it impossible in many sections to raise a great diversification of crops, such as is done in France and England, with their splendid road system.

Another great detriment to this country which has resulted from its miserable country roads is the forcing of the people to leave the rural sections and congregate in towns and cities. This fact is strikingly disclosed by the census returns. In 1790 only 3.4 per cent of our population dwelt in cities. In 1910, 46 per cent of our population lived in cities. This explains why so many acres of fertile land remain untilled, while the city, with its insanitary and unwholesome tenements, is crowded with human beings whose standard of living and methods of life result in their mental, moral, and physical decay. Statistics show that wherever the country is blessed with good country roads the rural population is increased in number, in comfort, and in wealth. School attendance, with all educational advantages, accompany improved roads. Good schools and good roads go hand in hand.

We have in this country more than 400,000 acres of undeveloped and uncultivated lands, which good roads would make available and profitable for agricultural purposes. Good roads would bring to these sections thrifty and prosperous farmers, greatly adding to the national wealth..

The farmers of our country can not successfully compete with the farmers of other countries unless we improve their roads, cheapen transportation, and thus reduce the cost of production. In a few years we will have a merchant marine equal to that of Britain, which nation for many years has had a monopoly of shipping. This will insure us fair rates from our ports and enable our products to reach all the markets of the world; but this great advantage will almost be destroyed unless we build good roads and lessen the cost of transportation from the farm to the depot, river, or port. Water transportation had so decreased prior to the beginning of the recent war that it cost the farmer 1.6 cents less to ship a bushel of wheat from New York to Liverpool, a distance of 3,100 miles, than it did to haul that bushel of wheat 9.4 miles, the average haul from his barn to the depot. We can not expect our farmers to sell their products of their farms in the markets of the world unless we reduce the cost of transportation by the improvement of our roads.

Mr. President, in addition to this, justice and fair dealing to the farmer demand that the Federal Government should extend him generous aid in road improvement. Next to our brave and gallant soldiers and sailors, no class of our citizens are more deserving of commendation for winning the great war in which we were engaged than the farmers.

The Government told him that our allies were destitute of food, that the world was confronted with starvation, and that our military success was dependent upon his energy and efforts. What the farmer accomplished can not be told in mere figures, but some conception may be had when I tell you that during 1917, the first year of the war, he increased the acreage of farm crops 22,000,000 acres over that of 1916, and not content with this great showing, added another 6,000,000 acres in 1918. During the two years of war the average yield of cereals was 5,717,000,000 bushels as compared with 4,719,000,000 bushels in 1916, or nearly 1,000,000,000 bushels increase. Over the wretched highways of this country last year the farmer moved more than 4,000,000,000 pounds of food, his patriotic response to the call for a supreme effort that our armies in Europe, our allies, and ourselves might be fed. How wonderful is this achievement when we consider that in doing all this the American farmer was handicapped by shortage of fertilizer for his land, by isolation from markets and shipping points, due to bad roads, made doubly trying by the hardest winter of the past quarter century, and, finally, that he had to do this great task almost single handed, because his hired men and his able-bodied sons were at the front in France. It is a record of patriotic work of which the farmer may indeed be proud and which entitles him to every consideration at the hands of his Government. It should compel his Government to fulfill faithfully every promise made him and to extend in the future every generous aid and assistance to him. This wonderful achievement not only entitles the farmer to every consideration at the hands of the National Government, but it demonstrates conclusively the vital part which farm life plays in the welfare of the Nation and of the world and makes clear our duty to do everything possible to foster and protect this great industry upon which our existence depends. The best assistance we can now render him is prompt and generous national aid in road construction and improvement.

Mr. President, the travel over our highways at the present time is national, State, and local. It is not just to expect local communities to construct and maintain roads over which the travel of State and Nation far exceeds the local traffic. It is utterly impossible for local communities to bear the expense of constructing macadam or hard-surface roads. To do so would require such heavy taxes as to practically bankrupt the local communities. A system must be devised whereby this expense can be fairly distributed. The only way in which this can be accomplished is by the appropriation of money out of the State and National treasuries. By this means the cities and rich communities are enabled to share with the country sections their full burden of road construction and improvement. Since both country and city receive benefits alike from good roads, each should share the burden.

The Federal Government is further interested in good road improvement, since it can more cheaply and more efficiently carry its mails and parcel post over good roads than bad. I believe the cost of carrying the mails in rural sections will be reduced more than one-third when this country possesses good country roads.

Besides, the large appropriations contained in the pending measure will do something tangible and helpful in the giving of employment to our returning soldiers and sailors and the men temporarily out of employment by reason of the transition from war to peace conditions. A better time could not be selected for the institution of a vigorous and generous system of road improvement than the present. Let me also suggest that the Government in aiding in building roads will be engaged in a definite and useful enterprise very much needed and of primary importance, even if the question of keeping labor employed is left entirely out of consideration. I commend this sort of an enterprise to the Members of the Senate as much more worthy of support than any miscellaneous and aimless appropriations of money for public works solely to keep labor employed. In the one case we are working for a purpose—a purpose which contemplates permanent results; in the other case we are working to a palliative, a temporary makeshift undertaking. Road building will employ directly a large number of men and these men will, for the most part, be unskilled laborers—those whom it is hardest to place in times of widespread unemployment. It is a conservative estimate to say that at least half of the total amount expended for highway construction goes for the direct employment of labor.

Mr. President, the passage of this bill, with the amendments contained therein for Federal aid in road construction and improvement, will mark a great epoch in the history of this Nation. It will indicate a determination by the Federal Government to bear its fair share of the burden of improving our public roads and will mark the beginning of the end of bad roads in this country. It will open a new chapter in our history, each leaf of which, when turned, will gleam with more happy country homes, better schools and churches, and larger and more prosperous rural communities. Imagination will be powerless to picture through the vista of coming years the increased health and happiness, the increased wealth and power, and the great moral and material advance which will come to this Republic upon the completion of a great national policy of road construction and improvement.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if, in his address, he shows what have been done under the appropriations we have heretofore voted for this plan of road construction?

Mr. SWANSON. I have not made a detailed statement as to that, but that is set out in the report of the committee.

Mr. KENYON. Have roads under Federal appropriations been built under any plan or merely in a haphazard manner?

Mr. SWANSON. They have been built under a good plan.

GERMAN COLONIAL POSSESSIONS.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate for only a moment, not to make an extended speech but simply to record early my protest—an easy thing to do, and generally a fruitless thing to do. But I do not propose to be caught by the law of estoppel.

I read in this morning's newspaper the following:

As the result of a private meeting to-day between Gen. Smuts and Col. House, virtual agreement has been reached on the troublesome questions involved in the insistence of Japan, Australia, and New Zealand that the conference confirm the secret understanding reached between Great Britain and Japan for disposition of the captured German colonial possessions.

Mr. Lloyd George spent most of the day endeavoring to persuade the British colonial ministers to recede from their position in favor of observing the secret arrangement.

In consequence of these occurrences it is not going beyond the bounds of probability to say that the principle of internationalizing the German colonies, with a future administration intrusted to governments designated by the league of nations, will be recognized by the peace conference.

It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of this outcome of the greatest diplomatic battle fought behind the closed doors of the Quai d'Orsay.

Mr. President, the first thing to which I call attention is the fact that these stupendous arrangements are being consummated behind closed doors, and that the American delegation have not only acquiesced in the proceedings being behind closed doors but that they are now engaged in confirming and sustaining secret agreements heretofore made. The vice of the secret meeting is beginning to reveal itself. It would have been bad enough if we had been compelled and had acquiesced in the matter of holding secret meetings for this particular conference; but it is going a long way for our delegation to engage, through secret meetings and private understandings, in the confirmation of secret treaties heretofore made, for the purpose of disposing of the most vital affairs of the different nations engaged in this late war.

Mr. President, while I do not, of course, know the local conditions which surround the delegation, I wish it were possible for the delegation once and for all to insist that without the maintenance in all of its integrity of the first of the 14 principles announced by the President it will be practically impossible to realize any of the other 13. If we concede that these matters may be arranged and consummated in secret, the principles announced in the other 13 propositions will never come to fruition as a result of the conference at Versailles. The President was quite correct in announcing his 14 principles, in announcing his first as precedent to all others—that it was necessary to arrive at these agreements openly, because without that program and that process of arriving at conclusions there it will be practically impossible to realize any part of the other 13 principles.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I do not quite understand the basis of the Senator's criticism of the procedure at the Versailles conference, wherein he complains that there is a lack of information; that the peace negotiations negative the promise made that there should be open diplomacy. Exactly what is being done and the steps which are being taken are not only revealed to the country from day to day by the very newspaper from which the Senator has just read, but dispatches containing similar information are doubtless sent throughout the world each day. As a result, from day to day we know precisely the steps that are being taken by the respective parties in attendance upon the peace conference in their efforts to agree upon terms of peace. Obviously, the Senator would not require that Col. House or other representative of our Government and representatives of other nations should conduct all of their conversations, all preliminary talks and negotiations, in the open, upon the housetops, and in the presence of the representatives of the press of the world. There must be of necessity private conversations and informal discussions between the various representatives, which if open to all would inevitably lead to strife and jealousies and misunderstandings that might work irreparable harm. Informal discussions between a portion or all of the peace delegates must be had, and publicity in all cases would defeat the ends of justice and provoke animosities and delay a final agreement. To present coherent and tangible propositions for consideration in the conference there must be preliminary discussions which, if conducted in public, might prove highly disadvantageous. A working program for the conference must be prepared—something concrete. The delegates can not profitably proceed en masse without some plan or thought-out propositions to be submitted and then discussed, after throwing everything into the hopper, the propositions to be embodied in the peace treaty. It would not be the rational or the sensible or the proper thing to do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is the argument for secret diplomacy which has been made for 100 years. There is nothing new or original in the proposition. Nobody contends that every particular individual interview should be held in the open, and I care nothing about individual interviews. What I contend is that when they are sitting as delegates, and conferring and agreeing as delegates, the same as we do here, their proceedings should be in the open, and we should not be compelled to rely upon the construction put upon the proceedings by a reporter. That is what we have here. We have no authoritative statement at all, and we have no details as to what were the considerations which led up to the final agreement or understanding, or what the obligations are. We are simply confined to what the reporter could gather from the conversations in the lobbies, and so forth.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Have the terms of the so-called secret treaty between Great Britain and Japan with reference to the German colonies been made public?

Mr. BORAH. I have not seen them. They may have been.

If the Senator from Utah will take up, for instance, and read that which was given out authoritatively this morning, you get nothing out of that. There is no information whatever there; and you have to turn to that kind of authority which is no different from what the Senator or I would gather if we were about the hotel lobbies, and so forth, picking up this and that in the way of information. I maintain that the Senator can not regard that as in any sense complying with the first of the President's 14 principles.

What did the President mean when he said "open covenants, openly arrived at"? He knew precisely, and he was very careful to use language which would exclude a program which gave to the people who were to be bound by it nothing until the binding obligation had been entered into. Col. House does not state that this conclusion has been arrived at. Gen. Smuts does not state that this conclusion has been arrived at. No one authoritatively states it; but it is gathered there in the way of inferences, and so forth, and you call that "open covenants, openly arrived at"!

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho further yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I make bold to assert that there will not be a treaty of peace signed until the world knows every term that is to be incorporated in it, and they will know just as soon as any term is agreed upon; we will not have to wait until all of the terms of the treaty have been agreed upon.

It seems to me that the Senator is highly technical in criticizing the proceedings because of a lack of "openness." We know substantially everything that is being done. If any agreement has been reached upon any point we will know it.

Mr. BORAH. We will.

Mr. KING. It will be announced.

Mr. BORAH. Of course.

Mr. KING. It will be announced before it becomes binding upon the parties, because the reaching of an agreement as to one matter will not bind them to a treaty until the complete treaty or agreement has been accepted and submitted for their consideration and for their signatures; so that the Senator, I submit, will know as the proceedings go on from day to day just what is being done and what terms are being reached. So the conference and the proceedings proper are in the open. There is no secret agreement or term secretly agreed upon. We are advised when anything is agreed upon. If the Senator will pardon me with reference to another matter to which he referred, we have nothing to do with the agreements that were entered into between our allies when they were fighting with their backs to the wall against the most formidable foes that the world had ever seen. I do not know that it lies within our mouths to criticize England and France and Japan for any agreements which they made touching their relationship, and which brought them together in order to resist the great force that threatened their destruction.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is digressing. The Senator from Idaho has not criticized Great Britain or Japan. It is none of the business of the Senator from Idaho as to what Japan or Great Britain do. I am perfectly willing that, if they see fit, they may have their secret agreements and secret arrangements, and it is not my purpose to criticize it. I am contending that so far as we are concerned we are entitled to all the facts that make up the different steps in the program. We are entitled to them as the program proceeds. Public opinion is entitled to the benefit of the facts as it is concluding itself. It is no satisfaction for a people to know what a treaty is after all the different powers have agreed to it, and they thereby practically, if not technically, are bound by it. If the treaty should be agreed upon and brought out of secret and published, and it has been signed by all the different powers, the tremendous pressure which would be brought to bear to ratify it by reason of the fact that it had been agreed upon would be such that it would be impossible to overcome it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. KING. In order to make my position clear, may I propound a question to the Senator in the shape of a concrete illustration which the news this morning presents for consideration?

It is reported that some of the allied governments feel that the German colonies should be divided amongst them, and that they should have the power to govern and control them without reference to any league of nations that may be entered into. As I understand the press dispatches, it is the contention of President Wilson and others that the legal title—if I may be permitted that expression—of these colonies should vest in the league of nations, and the equitable title should vest in the various nations which might be constituted under the league-of-nations trustees, and given the power of administration.

Suppose that Mr. Wilson and others who share the views which it is reported he entertains should contend and argue with the various representatives in their hotels, in their meeting places or wherever opportunity afforded, trying to secure the acceptance of the views which he suggests, and, after a multitude of conferences and casual conversations and accidental meetings at which conversations occur, President Wilson should so impress his views upon the allied nations that they accepted them, and it was then in open conference stated that the allied nations had receded from the position which they formerly had taken, and were willing to accept the views suggested by President Wilson, and pursuant to that understanding a provision was prepared embodying the proposition that the league of nations should accept the trusteeship of Germany's colonies, and one of the allied nations was designated to administer them: Does not the Senator think that that would be open negotiation and open covenants openly arrived at?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not; neither does the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Yes; I submit that I do.

Mr. BORAH. No. The thing that the Senator from Utah is doing now is emasculating the first point of the 14 principles without saying so. Now, there is no misunderstanding of this language. If the Senator from Utah and his friends are ready to abandon it, to renounce it, that is one thing, and there may be a good reason for doing it—that is, a reason satisfactory to those who are in favor of doing it. But it will not do, Mr. President, to contend that the statement which has been made by the Senator is in compliance with the principle which President Wilson has stated has been recognized and adopted by the different nations of the earth as a fundamental basis upon which to proceed to the realization of a permanent peace.

I do not care anything about a private conversation which takes place in a hotel or incidental gathering or anything of that kind. I am not speaking of that at all. I am speaking of those conversations or those proceedings which take place when as delegates they are congregated together, and met as delegates and acting as delegates, the same as when we are here in the Senate acting as the Senate. I do not ask, in the matter of publicity, that the private conversations of the cloakroom be made a part of the publicity or the public proceedings of the Senate; but when we are here gathered as a Senate, dealing with the people's affairs, everything that we do should be known to them; and it is the same way with the peace conference. When they sit as a peace conference, as a body disposing of nations and of territories, and placing obligations upon people which may lead to tremendous consequences and great sacrifices, those things should be unmistakably in the open.

Now, I ask the Senator in return a question. Does he think that "open covenants of peace, openly arrived at," permits of arriving at those covenants in secret meetings?

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. KING. Replying to the interrogation of the Senator, I do not place the narrow and illiberal—and I do not use the words in any offensive sense at all—meaning or interpretation upon the words which the question and the former very able argument of the Senator would imply. I do not think that in order to reach convenants in an open way, every meeting that may be held by the delegates who may participate in the discussion should be or must be in the open. We legislate here, and many of the discussions of the committees relative to measures are in executive session, are not open. I understand that "open convenants, openly arrived at," means that the public, the nations involved, shall be advised as to those agreements before they shall become binding, before they shall be incorporated into a treaty of peace for the signature of the powers who participate in negotiating them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah was of opinion a few minutes ago that I was indulging in a criticism of the delegation. If I understand the press reports correctly, or the attitude which the President has taken from the beginning, I am not in conflict with the President's views as to what should be done, or as to how it should be done. When they undertook to close the doors, and did close the doors, upon that conference, we were advised by the public press throughout the country that it was over the protest of the President; that it was not in compliance with his interpretation of the first of the 14 points, and we were further advised that from time to time he would keep up the controversy for open sessions until they were forced, and the people were given what he had promised them. I do not regard myself as in conflict with the President at all. I suppose, if the press be correct, that I am in perfect harmony with what he would like to see. I will venture to say that if we are to take the President's interpretation of this, as I understand it, the President of the United States has no conference upon this subject that he is not willing for the public to have.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Would the Senator from Idaho permit me to intrude upon him to the point of asking what is the particular thing to which he now addresses his protest? I was out of the Chamber, and am very much interested to know what is the particular thing against which he is protesting.

Mr. BORAH. I read from Mr. Oulahan's article in the New York Times this morning that Gen. Smuts and Col. House to-day at a private meeting had come to a virtual agreement on the troublesome questions involved in the insistence of Japan, Australia, and New Zealand that the conference confirm the secret understanding reached between Great Britain and Japan for disposition of the captured German colonies. It was that subject matter which I was discussing.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator for the information.

Mr. BORAH. Now, Mr. President, as the Senate knows, immediately after the President announced his policy of "open covenants of peace, openly arrived at," I expressed myself here upon the floor of the Senate as thoroughly in accord with that view, and I am so constituted that when I am once settled in my conviction that a principle is correct, it is difficult for me to modify my position, and I have not modified my views in the slightest. I think secret diplomacy is the nesting process by which the germs of war are retained in the social system from decade to decade and from century to century, and that the Senate of the United States, and the Congress, and the people of the United States, understood the President to be denouncing that system when he announced the first point of the 14 principles.

While I may differ with him, as I do with reference to the league of nations, I do not differ with him at all upon the first proposition, and I support him in it just as earnestly as I would oppose him if I thought he were incorrect in principle. The fact that he is the Democratic President cuts no figure with me whatever. In this proposition of open diplomacy he is representing a principle indispensable to the peace and security of the great mass of the people of the world. I therefore support him, as I have always done when I agree with him.

I repeat, as I said before the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] came in, if the President is finally compelled to yield upon the first point of the 14 points, the other 13 will be whittled away in secret arrangements and agreements which they will finally consummate. A league of nations with an army at its command, with the infamous principle of secret diplomacy embodied in its very nature—could the human mind conceive of a more arbitrary and infamous institution among men? And yet a league of nations, with absolute open diplomacy, might be made a tolerable proposition.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have not heard the entire discussion of the subject, but does not the Senator think that one of the worst aspects of this case is any proposition emanating from any authority for this country to enter into a partnership to control African colonies and operate them?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I was coming to the particular step now taken, which, as I understand, contemplates the conference coming to this kind of an understanding, that the colonies will be transferred as to their legal title, as has been said here, to the league of nations, and then that the league of nations will select the particular member of the league of nations which is to oversee and to dominate or control or be responsible for a particular colony or a particular class of colonies. I wish that I had a copy of the last Round Table, published in England, in which there is to be found a very illuminating article. In that article they have already proceeded to segregate and separate the different colonies and to distribute them among the different nations for watching, and so forth. We have assigned to us Mesopotamia and some of the countries in that region, and we are particularly assigned Russia. The article goes on to say that the United States is in a better position to deal with the Russian situation—to bring order out of chaos—and to establish a sane and stable government than any other member of the league, and therefore, while we are to have a certain number of German colonies, we are to have thrown in, as a side diversion, the task of establishing order and sane government in Russia.

Those who heard upon yesterday the able address of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] will realize something of the task which has been assigned to the United States. What we are doing now in Russia would be what our boys might be called upon to do in Africa or Mesopotamia if it so happened that under this league of nations in the assignments we were assigned to the possessions which Germany now has in Africa and other parts. It is a matter of vital concern. So far as I am concerned, I agree thoroughly with the statement of the Senator from California yesterday that we should come home and attend to the affairs that vitally concern us here. I am utterly opposed to policing Russia, or policing Africa, or taking over under our control any part of the German colonies.

I want to read from a statement by the prime minister of Australia. Hon. W. A. Watt, acting prime minister, says:

> The question of the disposal of Germany's former overseas dominions is now under consideration at the allied peace conference. I wish to state plainly the attitude adopted by the Government of the Commonwealth in respect to the Pacific islands.
> Shortly after the conclusion of the armistice both houses of the Federal Parliament unanimously carried a resolution "that the senate and the house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Australia declare it is essential to the future safety and welfare of Australia that the captured German possessions in the Pacific occupied by Australian and New Zealand troops should not under any circumstances be restored to Germany, and that in the consideration and determination of proposals affecting the destination of those islands Australia should be consulted."
> The time for consultation having arrived, the Government should make its views plain. It is the desire and hope of the Australian Government that the islands of the Pacific formerly held by Germany and now occupied by Australian and New Zealand forces should for the future be controlled either by Great Britain or Australia and New Zealand.
> In expressing this desire we are not influenced by an ambition to extend our territory, but feel that this free, young nation must safeguard itself against molestation. The only form of insurance which is open to us is government under the British flag, as the Commonwealth already governs a substantial area in Oceania adjacent to the late German possessions of New Guinea and Bismarck Archipelago.
> We feel that success has attended our development of these islands. [Parts of New Guinea and the Bismarck Archipelago have been under the administration of an Australian governor general for four years.]
> We must appeal to the nations who have to judge our claims. We do not seek to exploit the natives, but to develop the productive and industrial possibilities of these possessions for the future good of the present inhabitants as well as the safety of this island continent.
> Many evidences have been tendered to the Government that this is practically the unanimous view of the people of Australia. I can only express the hope that the presentation of our case by Prime Minister Hughes will so influence the statesmen of the allied countries that Australia's position will be safeguarded.

Mr. President, Australia has her Monroe doctrine. She has here outlined it in this brief interview to the conference at Versailles. If we as a Nation, by reason of our membership of a league of nations, interfere with the Monroe doctrine of Australia or the Monroe doctrine of Japan, as it has been established by our consent, or the Monroe doctrine of some other nation looking to the preservation of its integrity, how long will it be after we have entered upon that program, if we are successful, before they interfere with the Monroe doctrine of the United States?

So I am not only opposed to the manner in which these agreements are being made, the methods by which these understandings are being arrived at, but I am opposed to the United States assuming any obligation to control or govern or be responsible for any part of the German possessions. I am opposed to any scheme or plan which will keep our soldiers in Europe an hour longer than necessary to clean up this particular war with Germany.

LIGNITE COALS AND PEAT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who has charge of the pending appropriation bill, to allow it to be temporarily laid aside while I present a conference report upon Senate bill 3220.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will consent, provided it does not provoke discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The appropriation bill will not have to be temporarily laid aside, but the Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent to take up the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to know what the conference report is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals and peat, to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals and peat, to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2 and 3, and agree to the same.

CHARLES B. HENDERSON,
T. J. WALSH,
MILES POINDEXTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

M. D. FOSTER,
OTIS WINGO,
E. E. DENISON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will state in just a word what the report is. The bill passed the Senate some months ago, last fall, and it included lignite and peat, with an appropriation of $150,000. The House struck out peat and reduced the appropriation from $150,000 to $100,000. We have accepted the House amendment reducing the appropriation and they have accepted our bill leaving peat in, the two to be investigated with the appropriation of $100,000 instead of $150,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The other $50,000 is to be appropriated later.

Mr. HENDERSON. Probably not. I do not know anything about that. It is not appropriated in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I can assure the Senator that it will be appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT YONKERS, N. Y.

Mr. REED. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to yield to me that I may submit a report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. REED. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have had under consideration a bill that affects the post-office site at Yonkers, N. Y. There are some reasons why it ought to be acted upon at this time. On behalf of the committee, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8828) increasing the limit of cost for the acquisition of a public building at Yonkers, N. Y., and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the existing legislation authorizing the acquisition of a public building site at Yonkers, N. Y., at a limit of cost of $250,000, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to fix a limit of cost of $338,500 for the said site, and the appropriations heretofore made under separate limits of cost are hereby made available for the acquisition of said site within the limit of cost hereby prescribed.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, when said site shall have been acquired, to sell to the city of Yonkers, N. Y., for such price, at such time, and upon such terms as he may deem for the best interests of the United States, such portions of said site fronting on Buena Vista Avenue and Market Place as he may deem it advisable to spare for the purpose of widening the abutting streets, to convey said land to the city by the usual quitclaim deed, and to deposit the proceeds of said sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 11, on page 14. It seems to me that the word "other" should be inserted before "executive," so as to read "and to the same extent as the other executive departments."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that word ought to be inserted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 22, after the words "Provided further," to strike out:

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that this amendment may go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the amendment may go over until to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will proceed with the reading.

Mr. NEW. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee, but if it is to go over until to-morrow I shall withhold it until that time.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is understood that the amendment will go over until to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has gone over until to-morrow.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not understand that it was to go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so announced.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If we should be able to come back to it this afternoon, I would like to do so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to have it go over until to-morrow, because I did not expect the amendment to come up this afternoon, and I want to try to get an amendment drawn to cover the proposition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. All right, then; let it go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that to be the request of the Senator from Washington. The amendment will go over until to-morrow.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 2, before the word "each," to strike out "$3,250" and insert "$3,550"; in line 3, before the word "each," to strike out "$2,350" and insert "$2,550"; in line 4, before the word "each," to strike out "$2,250" and insert "$2,450"; in line 19, after the words "in all," to insert "including increases hereinafter provided"; and in line 20, after the word "provided," to strike out "$28,385,500" and insert "$33,904,000," so as to make the clause read:

Railway Mail Service: For 15 division superintendents, at $3,550 each; 2 assistant superintendents, at $2,550 each; 15 assistant division superintendents, at $2,450 each; 115 chief clerks, at not exceeding $2,100 each; 432 clerks, grade 10, at not exceeding $1,800 each; 1,922 clerks, grade nine, at not exceeding $1,700 each; 375 clerks, grade 8, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 7,703 clerks, grade 7, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 952 clerks, grade 6, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 1,737 clerks, grade 5, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 2,721 clerks, grade 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 60 clerks, grade 3, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 4,666 clerks, grade 2, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 1,164 clerks, grade 1, at not exceeding $900 each; in all, including increases hereinafter provided, $33,904,000: Provided, That railway and substitute railway postal clerks shall be credited with full time when deadheading under orders of the department, and the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum; and, to enable the Postmaster General to reclassify the salaries of railway postal clerks and make necessary appointments and promotions, he may exceed the number of clerks in such of the grades as may be necessary: Provided, That the number of regular clerks in the aggregate as herein authorized be not exceeded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, in line 8, after the word "clerks," to strike out "$1,613,959" and insert:

$2,689,931: Provided, That the act of August 24, 1912 (37th Stats., p. 548), amended by the act approved March 3, 1917, be further amended to read as follows:

"That hereafter, in addition to the salaries provided by law, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to make travel allowances in lieu of actual expenses, at fixed rates per annum, not exceeding in the aggregate the sum annually appropriated, to railway postal clerks, acting railway postal clerks, and substitute railway postal clerks, including substitute railway postal clerks for railway postal clerks granted leave with pay on account of sickness, assigned to duty in railway post office cars, while on duty, after 10 hours from the time of beginning their initial run, under such regulations as he may prescribe, and in no case shall such an allowance exceed $2 per day."

So as to make the clause read:

For travel allowances to railway postal clerks and substitute railway postal clerks, $2,689,931: Provided, That the act of August 24, 1912 (37th Stats., p. 548), amended by the act approved March 3, 1917, be further amended to read as follows.

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General," on page 25, in line 16, after the word "devices," to strike out "$420,000" and insert "$560,000," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. At this point I submit the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the period and insert a semicolon at the end of line 7, page 28, and add the following:

Provided, That hereafter rural carriers assigned to horse-drawn vehicle routes on which daily service is performed shall receive $24 per mile per annum for each mile said routes are in excess of 24 miles or major fraction thereof, based on actual mileage, and rural carriers assigned to horse-drawn vehicle routes on which triweekly service is performed shall receive $12 per mile per annum for each mile of said routes in excess of 24 miles or major fraction thereof, based on actual mileage: Provided further, That hereafter the pay of carriers who furnish and maintain their own motor vehicles and who serve routes not less than 50 miles in length may be fixed at not exceeding $2,250 per annum.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. WADSWORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to make some inquiry as to what this amendment would actually result in.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the object for which I rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield the floor and let the Senator from New York make the inquiry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make that inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the inquiry?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to have an explanation of the amendment, as to what it will result in, how many men are to be affected, and what its cost will be.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator have reference to the automobile routes?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; to the horse-drawn vehicle rural routes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This amendment simply restores the language of the last bill; that is all it does. It was omitted in the print of the bill with reference to the payment of routes of 24 miles and additional service of 24 miles, and we have simply restored it. The last amendment has reference to the automobile routes over 50 miles in length. It is the language of the last bill, except it does makes an increase of 5 per cent, which was given to the other carriers.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, the $13,000,000 increase asked for, or, to be accurate, $13,355,000 increase, is necessary on account of the amendment which has just been presented by the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; this amendment does not increase the appropriation at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice it is for the pay of rural carriers and that the amount appropriated by the House was $55,445,000, which is increased to $68,800,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, those increases are all due to section 2, which includes a great many increases. For instance, that section increases the pay of the city clerks at first and second class post offices and the city carriers. That amendment was inserted in the other House. I do not think it ought to have gone in; but it did. It is the House proposition, and the increase in these figures simply indicates the amount which ought to have been put into the bill; but the House left it for the Senate to work out.

Mr. SMOOT. I really do not yet understand from what the Senator has said of what this increase really consists. It is—

For pay of rural carriers, substitutes for rural carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of rural stations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, and for the incidental expenses thereof.

For those purposes the House provided an appropriation of $55,445,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator from Utah let me explain that right here?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The figures inserted in the bill by the other House were for the pay of rural carriers on the basic law; but last year they were given a 20 per cent increase. The House, however, did not include that in this bill at all.

Mr. SMOOT. There is included a little over $2,000,000 more than the 20 per cent increase in the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We only increased it this year 5 per cent over what it was last year. We did that because the House had increased the pay of city carriers and clerks in first and second class post offices by $200, I think is the amount.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I understand that this covers——

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator from Utah will turn to section 2 of the bill he will there find the basis of this increase of which he desires an explanation. Section 2 is on page 29.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it would take too much of the time of the Senate to read section 2 and figure out just exactly what it means; but I will take the statement of the Senator from Alabama for granted, and shall not detain the Senate any longer on the matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am quite sure I have stated it correctly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 28, in line 9, after the words "third class," to strike out "and in communities adjacent to cities having city delivery, $1,250,000" and insert "$720,000," so as to make the clause read:

For village delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class, $720,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 10, to strike out:

For experimental motor vehicle truck service in such localities of the United States as the Postmaster General may select, the establishment and extension of such service, the purchase, manufacture, exchange, and repair of equipment, supervision and maintenance, and expenses incidental to conveyance and marketing of produce and commodities, $1,000,000.

And insert:

That to promote the conservation of food products and to facilitate the collection and delivery thereof from producer to consumer and the delivery to producers of articles necessary in the production of such food products, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of motor-vehicle truck routes, to be selected by him. The Postmaster General is further authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of country motor express routes, which shall be primarily operated as a means of expediting the transportation of fourth-class mail between producing and consuming localities and shall not displace or supplant any existing methods of mail transportation or delivery. These two classes of experiments shall be conducted under such rules and regulations, including modifications in rates of postage and in packing and wrapping requirements, as the Postmaster General may prescribe, and to defray the cost thereof the sum of $300,000 is hereby appropriated:

Provided, That mail other than that of the fourth class shall not be dispatched on experimental motor vehicle truck routes or on experimental country motor express routes unless the same can be expedited thereby in delivery at destination:

Provided further, That separate accounts shall be kept of the amount of all the mail of all classes carried on such routes. The Postmaster General shall report to Congress the result of such experiments at the beginning of the next regular session.

Mr. McKELLAR. At the request of the present occupant of the chair [Mr. KING], I ask unanimous consent that this amendment may go over.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, in section 2, page 29, line 24, after the word "That," to strike out "on and after July 1, 1919," and insert "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 2. That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows:

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this amendment brings up the question of making the present salaries of the employees in the department permanent. This amendment makes them simply temporary. I want to say just a word about this matter.

I think that these salaries ought to be made permanent. We have recently passed a bill, and probably very properly so—I am not criticizing it in the least—increasing very largely the salaries of our Federal judges, the necessity for such increase being brought on by the conditions that exist as to all salaried men in this country. We have recently passed other large increase, and we have made those salaries permanent—much larger or quite as large in proportion as the salaries that are here asked to be made permanent. We have recently appropriated $100,000,000 of our money for looking after people in Europe and for looking after the interests of the packing people over on this side of the water. Under these circumstances, it seems to me, it is as little as we can do to make this legislation permanent for these employees of the Government. I therefore hope that this amendment will not be agreed to.

I call attention to the fact that on page 32 virtually the same language is used, also on page 33, and again in the proviso from line 17 to line 26 on page 33 of the bill. I suppose every Senator knows the question at issue. It is merely a plain question of whether we are going to make these salaries permanent. The other House provided for making them permanent, and it seems to me the Senate ought to agree to that proposition in common justice to these employees of the Government. I hope the Senate committee amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope the desire of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] will not be acceeded to. The condition in the Post Office Department—as it is in nearly every other department of the Government—is chaotic. We have made the advances in these appropriations temporary; and we have inserted in the bill a provision to create a commission to investigate the whole question of salaries in the Post Office Department, to undertake to equalize them, and to put them all upon a fair and a just basis.

I do not think this amendment ought to be disturbed. I think the matter ought to go along. Let us agree to the creation of the commission which is provided for in the bill; let that commission take up the whole question of salaries in the Post Office Department, go over them all thoroughly in every branch of the Postal Service, and equalize them. Some of them may be higher than they ought to be, and some of them may be lower than they ought to be under the conditions. Nobody now, Mr. President, can tell what the conditions are going to be a year from now. It may be then absolutely necessary to reduce some of the salaries which we have now provided for under the existing extraordinary conditions. I say, leave that all to the commission, and let them work it out. I hope, therefore, the amendment proposed by the committee will not be disturbed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the amendment reported by the committee is a very wise one for this reason: The increases which have been given to the employees in all of the other departments of the Government have been what may be termed temporary increases. Last year the increase was $120. The basic rate of payment was not interfered with at all; but there was a temporary increase on account of the conditions existing. If the legislative appropriation bill this year becomes a law, I do not think it is out of the way for me to say that so far as the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee have acted it is in favor of increasing the $120 of last year to $240 for this year. I have not any doubt the committee would absolutely refuse to consider an increase of all statutory rates of pay by $240, to be hereafter paid, but it is left to Congress to decide what may be done under the conditions which may exist a year hence; whether the increase shall be $120 or $240 or $360. That question is to be decided at that time. I see a provision is contained in this bill for the creation of a commission for the very purpose of examining into the whole question of salaries to be paid the employees of the Government.

As I said a year ago, Mr. President, there ought to be a commission appointed, and appointed quickly, to go into the question of the rearrangement of the salaries paid in every department of this Government. I assert that there are now some of the most glaring discriminations in the salaries paid in the different departments of our Government of which it is possible for the human mind to conceive. The quicker a commission is appointed to go into this question the better it will be. I do not mean merely to skim the question over or to make some report that a certain head of a certain division ought to receive an increase of salary because of the work that he may be doing at that particular time, but I mean that the investigation of such a commission ought to be so thorough that it would be acceptable to any man who made an examination of the matter; I might say that it should be just as thorough as if the Government of the United States were a great, big business concern, and the investigation was made upon business principles and not upon favoritism or upon political "pull."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I understood the Senator a while ago to say that the Appropriations Committee had increased certain salaries?

Mr. SMOOT. Statutory salaries; yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Temporarily?

Mr. SMOOT. Temporarily; for this year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the committee not also provided for the appointment of a commission?

Mr. SMOOT. It will provide for it if the House conferees yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I mean that the Senator's committee is in favor of the appointment of a commission to adjust this whole matter, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely; and I am in favor of a commission in this case to adjust salaries in the Post Office Department. I think it would be a very wise thing to do, to have a commission created, if the House agrees to the Senate provision and the Senate agrees to the action taken by the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee. Then, of course, such action would cover all of the other departments of the Government.

I know it is said that perhaps this ought not to be done at this particular time on account of the unusual conditions existing in the United States; but I have had enough experience in my service here in the Senate to know that if the commission were appointed this year, before a thorough examination could be made—and unless it is a thorough one it will be of no value whatever—conditions more than likely will be normal; and this is the time that we want to know just what to do in order that equal and exact justice may be rendered to all of the employees of the Government. Therefore, Mr. President, I really think that the amendment of the committee is a very wise one, and I hope the Senate will agree to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not think it would be wise to legislate a permanent salary list, but for reasons somewhat different from that expressed by my associates. My objection is that, if we should do so, the permanency would end with the next fiscal year. The constant demand for increased salaries will find favorable response here just so long as there is any money in the Treasury to devote to that purpose, and to speak of a permanent salary list is to express a contradiction in terms; as a celebrated nurse in one of Dickens's novels said, "There ain't no such thing."

Mr. President, I am aware, and, of course, have been so ever since the war began, that the rise in the cost of living bears very hard upon the salaried elements of society. Their compensation being fixed and the price of all the necessities of life being in a state of constant upward progression, this class necessarily feels the consequences of the disarrangement more severely, and perhaps more generally, than any other class. The time was when the wage earner suffered similarly, but in these days of organization he has been able not only to take care of himself but to utilize the emergency by securing a large increase over and above the cost of living. Hence I sympathize very deeply with the demand of the salaried classes for additional compensation, notwithstanding the fact that the giving of it brings no relief whatever.

This bill provides for an increase aggregating $12,500,000 over and above the amount provided in the bill of last year, which was in turn an increase over its predecessor, and that in turn contained increases over the bill which preceded it. I am not a prophet, and never pretended to be; indeed, it required no prophet at that time to predict that the relief sought for would prove in practice of no avail, and it did not.

Mr. President, you have probably noticed that every request for an increase of salary is backed by the enthusiastic approval of the press, by the commercial bodies, by the landlords, by the grocers, and by the dry-goods people. Why? Because they know that these increases will bring a profit to them and to nobody else. The Government clerk becomes merely a conduit through which the money of the United States passes from its Treasury to the purveyor. So it has been, so it is, and so it ever will be.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Assuming that that is the case, should that prevent us from giving to the clerk, through whom it is conveyed, a living wage?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will only define what is a "living wage," I would be better able to answer his question.

Mr. McKELLAR. With the ordinary expenses that I have upon me I find that $7,500 quickly disappears in this city, and I wonder how the clerks with such small salaries get along at all.

Mr. THOMAS. That is undoubtedly true; and if the Senator were receiving $10,000 a year he would find himself in the same condition.

Mr. McKELLAR. On that theory, then, we had better cut all salaries down to nothing.

Mr. THOMAS. It would be just as logical and just as efficient. Why, Mr. President, the business of extorting money—perhaps I use too strong an expression—the business of securing money for the necessities of life from the salaried class has developed into an exact science.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am obliged to agree with the Senator about that.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator, who gets $7,500 a year, finds that it costs him at least that to live here. If he only got $1,200, the purveyors would still accommodate him, or attempt to do so; but I have not a particle of doubt that if the Congress should seriously consider the propriety of advancing the salaries of its Members to $10,000 every landlord, the proprietor of every department store, and the proprietor of every grocery store would hail it with great satisfaction; in fact, with unalloyed enthusiasm, because they would see an additional $2,500 apiece for something over 425 Members of Congress for their annual incomes. I am in favor of fixing a living wage if it were possible, but it is not. No man can obtain a salary raise fast enough to catch up with, to say nothing about overtaking, those who furnish the supplies of life. For that reason I have opposed the raising of these salaries, because the recipients of them are just as well off as they are after this money has been appropriated from the Treasury.

There is a way of meeting it, in my judgment. I think the Government should provide, even though it may result in a deficit or in added public expense, a rate for shelter by furnishing the shelter and a rate for the necessities of life by furnishing the necessities of life under a living wage, and then pay that wage. The Government would not lose anything like as much as it does under the prevailing system. Talk about a permanent wage scale! It is impossible.

This is a real need; I recognize that; but a year from now the need will be just as real, and we will have to give just as much more, because, to use an expression I once heard used by a prominent business man here, the slack will be taken up long before Congress makes another appropriation. So that the whole business, Mr. President, of increasing salaries consists of a losing race between the salary earner and the purveyor; and, of course, there is an added incentive to the purveyor to increase his prices, because he knows from experience that we will meet the increase by giving the employee a little more. He can deprive the wage earner or the receiver of the salary during the next fiscal year of the benefit of the increase.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The natural effect of the bill which we passed the other day appropriating $100,000,000 to European sufferers is to keep up the price of meat nearly to the present standard. This was admitted by Senators upon this floor.

Mr. THOMAS. I think so; but the prices will stay up anyhow—certainly in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. That bill has the effect of increasing the price of meat. Having enacted that legislation, does the Senator think it would be unfair, looked at even from his standpoint, to give the very poorly paid Government clerks sufficient salary to enable them to get meat at the price to which we have seen fit to increase it?

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator can not reproach me for the $100,000,000 legislation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am delighted to know that I can not.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not vote for it, and if there is anything wrong in its enactment my conscience is clear.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not reproaching the Senator for it; I remember his vote; but I was just asking how he makes his present reasoning jibe with that bill?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want to leave that statement incomplete. Because of the exigency I would have voted for it if I had thought we had the constitutional power to enact it; but I can never understand why, if the Congress appropriates $100,000,000 for one purpose, that is a justification, or even an excuse, for appropriating millions of dollars for some other purpose. I know that the precedents are established, and that in consequence of them we are multiplying our expenditures very rapidly, so that now we are making appropriations by millions upon millions, and the Almighty Himself can hardly predict what the total will be between now and the 4th of March.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator misunderstands my position. I will say that my proposition is that if by legislation we have kept up the price of meat—the meat which the Government clerks must have upon which to live—it is absolutely right that we should also place their salaries at such a rate that they can get meat occasionally.

Mr. THOMAS. The sum of $100,000,000 is very large in the abstract, but it is relatively very small in the effect that it will have upon the price of commodities in this country; it is not a drop in the bucket, so to speak. Moreover, prices are sustained in these days not so much by the demand for the commodity as by the control of the product. I do not think that the purchase by the Government of $100,000,000 worth of foodstuffs, which must be made in large part from those having control of them, will sensibly affect the current prices for these commodities. But whether that be true or not, I can perceive no argument whatever in the proposition that because large sums of money have been appropriated for one purpose, the indirect effect of that purpose will justify other large appropriations.

I might say to the Senator, to comfort him, that my opposition to this measure is the very surest way to make it effective, for I am not sensible yet of having ever opposed successfully an appropriation in the Senate of the United States, and I do not know that I ever shall. I will say very frankly that this appropriation has the merit of necessity behind it, my objection being that it will not accomplish the purpose that its advocates seem to think. If I thought it would, I would vote for it in a moment, but sad experience tells me that we are merely by these indirect processes furnishing money to those who do not need any assistance from us.

We have expended a great deal of money here in the District in the building of public structures for the sheltering of employees of the Government. I do not know whether they are occupied yet or not. I think it is a good start in the proper direction; and if we will follow it up by provisioning these places and bringing the cost of livelihood down where it ought to be, we will not only by that means confer a boon upon the public officials, but we will also sensibly affect the price of the necessities of life to the residents of this District. That, however, is perhaps too obvious a method of proceeding to justify its successful consideration by the Congress.

This will go through; there is no doubt about it; but do not try to make it permanent, because it is simply a waste of time and a waste of breath. It will be as temporary as the bill itself, to be followed next year by appropriations of similar, if not greater, increases to meet the added cost of living; and the local press and the purveyors, as usual, will be behind that with all their energy and all their enthusiasm, shedding crocodile tears over the terrible condition of the poor wage earner, but having their claws extended in anticipation of the harvest that is to come to them when the bill becomes a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWANSON in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

CARE OF SOLDIERS WHEN TRAVELING.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I apologize for calling the attention of the Senate to a matter which is extraneous to the pending bill, but there seems to me to be no subject that is more worthy of our immediate consideration at any time than this.

I ask the Secretary to read from the desk a communication which I have received from the chairman of the Red Cross Chapter of Parkersburg, W. Va.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WOOD COUNTY (W. VA.) CHAPTER,
THE AMERICAN RED CROSS,
Parkersburg, W. Va., January 28, 1919.

HON. HOWARD SUTHERLAND,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: At a conference of the chairman and other members of the canteen committee of our local chapter of the American Red Cross it was decided that I should most earnestly call attention to the proper authorities of the Government to the lack of care being given wounded soldiers transported via Parkersburg.

Complaints are made from time to time of lack of water, heat, and proper food on the trains. During this month the canteen here has furnished 5,150 men with some character of food and refreshment. There is a lack of system and uniformity with reference to the arrangements, and therefore a great deal of confusion exists, and the canteen is being called upon to bear expenses out of all proportion to the size of our chapter and the condition of our treasury.

We think that the Government should provide some character of service on hospital trains which would insure wounded soldiers having proper food and nourishment, without depending solely on canned food and canteen service. If the canteen, however, is expected to furnish meals and food in the amount which we are now doing, some provision should be made for compensation. It is true that occasionally officers reimburse the canteen, but there is no system or uniformity with regard to the matter.

We respectfully request information as to the policy and practice of the Government with reference to these matters, and in our particular case we would like to have telegraphic information in advance what character of food is desired, whether or not soldiers have equipment, and general instructions. We likewise feel that a train should be in charge of some one responsible officer or person. Our present experience is that at times Young Men's Christian Association men are seemingly in charge, and in one instance, particularly, our experience was extremely disagreeable. It is probable the Government has definite rules with reference to these matters, but if so they are not being carried out, and in very few instances has the canteen been reimbursed for any outlay which it has made.

Referring again to the cost which we are undergoing, our budget provides $100 a month for canteen work, and it can be readily seen that to carry out the work as we are now being compelled to do is absolutely out of the question.

Very truly,

JOHN MARSHALL,
Chairman Wood County Chapter,
American Red Cross.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, it seems that soldiers are being transported to and fro over our railroad systems, particularly those now returning from Europe, many of them wounded soldiers, without adequate preparation being made en route for their care and feeding. It seems to me that this is a situation that should not exist. It seems to me that to require the communities through which these soldiers pass to provide for the food and care of these men as they pass through the several stations en route to their final destination is an injustice which this Government should not contemplate. We have appropriated, and are appropriating, large sums of money for the support of the War Department, and the virtual quartering of these soldiers upon these communities in time of peace is an injustice which is not contemplated even by the Constitution, and which is practically prohibited. It is not exactly a quartering, but it is virtually a quartering upon the population of soldiers in time of peace.

It would seem to me that those in the War Department in charge of the transportation of those soldiers should adopt some policy by which advance information could be sent to those stations where they are to be stopped for feeding, so that proper food can be arranged for; and this service should be paid for by the Government rather than by the communities through which these soldiers pass. It is most deplorable that these hospital trains, carrying wounded men from the battle fields in France, should be found to be absolutely lacking in the essentials for the comfort of these wounded men.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and not only of the Senate but of the country at large, to this question, which is no doubt pressing upon many communities besides the one which is immediately complaining in this case; and I desire particularly to call the attention of the Quartermaster Department of the War Department to the necessity of better arrangements for sending these men to their destinations over our railroad systems.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have here a joint memorial of the Legislature of Colorado, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the memorial, in the absence of objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I object to the reading of the joint memorial at this time. I want to proceed with this bill and dispose of certain sections of it, and then I shall be perfectly willing to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It will take me but a minute to do it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will not the gentleman permit it to be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it ought to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator insist upon it now, or will he wait until later?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am helpless. If I object to it going into the RECORD, the Senator will read it himself.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly I can read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the memorial.

The Secretary read as follows:

(House joint resolution 2. By Mabel Ruth Baker.)

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

Whereas Colorado has long enjoyed the help and counsel of its women in all matters of citizenship, and has by these years of experience demonstrated the benefits to be derived by equal suffrage; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States a constitutional amendment providing for national woman suffrage: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge the United States Senate to take up and pass at the earliest possible date this constitutional amendment, in order that all the women of the Nation may have the right of suffrage, which they have so completely earned, and the Nation have the benefit of their citizenship; and be it further

Resolved, That we commend our United States Senators and Members of Congress for the work they have done in behalf of the Federal suffrage amendment, and urge them to continue their endeavors until success shall crown their efforts.

This is to certify that the above house joint resolution No. 2 was duly passed in both the Senate and House of Representatives of Colorado on January 3, 1919, by the following vote:

In the senate: Yeas, 31; nays, 1; absent or excused, 3.

In the house: Yeas, 65; nays, none; absent or excused, none.

Respectfully,

HARRY P. MASON,
Chief Clerk, House of Representatives.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that the one vote given by a senator against the adoption of that joint resolution was cast by a man who stated that he had no objection to the joint resolution itself, but was opposed to voting upon any joint resolution memorializing Congress.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 31, line 6, after the word "to," to strike out "$1,700" and insert "$1,800," so as to make the clause read:

The Postmaster General shall classify and fix the salaries of railway postal clerks, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in the grades provided by law; and for the purpose of organization and establishing maximum grades to which promotions may be made successively, as hereinafter provided, he shall classify railway post offices, terminal railway post offices, and transfer offices with reference to their character and importance in three classes, with salary grades as follows: Class A, $1,100 to $1,500; class B, $1,100 to $1,600; class C, $1,100 to $1,800. He may assign to the offices of division superintendents and chief clerks such railway postal clerks as may be necessary and fix their salaries within the grades provided by law without regard to the classification of railway post offices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 1, after the word "That," to strike out "on and after July 1, 1919," and insert "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920," so as to read:

Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the compensation of each rural letter carrier for serving a rural route of 24 miles and over, six days in the week, shall be, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the words "and over."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 32, line 5, after the words "shall be," to strike out "$1,440 and $24 per mile for each mile or major fraction thereof over 24 miles per annum, payable monthly"; in line 8, after the word "miles," to strike out "$1,382" and insert "$1,440"; in line 9, after the words "miles," to strike out "$1,296" and insert "$1,350"; in line 10, after the word "miles," to strike out "$1,152" and insert "$1,200"; in line 11, after the word "miles," to strike out "$1,008" and insert "$1,050"; in line 12, after the word "miles," to strike out "$864" and insert "$900"; in line 13, after the word "miles," to strike out "$806" and insert "$840"; in line 14, after the word "miles," to strike "$748" and insert "$780"; in line 15, after the word "miles," to strike out "$691" and insert "$720"; in line 16, after the word "miles," to strike out "$633" and insert "$660"; in line 17, after the word "miles," to strike out "$576" and insert "$600"; in line 23, after the word "That," to strike out "hereafter" and insert "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920"; on page 33, line 6, after the word "law," to insert "Provided further, That no office shall be advanced to third class by reason of the temporary increases herein provided: Provided further"; in line 8, after the word "That," to strike out "hereafter" and insert "during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920"; and in line 13, after the word "mentioned," to strike out "herein" and insert "in this section and certain assistant postmasters at first and second class post offices and certain supervisory officials whose salaries are specifically increased by this act: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to employees who receive a part of their pay from any outside sources under cooperative arrangement with the Post Office Department or to employees who serve voluntarily or receive only a nominal compensation: And provided furrther, That the increased compensation at the rate of 5 per cent, 10 per cent, and 15 per cent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, shall not be computed as salary in construing this section. So much as may be necessary for the increases provided for in this act is hereby appropriated," so as to make the clause read:

Clerks in class A shall be promoted successively to grade 3, clerks in class B shall be promoted successively to grade 4, and clerks in class C shall be promoted successively to grade 5, at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of a year's satisfactory service in the next lower grade. Promotions above these grades within the maximum grades of the classification may be made in the discretion of the Postmaster General for meritorious service. No promotion shall be made except upon evidence satisfactory to the Post Office Department of the efficiency and faithfulness of the employee during the preceding year: Provided further, That clerks assigned as clerks in charge of crews consisting of more than one clerk shall be clerks of grades 6 to 10, inclusive, and may be promoted one grade only after three years' satisfactory and faithful service in such capacity: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the compensation of each rural letter carrier for serving a rural route of 24 miles, six days in the week, shall be $1,500; on routes 22 miles and less than 24 miles, $1,440; on routes 20 miles and less than 22 miles, $1,350; on routes 18 miles and less than 20 miles, $1,200; on routes 16 miles and less than 18 miles, $1,050; on routes 14 miles and less than 16 miles, $900; on routes 12 miles and less than 14 miles, $840; on routes 10 miles and less than 12 miles, $780; on routes 8 miles and less than 10 miles, $720; on routes 6 miles and less than 8 miles, $660; on routes 4 miles and less than 6 miles, $600. A rural letter carrier serving one triweekly route shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half the length of the route served by him, and a carrier serving two triweekly routes shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half of the combined length of the two routes: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, postmasters of the fourth class shall receive the same compensation as now provided by law, except that they shall receive 100 per cent of the cancellations of the first $100 or less per quarter: Provided further, That if the compensation does not exceed $75 for any one quarter, fourth-class postmasters shall be allowed an increase of 20 per cent of the compensation allowed under existing law: Provided further, That no office shall be advanced to third class by reason of the temporary increases herein provided: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the increased compensation provided in section 2 of the act approved July 2, 1918, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, shall remain the same for employees other than those mentioned in this section and certain assistant postmasters at first and second class post offices and certain supervisory officials whose salaries are specifically increased by this act: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to employees who receive a part of their pay from any outside sources under cooperative arrangement with the Post Office Department, or to employees who serve voluntarily or receive only a nominal compensation: And provided further, That the increased compensation, at the rate of 5 per cent, 10 per cent, and 15 per cent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, shall not be computed as salary in construing this section. So much as may be necessary for the increases provided for in this act is hereby appropriated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if there have been any increases in any of these salaries, except temporary increases of a certain per cent, so as to reach the same level of advancement that has been reached in the other departments?

Mr. BANKHEAD. All the increases that have been made in this bill are temporary. No permanent increases have been made.

Mr. KING. And what has been the general increase in salaries?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suppose I might say the general increase has been about $200.

Mr. KING. What is the amount of the appropriations carried by this bill in excess of the Post Office appropriation bill for the preceding year?

Mr. BANKHEAD. About $40,000,000, exclusive of the good-roads item.

Mr. KING. And is that all in salaries, or are there other items?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Practically all in salaries.

Mr. KING. In view of the tremendous obligations which this Government has assumed, those paid and those unpaid, the difficulty that we will experience in collecting the $6,000,000,000 which the present revenue bill levies upon the people, and in view of the fact that billions of dollars are to be met in the future, I ask the Senator whether he thinks we are justified in adding to this appropriation $40,000,000 for one year?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think we are, under the conditions, so long as we are adding this amount to the pay of employees of all other departments of the Government.

Mr. KING. And what is added by way of appropriation for roads?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Two hundred million dollars in three years—$50,000,000 this year and $75,000,000 during each of the two next fiscal years.

Mr. KING. Has the committee having this bill in charge taken into account the ways and means by which the revenue is to be obtained to meet these rapidly increasing expenditures?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the business of the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate. They will attend to that.

Mr. KING. The Senator is of the opinion that the majority of us—those who do not belong to the Finance Committee—may devise ways and means of spending money, but the sole responsibility of devising ways and means of raising money will rest upon that committee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, we are all going to support the report of the committee when it comes in. So is the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Oh, obviously this Government will have to meet the expenditures which an extravagant Congress makes. We can not repudiate the obligations that will be incurred by appropriation bills of that character. It does seem to me, though, that somebody in this Chamber ought to be protesting against the extravagant expenditures that are constantly being made. I do not refer particularly to this bill, but to other bills. There seems to be no plan by which to conserve the resources of the Government, to cut down expenses; and we justify these growing expenses upon the ground that prices have gone up, and therefore we must increase the expenditures of the Government. It seems to me that we will have an empty Treasury long before all of these obligations have been met.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope to be able to proceed with one or two more sections of the bill to-night; and when we reach the good-roads amendment, which the Senator from Utah has in his mind, I shall move to adjourn until to-morrow. I just want to finish up the part of this bill which provides the appropriations for the Post Office Department. There are only one or two more pages of it, on which there will be no trouble.

Mr. KING. I suppose it is futile to attempt any emendation of this bill. I know how obnoxious a Senator makes himself if he opposes an appropriation. I have seen the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and others who have tried to effectuate reforms run over by this juggernaut time and time again. I suppose the prostrate forms of these undying heroes will be found occasionally; but those forms will not even be reminders of the solemn duty which rests upon the Senators to try to have economical Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to say that there are some of us carrying recent bruises from the juggernaut car.

Mr. KING. I think that is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, at the top of page 34, to strike out:

SEC. 3. That a commission consisting of five members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the United States Senate and five members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the chairman of the respective committees, is hereby authorized to investigate the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service with a view to the reclassification and readjustment of such salaries on an equitable basis; and said commission shall make a report with recommendation to Congress at the first day of the next regular session. The expense of such inquiry shall be paid from the unexpended balance of any appropriation for the Postal Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

And to insert:

SEC. 3. That a commission consisting of five members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the United States Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, is hereby authorized to investigate the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service with a view to the reclassification and readjustment of such salaries on an equitable basis. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

The commission is authorized to sit during the sessions or recess of Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such clerical and expert services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purpose of this investigation.

The heads of the Post Office Department, postmasters, supervising officials, and employees of the Postal Service shall furnish data and information and make investigations upon request of the commission.

It shall be the duty of the commission to report by bill or otherwise, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation and what reclassification and readjustment of compensation should be made. The expense of such investigation shall be paid from the unexpended balance of any appropriation for the Postal Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, or for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and disbursed upon vouchers approved by the commission, which approval shall be conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Treasury Department. Funds necessary for the expenses of the commission shall become available upon the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I believe we are about to begin the consideration of section 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Senator is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It will be impossible to proceed much further with the bill to-night. There are a number of Senators here who want a morning hour. Therefore I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama withhold his motion?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have here an address of about 10 minutes which was delivered by Mr. John L. Lentz, a former Member of the House of Representatives, at the Coliseum in Rome. It is a very patriotic address, and will occupy but a very small space in printed form. I ask that it be printed as a public document.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I move that it be made a public document.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 31, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 30, 1919.

The House met at 11 a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, infinite in all Thine attributes, gracious in Thine acts, generous in Thy gifts, make us more appreciative of Thy goodness and wonderful works to the children of men, and responsive to all that is good and pure in our being, that we may fulfill the duties and obligations of life this day and always, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMERCIAL CABLE CO.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a short letter of 10 or 12 lines from the Solicitor of the Post Office Department, together with an attached letter from Postmaster General Burleson to Mr. George G. Ward, the vice president of the Commercial Cable Co., of New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks leave to print certain letters from the Postmaster General, and so on. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the letters referred to:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, January 29, 1919.

Hon. JOHN A. MOON,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MOON: In connection with the letter of January 25, 1919, from Mr. George G. Ward, vice president of the Commercial Cable Co., to the Postmaster General, relative to certain orders received by that company from the war department of the British Government, which I understand has been put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I inclose herewith for your information, and in order that you may, if you see fit, put it also in the RECORD, a copy of the Postmaster General's reply to Mr. Ward's letter.

Very truly, yours,

W. H. LAMAR,
Solicitor.

JANUARY 28, 1919.

Mr. GEORGE G. WARD,
Vice President Commercial Cable Co.,
253 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

SIR: Your letter of the 25th instant quoting order issued to your company by the war department of the British Government received. In reply to your inquiry with respect thereto it seems only necessary to state that the English Government is exercising control over the property of and persons connected with the Commercial Cable Co. located in the British possessions. And under the joint resolution of Congress this Government, through the Postmaster General, is controlling the operations of the cable properties within its jurisdiction. You have been relieved by me of all duties affecting the operation of cables of your company, so far as the jurisdiction of this Government is concerned over the cables of the Commercial Co. I have no instructions to issue to you in regard to any requirements that the British Government may require of you as an officer of the Commercial Co. as a corporation and relating to the property of the company or the conduct of its officials or agents located and operating in the British possessions and with respect to which that Government has assumed control.

Respectfully,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization may have five days within which to file a minority report on the bill H. R. 15302, the exclusion immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization have five days within which to file a minority report on the new immigration bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. I would like further, Mr. Speaker, to ask unanimous consent that there be a reprint of 2,000 copies of the bill and report. It is a very important measure, and the number of copies now available is altogether inadequate.

The SPEAKER. How many did the gentleman say?

Mr. BURNETT. Two thousand.

The SPEAKER. That 2,000 copies of the bill, together with both reports, be printed as a House document. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that the gentleman desires to have the bill printed in document form?

Mr. BURNETT. I simply wanted to have it available for the Members.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker included the bill in document form by inadvertence. The request is for a reprint of the bill and the reports. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for six minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for six minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Reserving the right to object for a moment, may I ask the gentleman to yield to me? I have a correction of the RECORD that I want to make.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will attend to that if leave is given to the gentleman from New York; and if not, he will attend to it anyway. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, several Members called the attention of the House yesterday to conditions at St. Elizabeths Hospital in Washington. I spoke to some of the Members who referred to the matter and their information was based upon articles appearing in one of the local papers and in a New York newspaper.

I went to St. Elizabeths Hospital yesterday afternoon and made a personal inspection of that institution. I know there are a good many Members who were quite concerned as to the nature of the reports made, and I want to say that, in my opinion, the reports appearing in the local papers and in the New York paper are not justified.

The St. Elizabeths Hospital is an institution for the insane. It is an insane asylum and a typical institution of that character. There are no shell-shock soldiers there at all. There are no soldiers there for medical treatment. Of course, some mental cases may also require medical treatment and they receive it. They are all mental cases. It is true that there are a good many mild cases there, but it is necessary to send them to some institution where they can remain under observation and later be discharged if they go back to normal condition.

Now, the only objection that might be found might be that it is improper to send mild cases to St. Elizabeths and keep them there for a short period. The answer to that is that we have no other institution in the United States where military mental cases may be sent. These cases have been through various local hospitals and have been under the observation of regimental and base hospital doctors, and owing to their mental condition are recommended for treatment at St. Elizabeths.

The new buildings, the pavilions erected since the war, are ideal buildings. They are one-story cement structures and they are up to date in every respect. Some of the older buildings were put up in 1855 and some in 1873. Of course, they are not as up to date as the new barracks and are rather gloomy. But I want to say this, that there is nothing at St. Elizabeths that requires congressional attention or is sufficient to warrant any uneasiness on our part.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How many are there of those soldiers?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There are 3,775 patients in all, civilian and soldiers, and about half of those are soldiers from all over the United States, at all times, all together, and there are about 1,400 soldiers that have been sent there since the war. These men have been dragged out of 4,000,000 men that we drafted. All of them are not from overseas service.

The food is reasonably good. It is the usual food of such institutions. I was there at supper time last night, and both the bed patients' food and the ward patients' food was substantial and the kitchen and the service clean.

Now, I want to point out to the House that the superintendent of that institution will have his hands full to-day and to-morrow and the next day owing to the reports that appeared in the papers. Every one of the patients that I spoke to yesterday referred to these articles in the papers. It is going to cause no little uneasiness on the part of those 3,775 patients that the superintendent and staff have on their hands.

We get all sorts of complaints here, and I think that when complaints come in, before we take them up on the floor, we might well go out and see for ourselves. I inspected one institution in New York recently and St. Elizabeths yesterday. There are a good many complaints coming now concerning Walter Reed Hospital. I would suggest to the Members to go there.

Mr. SHERWOOD. What is the nature of their complaints?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of the Walter Reed Hospital?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The complaints about the Walter Reed Hospital are, briefly, that there are no laundry facilities for crippled men, that the food is not up to the standard, that they are crowded, and that there is insufficient medical treatment.

Mr. SHERWOOD. There are about 2,000 patients there?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not know. I have not been at the Walter Reed Hospital. I would prefer that some other Member go there and see for himself. It is not necessary to get a resolution for a congressional investigation. We can go and see for ourselves. I have seen two of these hospitals, and I would prefer that some other Member go there and then come back and tell us about it. All of these institutions have a hard job on their hands at this time. If criticism is just, we want to get a remedy. If I understand our duty, it is not enough to get up and criticize. We want to criticize where criticism is deserved, and we want to discourage criticism where it is not warranted.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. LAZARO. What does the gentleman mean when he says Members ought to visit an institution like Walter Reed Hospital? How long would you stay there, and what kind of a visit would you have up there, in order to get the information?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would do it in this way: A Member has eyes, ears, a nose, a mouth. He can taste the food, he can observe conditions, he can talk to the men, he can look around. I believe it is a good thing to do.

Mr. LAZARO. I agree with the gentleman about that, but the gentleman will admit that one would have to spend a good deal of time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes, indeed; I work 18 hours a day, but I consider such work part of my duties.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a senate joint memorial of the Idaho Legislature, eulogizing the late Col. Roosevelt.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks to have printed in the RECORD a resolution of the legislature of his State eulogizing the late Col. Roosevelt. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has not this resolution been printed in the RECORD by action of the other body?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; I looked through the RECORD and found that it had not been printed.

Mr. MANN. It probably will be printed two or three times before we are through with it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint memorial is as follows:

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Robert O. Jones, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of senate joint memorial No. 1 (by Whitcomb), which was filed in this office on the 21st day of January, A. D. 1919, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 22d day of January, in the year of our Lord 1919 and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third.

[SEAL.] ROBERT O. JONES,
Secretary of State.

Senate joint memorial 1.

To the Hon. D. W. Davis, governor of Idaho:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the telegraphed announcement of the death of Hon. Theodore Roosevelt brings to each of us a sense of personal and general loss in the passing away of him whom we believed to be the greatest American citizen of his generation; and

Whereas Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, as a public official, a brave soldier, President of the United States, and, finally, as the leading private citizen of his country, has, through the force of his utterances and example of his life, been the chief factor in remodeling and reviving the plans and purposes of our Government and bringing home to its people more clearly the need for civic righteousness; and

Whereas the American public will hold his memory in grateful regard, we feel that the people of this State, in commemoration of the passing of this great American, will desire to show their sorrow and regard in a becoming way: It is therefore

Resolved, That his excellency, Hon. D. W. Davis, governor of Idaho, is hereby petitioned to declare, by executive proclamation, the day appointed for the funeral obsequies a public holiday, when all public offices shall close; and we express the hope that in this proclamation it shall be requested that business, so far as possible, shall cease for a time on that day, and that appropriate memorial services shall be held in the churches and schools.

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Idaho is hereby instructed to present this memorial to the governor of the State, Hon. D. W. Davis, as soon as it shall have been passed by the Senate and House of Representatives of Idaho; and shall also be instructed to forward this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, and a copy of the same to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State. He is also hereby instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt.

This joint memorial passed the senate on the 8th day of January, 1919.

C. C. MOORE,
President of the Senate.

This joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 8th day of January, 1919.

M. A. KIGER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I hereby certify that the within senate joint memorial No. 1 originated in the senate during the fifteenth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

PAUL DAVIS,
Secretary of the Senate.

LEAVE TO FILE MINORITY VIEWS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Claims, I ask unanimous consent to file a minority report (No. 905, pt. 2) on S. 2885, favorably reported from the committee.

The SPEAKER. How many days does the gentleman want in which to file the views of the minority?

Mr. BLANTON. Two days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for two days to print a minority report on S. 2885, reported from the Committee on Claims. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, further I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD concerning minority reports that I will file against claims which I do not consider meritorious.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on minority reports that he has made on certain claims. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the discussion which has taken place relating to St. Elizabeths Hospital, I do not know whether one of the difficulties out there has been the fact that they have detailed a number of soldiers to act as attendants at the hospital, men who have had no training, no experience with insane cases, no special knowledge regarding the care of insane patients. One soldier called on me here the other day stating that he had been detailed there as an attendant much against his wish; that he had no knowledge or experience relating to such matters; that he had been assaulted by insane patients, and was really in fear of trouble either to himself or to the insane patients with whom he might come in contact. I do not know the reason for this, but it strikes me as rather peculiar and odd that in an insane hospital supported by the Government, and heretofore, at least, amply supported by the Government, it should be necessary to detail private soldiers who have had no experience at all in such matters to act as attendants in an insane hospital.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. LEVER, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15018) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina as to these numerous editors provided on page 3, lines 3 and 4. Are all of these editors provided for in the existing law?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; there is no change.

Mr. CRAMTON. And with the new publications that the department is putting out, which are very numerous, they have not increased the force of the department?

Mr. LEVER. I think not. Most of the editorial work is now concentrated in the Secretary's office, except the Bureau of Publications.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, there is one additional editor provided for later on in the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not informed how they are edited, but there is an increasing number of publications in all the departments. They have become so numerous in the departmental desire to give publicity that they are defeating their own purpose. The newspapers are so overwhelmed with them that they have no time to read them, and it has become a waste of paper and good printers' ink.

Mr. MANN. Does any gentleman in the House, or anybody else, know how many serial publications the Government is now conducting in the various departments?

Mr. CRAMTON. I started to make a collection of those that came to my office, but they came to me so fast and the collection became so voluminous that I had to give it up to make room for other things.

Mr. LEVER. I think there is a great deal of force in the suggestion that the various departments are flooding the country with publications so numerous that the people are not reading them. I do not know that that is true of the Department of Agriculture, because I think the publications have been very valuable the past year.

Mr. CRAMTON. I know that some of them are valuable; but each bureau is aspiring to get out a more pretentious magazine than the others, and the newspaper offices of the country are flooded with them, with the result that they are so numerous that they have not time to read them, and all go into the wastebasket. If there is any new editor provided for in this bill, I would like to make a point of order against it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Michigan permit?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware of the practice of one bureau in the Department of Agriculture furnishing to the newspapers of the country not only material to fill the inside——

Mr. CRAMTON. Boiler plate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Boiler plate, so that it can be printed in the weekly and daily editions? Can the chairman advise the House how much money is being expended by the Department of Agriculture for publications?

Mr. LEVER. I can not offhand.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the committee ever made any inquiry of anybody connected with the department in regard to it?

Mr. LEVER. Not within the last two years. The gentleman knows that there was carried in one of his bills an appropriation of $600,000 for farmers' bulletins.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; that is for the use of Members of Congress, and those bulletins are distributed throughout the country and are a benefit to agriculture. But the gentleman from Michigan is directing the attention of the House to the practice of the departments, and this department in particular, in publishing serial magazines, furnishing articles weekly to newspapers throughout the country and in going to the extent of furnishing so-called boiler plate for insertions in their papers.

I think some investigation should be made. We have a Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture. They have a clerk, but I question whether they have had a meeting during this Congress.

Mr. LEVER. That brings up the old question of the activities of the Expenditures Committee. I wish they would look into these matters. It is almost impossible for a big Appropriation Committee to go into all of these things.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's committee could have made the inquiry of the chief clerk or somebody connected with the department and got that information.

Mr. LEVER. We might have done so.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think he could get the information as to how much money the Agricultural Department is spending on publications if he searched for a year?

Mr. LEVER. I think it would be difficult, but I believe we could approximate it.

Mr. MANN. You might guess at it. May I ask the gentleman a question? I see the bill provides for two Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture. We have had for a long time an Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, and I guess very capable gentlemen have filled the office. They have no duties to perform except to travel around the country and occasionally instruct the people about agricultural matters, generally not knowing very much about it themselves. What is the occasion of providing two supernumeraries over there instead of one?

Mr. LEVER. I hope the new Assistant Secretary will not be considered a supernumerary. The gentleman recognizes that the department has grown very rapidly.

Mr. MANN. I do know that the department is efficient, the bureaus are efficient, and the efficiency has increased in the past very largely by the fact that they are not interfered with above the chief of the bureau. The old Secretary of Agriculture, under whom the great developments took place, Mr. Wilson, considered it largely his duty to stand by the work that the chief was doing.

Mr. LEVER. I think that is the policy of the present Secretary, and yet the work of the office of the Secretary of Agriculture has increased enormously and the detailed work of the Secretary's office has grown so much that I am convinced as a Cabinet officer he ought to be given some time to think, rather than to be asked to fool with small details, and it was for that purpose that I was willing to consent, and the committee agreed to allowing an additional secretary, who may take some of the detail work off the shoulders of the Secretary.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, at least ever since I have been here, when there was an Assistant Secretary, spent a large part of his time traveling around the country delivering useless lectures—perhaps not useless, but delivering lectures.

Mr. LEVER. The present Assistant Secretary is on some commission to study farm conditions in Europe.

Mr. MANN. And out of the country, and has just now resigned because he does not want to come home, so the papers state, but as far as doing any practical work in the office of the Assistant Secretary is concerned, if he has ever done it, I never have happened to hear of it. Perhaps he has. Without any trouble at all, and so far as I know without any detriment to the Agricultural Department, he went abroad and engaged in other work. Now comes along a proposition to put in two assistant secretaries, done, so far as I can see, for the purpose of providing an additional job for some ex-Member of Congress, or some one else, shortly to be an ex-Member, probably.

Mr. LEVER. I submit that the man who is to be appointed Assistant Secretary of Agriculture is one of the great agricultural experts of this country and is now one of the assistant secretaries.

Mr. MANN. How many assistant secretaries have they now?

Mr. LEVER. Three.

Mr. MANN. Where did they get authority for three Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture?

Mr. LEVER. Under the food-stimulation act.

Mr. MANN. They just appoint them without authority?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no; we provided for that in the food-production act. It is in existing law.

Mr. MANN. That expires with the war?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Who is that assistant? I do not happen to be familiar with the personnel there, for I have been away for a while, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. LEVER. The present assistant secretaries are Mr. Christie, of Indiana; Mr. Ousley, of Texas; and, up until yesterday, Mr. Vrooman, of Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I know nothing against any one of them; I know nothing about any one of them.

Mr. LEVER. I think they are all able men. I was very much impressed with Mr. Christie in his statement before the committee.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it is inevitable that we will increase these places, and I think it will be to the detriment of the service.

Mr. LEVER. I hope not, and I should not think so.

Mr. MANN. Wherever you have an assistant secretary, it is just one more step up the ladder along to the top. There is hardly a branch of the Government where that is not true. A matter has to go through the chief of a bureau, and then something has to be done by the assistant secretary, who knows nothing about it as a rule, and when he does know anything about it he is generally misinformed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I question whether we should adopt the policy of providing additional assistant secretaries for peace-time conditions. Everyone knows that the Navy Department has had tremendous burdens cast upon it by reason of the war, and yet the Navy Department has not come to Congress asking for additional assistant secretaries, even for the management of the Navy and its operations during war time. The Department of Commerce has had additional burdens thrown upon it, and it has only one assistant secretary. The Department of Labor has been very active during war times, and it has but one assistant secretary. There were additional burdens thrown upon the Department of Agriculture by reason of the food act and activities connected with the war that might have necessitated additional assistant secretaries, but I hope the gentleman will realize now that the war is over that we should get back to peace times. If we are going to grant two assistant secretaries to the Department of Agriculture we will have other departments coming before us, with just as good grounds, asking for additional secretaries.

Mr. LEVER. Let me suggest this to the gentleman: The Department of Agriculture is peculiar to itself; it studies practically everything from the growth of a vegetable to the life of the bison on the ranges out West. Its activities are numerous and its studies varied. There are more small items carried in this bill for $500 or $5,000 or $50,000 for carrying on sundry and various activities than can be found in the appropriation bill of any other department of the Government. More than that, the Department of Agriculture is the scientific department of the Government, highly scientific, and you can not compare this department with the War Department or with the Post Office Department where you have assistant secretaries. In the Post Office Department I think there are four assistants.

The Secretary must have somebody, or should have somebody, to whom he is willing to trust some of these minor details, so that he may give his time to the study of larger problems in respect to the agriculture of the country. I feel that the committee was justified in this proposition. I think there is a good deal in what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, but I am trusting that in the future the policy will be different and that the Secretary himself will shift from his own shoulders some of these smaller burdens so that he can give more attention to the larger duties of his office. A practice has grown up here of recent years of placing upon Cabinet officers burdens which ought to be borne by a specially appointed commission. For instance, the commissioner of agriculture is on the nitrate board and various and sundry boards to locate reserve banks, to locate farm-loan banks throughout the country, and so forth, and it seems to me that we are piling a good deal on these men and that they ought to have some assistants in the smaller things of the offices.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not bring myself to the belief that if the Navy Department only requires one Assistant Secretary, and the Department of Commerce, with its increased activities under the Bureau of Standards and all the other bureaus, only requires one Assistant Secretary, that we should provide in an appropriation bill an additional Secretary of Agriculture. Mr. Chairman, I also rise to inquire what is the reason for increasing the salary of the private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture from $2,500 to $3,000?

Mr. LEVER. The committee of its own initiative, I desire to say, made this increase. The Secretary did not estimate for it nor request it. It was not suggested by the gentleman who is filling the place, but for several years now he has presented the estimates of the Department of Agriculture to the Committee on Agriculture, and I think every member of the committee, regardless of party affiliation, will concur in the statement I make, that there is no more efficient man in the public service than he. He has been of immense value to the committee in the preparation of its bills, and of the committee's own initiative we gave this increase.

Mr. STAFFORD. That argument, presumably, might be made for every one of the secretaries, because they are valuable to the department——

Mr. LEVER. But this is not that type of man; he knows all the details of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is aware we pay the private secretaries to the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce $2,500?

Mr. LEVER. Well, I do not think either one of those departments compares in importance with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. STAFFORD. Naturally the chairman of the committee, who has done such great work during the years he has had charge of this bill, would think that the work of this department excels all others, but there must be some harmony of salaries.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman know what the private secretary of the Secretary of War gets?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the private secretary of the Secretary of War gets $3,000. The private secretaries of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce get $2,500. If this man is such an exceptional man, perhaps it might be well to provide $500 additional while the office is held by the same individual.

Mr. LEVER. I would be perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. MANN. Why not do that?

Mr. STAFFORD. If he is such an exceptional man. We have instances in the departmental service where there are exceptional men filling positions, and we sometimes recognize them by providing additional salaries while the office is held by that particular individual.

I would like also to inquire what the thought of the committee was in increasing the salary of the inspector from $2,750 to $3,000, and in providing additional attorneys, one at $3,500 and two at $3,250 each?

Mr. LEVER. We did not increase the salary of the inspector.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Page 2, line 14.

Mr. LEVER. Yes. This was very strenuously urged by the Secretary in a statement sent to me. This man is in charge of the office of inspection. He reviews all personnel matters, has supervision of the fiscal operations of the department, advises as to financial procedure, and prepares important financial reports for submission by the Secretary to Congress. He served 23 years in the department, receiving his last promotion July 1, 1912, so that he has not had a promotion in six years, and we thought in view of his long and efficient services that he ought to be promoted.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman recognizes in the legislative bill the heads of departments and bureaus are asking us to raise salaries, but we did not think this was the time to raise salaries on a wholesale scale.

Mr. LEVER. Well, I think Congress ought to adopt the policy of trying to compensate the men who are really efficient.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think Congress should have adopted a policy of having salaries equalized instead of allowing one grade of salary to pertain to the Agricultural Department and another grade pertain in the other departments.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the commission appointed by the joint law will work out the question of salaries, because it is a burden upon the appropriation committees, I am sure.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire what is the purpose sought to be accomplished by the proviso in throwing the mantle of the civil service about certain departmental employees?

Mr. LEVER. The purpose there is to retain these attorneys in the classified service. We did not want to make it a political job, and this proviso does that. They retain the civil-service status in this connection.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is a change of designation from law clerk to attorney. The classification of attorney is not under the classified service, and in order to make this change of title and keep the position in the classified service the proviso to which the gentleman refers was inserted, but it is not a change of the situation at all.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Surely.

Mr. MANN. I can not see what the purpose is and what is the object in giving the title of "attorney." Is there any attorney in any other department of the Government? Is there an attorney in any other department of the Government?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.
Mr. MANN. Where?
Mr. LEVER. The Department of Justice——
Mr. MANN. Oh, well——
Mr. LEVER. And the Post Office Department.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman is speaking about a law department. Is there an attorney anywhere else in any other department of the Government?
Mr. LEVER. I think I can show it to the gentleman.
Mr. MANN. Now, the fact is the Department of Agriculture has a solicitor not under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice. He is the only law officer of the Government in any department not under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice as such, but we have law clerks in the Treasury Department and law clerks in various other departments. I am not sure but there is a solicitor in the Department of Commerce not under the Department of Justice. Now, does the committee propose to inaugurate a policy of the giving of private attorneys in the various departments who have no relation whatever to the Attorney General or to the Attorney General's office? I think the word "attorney" ought to be supposed to come from the Attorney General's office.
Mr. LEVER. Let me say this, that the kind of men we have here designated "attorneys" have heretofore been under the designation of "law clerks," but they are not law clerks at all. They are all doing genuine attorneys' work.
Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that.
Mr. LEVER. They appear in court and conduct cases for the Department of Agriculture.
Mr. MANN. Yes.
Mr. LEVER. And yet they go there in the capacity of law clerks.
Mr. MANN. Yes.
Mr. LEVER. We felt that the change of name should be made.
Mr. MANN. They go there in the capacity of solicitors to the Department of Agriculture.
Mr. LEVER. And then the law designates them——
Mr. MANN. As law clerks.
Mr. LEVER. It may have been better to call them assistants.
Mr. MANN. The same is true of the Treasury Department and various other departments of the Government. The Treasury Department is filled with lawyers designated as law clerks passing upon the most important propositions which the Government has relating to the collection of internal revenue, and so forth. They are not designated as attorneys.
Mr. LEVER. Omitting the Department of Justice, I notice here the Federal Trade Commission has 11 attorneys, examiners, and special examiners; 19 attorneys, special attorneys, examiners, special agents; 5 attorneys, examiners; and so forth.
Mr. MANN. So has the Interstate Commerce Commission.
Mr. LEVER. And the Department of the Interior has 3 attorneys, 1 assistant attorney, 2 assistant attorneys, and the Post Office Department has 1 assistant attorney, 3 assistant attorneys, 1 assistant attorney, and 1 law clerk. The Navy Department has none. The Judge Advocate General's office has none.
Mr. MANN. They have a lot of attorneys, too?
Mr. LEVER. I said none.
Mr. STAFFORD. They have law clerks.
Mr. MANN. They have a great many.
Mr. LEVER. They have law clerks.
Mr. MANN. They have colonels and majors and captains and lieutenants and maybe brigadier generals, for all I know. Are these others designated as attorneys?
Mr. LEVER. I am reading from the statements prepared by the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture.
Mr. MANN. Of course.
Mr. LEVER. And I do not think he would misrepresent the subject.
Mr. MANN. I do not think he intended to misrepresent it. These people are actually attorneys.
Mr. LEVER. The Department of the Interior has three attorneys, a board of appraisers, each $4,000; one assistant attorney, $3,000; two assistant attorneys, $2,750 each.
Mr. MANN. There is a board of appraisers in the Department of the Interior? Is that it?
Mr. LEVER. I presume so.
Mr. MANN. How are they designated? As a board of appraisers or attorneys?
Mr. LEVER. Attorneys on the board of appraisers.
Mr. MANN. I think they are attorneys but I doubt if they are so designated.
Mr. LEVER. So there are attorneys established throughout all these departments.
Mr. MANN. There are attorneys in every branch of the Government service doing legal work, law clerks usually, or else men employed in the office of the solicitors of the various departments, the solicitors being under the Attorney General.
Mr. LEVER. I would not object at all to assistant solicitors if it would satisfy the gentleman's desire in the matter.
Mr. STAFFORD. Then your salaries are out of range with salaries being paid to assistant solicitors in the departments. For instance, the Assistant Solicitor in the Department of Commerce receives $3,000. Now, you propose to increase the salary of a law clerk from $3,250 to $3,500, and call him an attorney. It is not the practice, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], to describe these employees as attorneys, except in the Department of Justice.
Mr. LEVER. I assure the gentleman that statement is inaccurate.
Mr. STAFFORD. I can call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that under the classification of employees under the solicitors of the respective departments they are known as law clerks.
Mr. Chairman, I am going to make a point of order on the positions of two Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, at $5,000 each.
Mr. LEVER. I do not concede that that is subject to a point of order.
Mr. STAFFORD. I will argue that.
Mr. LEVER. The Department of Agriculture has full authority to employ persons to carry on its business. That matter has been settled time and time again and ruled upon by the present occupant of the chair. The other is subject to a point of order. I ask for a ruling on that, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to claim that he has authority to bring in on an appropriation bill authorizations for officials that are not provided by law, just because we have created a Department of Agriculture, and that he would have authority to provide for 10 Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture without an authorization of law? He certainly does not mean to contend that?
Mr. LEVER. It is simply increasing the number; that is all.
Mr. STAFFORD. If that is the case, then you could provide for more than one Secretary of Agriculture; instead of providing for one, you could provide for two.
Mr. LEVER. The number of assistant secretaries is not fixed by law. The Secretary is fixed by law.
Mr. STAFFORD. The number is fixed by law.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina where he finds the authority to which he refers?
Mr. LEVER. In section 522 of the Revised Statutes, where it says:

The Commissioner of Agriculture shall appoint a chief clerk with a salary of $2,200.

And so on. And then it goes on:

And he shall, as Congress may from time to time provide, employ other persons for such time as their services may be needed, including chemists, botanists, and entomologists, and other persons skilled in the natural science pertaining to agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Has the Congress otherwise provided for giving him permission to appoint any number of assistants?
Mr. LEVER. I know of no such authority, no such specific act. I presume that this place has been filled under this general authority here.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that in the appropriation bill we could increase the number of employees in the Department of Agriculture. In all of the organic acts creating all the various departments provisions are made for the employment of clerks and various other persons in the departments as Congress may from time to time provide, different language being used in different organic acts; but the substance and purport are the same, and under this organic act we have the authority in the appropriation bill to increase the number of clerks, to increase the number of chemists, to increase the number of scientific men working in the Department of Agriculture, and have so authorized in the organic act; and in the same way we have authority in the Post Office appropriation bill to increase the number of clerks, to increase the number of carriers, to increase the number of the personnel of the department. But there are limitations to that, it seems to me. These organic acts refer not to the superior officer at the head of the department but to the personnel of the department. In the language of the organic act creating the Commissioner of Agriculture the language relates to certain under employees or officials. It does not relate to the men who are supervising officials at the top. And it seems to me that while it is in order to increase the number of employees of the department below, it is not in order to increase the number of officials at the top, which are not covered by the language of the organic act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no personal recollection of having passed on this or a similar proposition at any previous time.

Mr. LEVER. Not on this proposition, I will say to the Chair, but on the general proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The organic act undoubtedly gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority to increase any given number of employees in the different places provided for by law, but that does not apply to administrative positions such as an assistant secretary to the department. For instance, the Chair thinks that the position of First Assistant Secretary is one position, and that of Second Assistant Secretary is a different position, and the Third Assistant Secretary is still a different position, and so on. The Chair does not think that the organic act gave the Secretary of Agriculture authority to increase the number of assistant secretaries, and you can not appropriate for such a position against a point of order unless Congress had authorized or created the particular position. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have other points of order to make, but I have no objection to having the gentleman's amendment pending, and having it read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 2, line 4, after the semicolon, insert "Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $5,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on "one inspector, $3,000"; "one attorney, $3,500"; two attorneys, at $3,250 each"; and the proviso——

Mr. LEVER. I concede those points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Would the gentleman from Wisconsin be willing to except from his points of order the "private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture" if I shall use this further language, "and $500 additional as long as the present incumbent holds the position"?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am perfectly willing, in view of the statement of the committee that this is an exceptional man.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report another amendment which the gentleman from South Carolina has sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 2, line 8, after the figures "$2,000," insert "and $500 additional as long as the present incumbent holds the position."

Mr. STAFFORD. It should be "$2,500," with "$500 additional."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be modified as indicated.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

On lines 13 and 14, "one inspector, $3,000; one inspector, $2,750."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 2, lines 13 and 14, after "$2,000," where it occurs the second time, insert "one inspector, $2,750."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from South Carolina another amendment to offer?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Wisconsin or the committee will permit, I ask that we pass over this attorney matter, because we will have to rewrite most of this language.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to pass over the matter indicated.

Mr. MANN. Why not put in the language in the present law by increasing the present law clerk?

Mr. LEVER. I prefer to come back later. The clerk will prepare it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to pass over the matter in lines 14 and 15, page 2, for the present. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Office of Farm Management: For the employment of persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, furniture, supplies, traveling expenses, rent outside of the District of Columbia, and all other expenses necessary in carrying out the work herein authorized, as follows:

To investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice, $218,160: Provided, That of this amount $23,873 may be used in ascertaining the cost of production of the principal staple agricultural products.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have no doubt that the members of the committee will have a rational explanation, but this item strikes my funny bone. Here is a direction that the cost of production of the principal agricultural products shall be obtained at an expense of $23,873. From the beginning of time so far as history records people have endeavored to learn the cost of production especially of agricultural products. Along comes the Agricultural Department and proposes to ascertain the cost of production of all the principal agricultural products and to charge only $23,873 for it. They know just what it is going to cost, down to the odd three dollars. Now, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] knows that the Agricultural Department can not obtain information which begins to tell the cost of production of the agricultural products for any such sum of money, and I beg to inquire what the real purpose of this item is.

Mr. LEVER. I will tell the gentleman what the real purpose is. Speaking for myself now, and not for the committee, I think the proposition to obtain the cost of the production of farm products is almost an impossible proposition. I feel that I ought to say that much. But there has been a tremendous demand through certain farm organizations that some effort be made at least to approximate the cost of certain stable agricultural products. When Assistant Secretary Christie was before the committee, the committee ascertained that the department had been expending this sum of money, $23,873, in that line of work during the past fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. Without authority of law?

Mr. LEVER. Under this same item.

Mr. MANN. If they have expended it in the past with due authority, why do you now give the authority here?

Mr. LEVER. It was at the suggestion of certain members of the committee. On account of this large demand for this kind of work, made by these organizations, we ought to set it out in the bill and make it specific and certain that they are going to do this work. As far as I am concerned, I am inclined to think that they have a big job on their hands.

Mr. MANN. We made an appropriation for the current fiscal year of $221,660, to investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice. It would take a man with a very wild dream to suppose that the ascertainment of the cost of production of the principal staple agricultural products is authorized by an appropriation—to investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice.

And if the department has diverted the sum of $23,873 from the investigation and encouragement of improved methods of farm management and farm practice, in order to chase will-o-the-wisps, now it is proposed to encourage them to do it. The sum appropriated for the study of farm management and improved methods of farm practice was not very great, but apparently greater than they could expend for that purpose, so they diverted it to something that is a pure chimera. While I have no objection to studying the cost of production of agricultural products and getting information which is of value, the language of the bill is that it can only be used in ascertaining the cost of production, and under the strict language of the law they could not use any of it unless they did ascertain the cost of production.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. MANN. It is not for the study of the cost of production. It is "to ascertain" the cost of production, an impossible feat. They are not desired to obtain for public use information about the cost of production, but they are to ascertain the cost of production, which will not be ascertained long after we are dead and buried.

Mr. HAUGEN. I may state to the gentleman that this work has been carried on for a number of years by the department, and at the suggestion of the representatives of the farm organizations this paragraph was put in the bill. The act provides for the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask to be recognized for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. The department has held that in order to advise the farmer what to plant it is necessary to ascertain the cost, to enable them to advise him whether to plant a particular cereal as, for instance, whether to plant oats or corn, and so on. That is the construction placed upon the language.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman is correct, and I have no objection to studying the cost of production, as people desire to have it studied, though plainly the original language did not authorize the expenditure of the money for that purpose.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am, of course, aware of the fact that other commissions are doing that work and that this is an overlapping or a duplication of activity, but this is only one of the many duplications in the departments. You can hardly touch one item in this bill without finding duplication of activities of other bureaus and departments.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to recur to page 2, line 14. Is there objection?

There was no objection

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 2, line 14, after the figures "$2,250," strike out "one attorney, $3,500," and insert in lieu thereof the words "one law clerk, $3,250."

Mr. LEVER. That is the exact language of the law now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 2, line 15, strike out "two attorneys, at $3,250 each" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two law clerks, at $3,000 each."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that if he is going to provide four law clerks, at $3,000 each, he do it by providing for four law clerks, at $3,000 each, instead of putting in one item "two law clerks, at $3,000 each," followed by another item "two law clerks, at $3,000 each," as the bill would read if the gentleman's amendment were adopted. I suggest that he amend, in line 24, by striking out "two" and inserting "four," so that it will read "four law clerks, at $3,000 each."

Mr. LEVER. That ought to be two law clerks, at $3,000 each.

Mr. MANN. In line 34 there is an item now in the bill, an increase of two law clerks, at $3,000 each.

Mr. HAUGEN. May I suggest that I believe it should read three law clerks, at $3,000 each, if you intend to make the number that is carried at the present time and as suggested by the solicitor.

Mr. LEVER. The present law carries two, at $3,000.

Mr. MANN. The amendment is precisely the same language as in line 24, only the gentleman proposes to insert it in line 15. If it is the intention of the gentleman to have it appear twice——

Mr. LEVER. It should be three laws clerks, at $3,000 each.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to make it three law clerks. The present bill provides for two extra law clerks, and if the gentleman wants to provide for two extra law clerks he should change the "two" to "four."

Mr. LEVER. I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin objected to the title and number.

Mr. MANN. He made a point of order on the title; he could not make a point of order on the number.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think the gentleman would not object to making it three law clerks.

Mr. LEVER. I think we had better leave it as it is in the present law. The purpose of having two new clerks or attorneys was for the purpose of getting two additional men into the service and, in a way, opening up promotions for those below.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman does not want to offer his amendment at all.

Mr. LEVER. I think that is true. The last amendment is not necessary, and, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the disease of tuberculosis of animals, for its control and eradication, for the tuberculin testing of animals, and for researches concerning the cause of the disease, its modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention, including demonstrations, the formation of organizations, and such other means as may be necessary, either independently or in cooperation with farmers, associations, State or county authorities, $993,520: Provided, however, That in carrying out the purpose of this appropriation, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture it shall be necessary to destroy tuberculous animals and to compensate owners for loss thereof, he may, in his discretion, expend in the city of Washington or elsewhere out of the moneys of this appropriation such sums as he shall determine to be necessary for the reimbursement of owners of animals so destroyed, in cooperation with such States, counties, or municipalities as shall by law or by suitable action in keeping with its authority in the matter and by rules and regulations adopted and enforced in pursuance thereof, provide inspection of tuberculous animals and for compensation to owners of animals so destroyed, but no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used in compensating owners of such animals except in cooperation with and supplementary to payments to be made by State, county, or municipality where destruction of such animals shall take place; nor shall any payment be made hereunder as compensation for or on account of any such animal destroyed if at the time of inspection or test of such animal or at the time of condemnation thereof it shall belong to or be upon the premises of any person, firm, or corporation to which it has been sold, shipped, or delivered for the purpose of being slaughtered: Provided further, That out of the money hereby appropriated no payment as compensation for any tuberculous animal destroyed shall exceed one-third of the difference between the appraised value of such animal and the value of the salvage thereof; that no payment hereunder shall exceed the amount paid or to be paid by the State, county, or municipality where the animal shall be condemned; and that in no case shall any payment hereunder be more than $25 for any grade animal or more than $50 for any pure-bred animal, and no payment shall be made unless the owner has complied with all lawful quarantine regulations: And provided further, That the act approved May 29, 1884 (23 Stat. L., 31), be, and the same is hereby, amended to permit cattle which have reacted to the tuberculin test to be shipped, transported, or moved from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia for immediate slaughter in accordance with such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, permit cattle which have been shipped for breeding or feeding purposes from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and which have reacted to the tuberculin test subsequent to such shipment, to be reshipped in interstate commerce to the original owner.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer several amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 20, after the word "State," insert the word "Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 3, after the word "States," insert the word "Territories."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 11, after the word "State," insert the word "Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 25, after the word "State," insert the word "Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a few remarks on the general subject of eradication and control of tuberculosis in live stock. The first appropriation for this purpose was placed in the Agricultural appropriation bill a year ago, and as finally amended it provided for $500,000 to be used in cooperation with various States in combating through control and eradication processes this one of the oldest diseases not only in the human family but of the brute creation. It is practically doubled this year in response to a zealous interest and cooperation manifested by nearly every State in the Union.

It is not necessary for me to suggest, as we are now nearing the close of the greatest war in history, the importance of the food problem. The largest source of loss in food animals existing in this country for the last 15 years and throughout Europe for centuries is the ravage of tuberculosis. It is a fact that tuberculosis is less destructive in America, however destructive it may be here, than it is in any of the leading live-stock nations of Europe. While our losses have been large, Germany's has been much larger as expressed in percentage. In some States of Europe, such as Denmark, tuberculosis has not only attacked cattle, where we usually expect to find it, but nearly 50 per cent of the horses of that country are afflicted with tuberculosis, communicated, it is thought, largely through the horses drinking milk from tubercular cows.

That is suggestive of what might be a large source of loss to the human family, and might be discussed with some propriety, but as far as this bill is concerned the discussion is purely economic.

In some extended remarks a year ago on this matter I pointed out what I thought would be the condition in Europe at the close of the war. I predicted that out of the ravages of war, the lack of opportunity to build up the herds, the ruin and destruction that would occur from disease, and the overriding by the conquering armies there would be a very large decrease of herds, and the result of it would be a great demand for American cattle and hogs and, to a limited extent, sheep, because sheep is the only food animal practically immune from this scourge.

Statistics are being given out now as to the condition of live stock in Europe. Britain, isolated as she was from the tread of armies and drawing from America largely for her beef, has been wise enough to keep up her herds. But no country of continental Europe has been able to do that. France has lost in flocks and herds from 15 to 25 per cent. It is thought that Germany, on account of her blockade and the demand not only for her own armies and people but for the armies of those cooperating with her, lost more largely of her herds than did France. Italy's flocks and herds were largely depleted. Holland, Denmark, Spain, and Switzerland were drained, while Russia, Turkey, and the Balkans lost more than a third of their food animals. Each of these to feed their people and retain the fertility of their soil desire to replenish their flocks and herds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. The result is, Mr. Chairman, that there will be a tremendous demand for the live stock of America. They will be careful to obtain practically disease-free live stock for breeding purposes. For that reason if America would maintain her own herds and not allow them to be depleted through disease or too much shipping it is important that the eradication movement go on under the impetus of this appropriation to the highest possible extent.

The following is one of the effective methods of discouraging tuberculous herds and encouraging those free from it, known as accredited herd method:

UNIFORM METHODS AND RULES FOR TUBERCULOSIS-FREE ACCREDITED HERDS OF PURE-BRED CATTLE.

(Unanimously adopted by the United States Live Stock Sanitary Association and by representatives of pure-bred cattle breeders' associations and approved Dec. 23, 1917, by the United States Bureau of Animal Industry.)

1. A tuberculosis-free accredited pure-bred herd is one which has been tuberculin tested by the subcutaneous method, or any other test approved by the Bureau of Animal Industry, under the supervision of the Bureau of Animal Industry or a regularly employed veterinary inspector of the State in which cooperative tuberculosis-eradication work is conducted jointly by the United States Department of Agriculture and the State. Further, it shall be a herd in which no animal affected with tuberculosis has been found upon two annual or three semiannual tuberculin tests, as above described, and by physical examination.

2. The entire herd, or any cattle in the herd, shall be tuberculin tested or retested at such time as is considered necessary by the Federal and State authorities.

3. No cattle shall be presented for the tuberculin test which have been injected with tuberculin within 60 days immediately preceding or which have at any time reacted to a tuberculin test.

4. No herd shall be classed as an accredited herd in which tuberculosis has been found by the application of the test, as referred to in paragraph 1, until such herd has been successfully subjected to two consecutive tests with tuberculin, applied at intervals of not less than six months, the first interval dating from the time of removal of the tuberculous animal from the herd.

5. Prior to each tuberculin test satisfactory evidence of the identity of the registered animals shall be presented to the inspector. Any grade cattle maintained in the herd or associated with animals of the herd shall be identified by a tag or other marking satisfactory to the State and Federal officials.

6. All removals of registered cattle from the herd, either by sale, death, or slaughter, shall be reported promptly to the said State or Federal officials, giving the identification of the animal and, if sold, the name and address of the person to whom transferred. If the transfer is made from the accredited herd to another accredited herd, the shipment shall be made only in properly cleaned and disinfected cars. No cattle shall be allowed to associate with the herd which have not passed a tuberculin test approved by the State and Federal officials.

7. All milk and other dairy products fed to calves shall be that produced by an accredited herd, or, if from outside or unknown sources, it shall be pasteurized by heating to not less than 150° F. for not less than 20 minutes.

8. All reasonable sanitary measures and other recommendations by the State and Federal authorities for the control of tuberculosis shall be complied with.

9. Cattle from an accredited herd may be shipped interstate, by certificate obtained from the office of the State live stock sanitary officials of the State in which the herd is located or from the office of the Bureau of Animal Industry, without further tuberculin test for a period of one year, subject to the rules and regulations of the State of destination.

10. Strict compliance with these methods and rules shall entitle the owners of tuberculosis-free herds to a certificate, "Tuberculosis-Free Accredited Herd," to be issued by the Bureau of Animal Industry and the State live stock sanitary authority. Said certificate shall be good for one year from date of test unless revoked at an earlier date.

11. Failure on the part of owners to comply with the letter or spirit of these methods and rules shall be considered sufficient cause for immediate cancellation of cooperation with them by the State and Federal officials.

The other day I heard on the floor of the House a very interesting speech from a gentleman whom we have often heard, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], in which he stated that a new policy with reference to the great staple products of his section of the country would be adopted. He suggested that there be a diminished planting of the great cotton staple, and also that there should be an increasing production of food, especially of beef and pork, in the southern part of this country. That is one of the wisest suggestions ever made by a gentleman who is a member of the Agricultural Committee on the floor of this House in behalf of what has been too long a one-crop section. There will be, of course, a large movement from the herds of the North to the herds of the South on the part of those who would build up that great industry. That industry has greater possibilities in the southern part of the United States than we have in the North.

Year after year the rigor of our winters demands that we burn up a large portion of our corn fed to our cattle, not for the purpose of adding flesh or food to the brute but to keep him warm. That is eliminated in the South. When the great pastures of the South, with their extended summer and limited winter, where the brutes can be comfortable throughout the whole year and at the same time enjoy pure air and water, are taken into consideration one can easily grasp the possibilities for the southern farmer. There is a great opportunity there to keep herds free from tuberculosis, and therefore from a source of great damage and loss.

Tuberculosis affects cattle not more than hogs. Later we will discuss another item in respect to hog cholera and its eradication. It is true that more hogs throughout the country suffer from tuberculosis than do from hog cholera. We do not usually think of it that way, because tuberculosis is an insidious disease and is not marked by sudden death, as is the case with cholera. It shows itself in a reduced condition and finally death. The discovery of the existence of the disease is usually made only after slaughter. The loss, of course, in hogs is not so great in tuberculosis as in cholera, because tuberculosis, unless in the extreme cases, does not entirely destroy the carcass. There is a great deal of salvage at all of the great slaughterhouses from hogs and cattle where tuberculosis affected the animal.

Commissioner Smith presented among other things the following statement as to losses and prevalence of disease in the United States:

LOSSES CAUSED BY THIS DISEASE.

According to the records of the meat inspection division of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, there were 25,975 beef carcasses and 44,492 pork carcasses condemned as inedible for tuberculosis alone at the seven leading Middle West markets—Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, East St. Louis, St. Paul, Sioux City, and St. Joseph—during the fiscal year 1916. This is the equivalent of 50 trainloads of cattle and hogs of 40 cars each that were consigned to the rendering tanks at these markets during one year because of having tuberculosis in so generalized a condition as to make the entire carcasses fit only for grease and fertilizer. There were a still greater number of carcasses passed for sterilization and sold as second-class canned beef and pork, upon which the loss was approximately 50 per cent.

The above table from the Bureau of Animal Industry shows that the disease is more prevalent at the northern markets. A total of 40,000,000 hogs were slaughtered during the year 1916 at all packing plants in the United States where Federal inspection is maintained. Approximately 10 per cent of these were found on post-mortem examination to be affected with tuberculosis.

PREVALENCE OF THE DISEASE IN THE UNITED STATES.

Tuberculosis is found among cattle and hogs from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. It is not as prevalent in the Southern States as in the Northern States. Cattle are much less numerous in the South, are not so closely confined, making the conditions less favorable for the spreading of the infection, and because of the prevalence of the cattle "tick" causing Texas fever fewer well-bred imported cattle have gone into the South up to this time. The following table shows the number of cattle and hogs slaughtered at the seven leading Middle West markets during the fiscal year 1916, and the number retained for tuberculosis (affected with the disease), and the number sterilized and condemned for tuberculosis.

Dairy cattle are more tuberculous than beef cattle, and the percentage of infected cattle is usually higher in the States where more dairy cattle are owned. The disease is found to be quite prevalent in beef cattle even in the so-called range States.

The reason why this disease has not made the inroads in America is because we have such broad areas, such wide expanse of country, that it naturally prevents tuberculosis becoming intensified, as in Germany, France, Holland, and Denmark, but that time is going by. Tuberculosis has not only become prevalent throughout the States through the Middle East and Middle West, but there are few range sections throughout the West that are not now more or less affected with tuberculosis. The reason why it has not been kept back more than it has is because there has been no concerted action. Action to be effective and be successful must be when the Government itself cooperates with the various States, and if the States do not act as units, then with the counties and municipalities, in order to control and eradicate, or at least reduce to the irreducible minimum, this scourge. That can be done, I think, in the course of 10 or 12 years. I suggested a year ago that to spread twelve to fifteen million dollars over that period of time, which would cover three or four generations of cattle and more than twice that many of hogs, tuberculosis in the United States could be practically eradicated. I still hold that view, and I am pleased that the committee has taken a broad vision and has doubled last year's appropriation for that purpose.

As evidence of what the country is willing to do, there will probably be more than $2 collectively appropriated by the various States of the Union for every dollar appropriated by the Government of the United States.

Annual appropriations available for tuberculosis work in 10 States.

Maine	40,000
Massachusetts	43,000
Minnesota	40,000
New York	150,000
Pennsylvania	100,000

Ohio	100,000
Wisconsin	25,000
Kentucky	15,000
Total	603,000

Michigan paid out last year $62,815 and Missouri $29,000 for this work.

Under this bill the Government is expected to stand one-third of the slaughter loss, the State one-third, and the owner one-third. I think, under all the circumstances, that a million dollars is a fair and generous sum.

Iowa, Nebraska, and many other States are appropriating large sums for this work, and nearly all the States are expected to cooperate during this coming year.

The following summary issued by the Bureau of Animal Industry for December, 1918, suggests the interest of 39 States.

NOTE.—The first line of Minnesota is accredited herds; the second, area work.

This is not a matter of investigation. We know how to accomplish the eradication of tuberculosis. It prevailed in the District of Columbia 12 or 15 years ago, so that 18 to 20 per cent of the bovines of this District were afflicted with tuberculosis, while now less than 1 per cent are so afflicted. I am convinced that what has been done in the District of Columbia can be accomplished through the work of the Government of the United States and the various States in cooperation. We are all now especially aroused to the production of beef, pork, and mutton, and that is evidenced by the very great demand we had during the great world war. To conserve and increase our meat supply is important to producer and consumer as well. [Applause.]

Under leave of extension granted, I herewith append an interesting and illuminating statement by Dr. J. A. Kiernan, chief of the tuberculosis-eradication division:

COOPERATIVE TUBERCULOSIS ERADICATION WORK IN THE UNITED STATES.

The eradication of tuberculosis from our live stock is one of the greatest pieces of constructive live-stock sanitation work that has ever been undertaken in any land. This work has passed the experimental stage. The Bureau of Animal Industry has demonstrated for more than 10 years that when live-stock owners were interested in exterminating the disease and would follow the instructions laid down by the department tuberculosis could be eradicated from any herd, even though it was 75 per cent diseased.

More than 10 years ago the Bureau of Animal Industry undertook to eradicate tuberculosis from the cattle within the District of Columbia and near-by points in the State of Maryland and Virginia. At that time within the District there were approximately 1,200 cattle, and upon the application of the tuberculin test 18.87 per cent of the animals were found affected with tuberculosis. Each year since that time all of the herds within the District have been subjected to the test, and during 1918 it was revealed that less than 1 per cent of the animals were affected. This small amount of infection that persists from year to year is due largely to the introduction of cattle from other States. These new additions to the herds, although they are subjected to the tuberculin test, at times prove to be diseased upon the application of a retest. If no additions were made to the native herds of the District for a period of five years, it is confidently believed that tuberculosis would be absolutely exterminated. Similar progress has been made in the herds under the supervision in Maryland and Virginia and, in fact, wherever and whenever owners have placed their herds under supervision for the eradication of tuberculosis and have followed the prescribed rules they have succeeded in getting rid of the disease.

With the above-mentioned information at hand Congress appropriated $500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, but this money did not become available until October 1, 1918, when the annual agricultural appropriation bill was approved. This item appropriating funds for the eradication of tuberculosis authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to compensate owners for cattle that are destroyed on account of tuberculosis.

The tuberculosis-free accredited-herd plan is one project of the general plan of a campaign which has been inaugurated in eradicating tuberculosis from live stock in the United States. This plan was jointly adopted in December, 1917, by the live-stock sanitary officials of all the States in the Union and the United States Bureau of Animal Industry.

Progress in eradicating any widespread animal disease depends not only on suitable methods of control, but also in large measure on the desire of live-stock owners to cooperate. It is important that they understand clearly why the work is done, the methods of conducting it, and the benefits which the completed work will bring.

Eradication of tuberculosis from live stock means primarily the removal of a constant source of danger to the health of mankind and of its animals; also, it will reduce sharply the economic losses from animal disease.

To accredit a herd as free from tuberculosis means briefly to certify officially that the owner has complied with specified requirements. Best results may be expected only when every live-stock owner becomes familiar with the provisions of the accredited-herd plan.

The idea and advantages of accrediting herds of cattle found to be free from tuberculosis has gained wide publicity and popularity among cattle breeders during the first year's work. They appreciate the fact that a certificate of approval indorsed by the State in which the herd belongs and the further indorsement by the United States Department of Agriculture gives prospective purchasers confidence that the animals are free from the disease, and they are in consequence willing to pay a considerable advance in price for such animals.

During the first year's operations 296 herds, comprising 9,284 cattle, have been fully accredited as free from tuberculosis; and 1,462 herds, having 35,052 cattle, passed one successful test in preparation for certification; in addition, 4,622 herds, both pure bred and grade, totaling 98,002 animals, have been under supervision for the eradication of tuberculosis. Each month a large number of additional herds are taken under supervision.

List No. 1 of herds officially accredited as free from tuberculosis and of herds that have passed one successful test with a view to certification was issued in pamphlet form and 50,000 copies have been distributed to cattle owners throughout the country. It is proposed shortly to revise the list and publish list No. 2, which will contain the names of the owners of the additional herds that have been fully accredited as well as those that have passed one successful test.

Tuberculosis eradication work is being carried on in more than 40 States in cooperation with the State live-stock sanitary officials and the stock owners. Joint agreements between the State and the Bureau of Animal Industry governing the application of the tuberculin test and the handling of the herd of cattle are forwarded to each owner interested in having his herd freed of tuberculosis or in having it accepted as officially accredited. Applications for the joint agreement may be made to the proper State sanitary official or to the Bureau of Animal Industry, Washington, D. C.

It has been found by very careful experiments and practical work that tuberculosis can not be detected to any great extent among animals by a physical examination. Herds which seem apparently healthy may be extensively affected with tuberculosis. The most reliable method for definitely determining whether tuberculosis exists or not is the tuberculin test applied by a trained operator. Tuberculin, while it is the most accurate diagnostic agency known to science, is safe only in the hands of a trained and skillful operator who is acquainted with its limitations and with the symptoms it produces in the animals to which it is applied.

It is proposed to carry on the accredited herd plan until practically all pure-bred herds of cattle in the United States are under State and Federal supervision for the eradication of tuberculosis. Thus it will be possible for an owner in one State to purchase cattle in another State with the assurance that he will receive animals that may be introduced into his herd with perfect safety so far as tuberculosis is concerned. Under former conditions many such animals proved to be a menace in place of an asset.

In addition to the accredited herd plan, the eradication of tuberculosis from live stock will be carried on in circumscribed areas comprising one or more counties. The disease will be eliminated from cattle and swine in such areas and the campaign extended until it takes in entire States.

In order that the work may progress satisfactorily, it is necessary that live-stock owners cooperate to the fullest extent. The success of the movement for eradicating tuberculosis rests upon the live-stock owners of the country to a greater degree than on any other force. Whenever they are ready and willing to "get behind" the work success is bound to follow.

The legislatures in 23 States convene during the present winter, and from present indications the amount of money that will be appropriated by them for the eradication of tuberculosis from live stock will be nearly $2,000,000, much of which will be used for indemnifying owners for cattle that are destroyed on account of tuberculosis. The appropriations for indemnity are in most cases being made with the understanding that partial indemnity will be made by the Federal Government if States provide for partial indemnity themselves. In States where it is necessary to change the laws relating to tuberculosis eradication in order to cooperate with the Federal Government and receive some Federal assistance in the way of indemnity, the necessary changes will in all probability be made. From the great interest that is being shown by the State legislatures it is very evident that the importance of tuberculosis eradication is realized and the Federal cooperation appreciated.

The great importance of eradicating tuberculosis from our live stock can be appreciated when we know that the value of the cattle in the United States on January 1, 1919, was $3,796,725,000 and the estimated value of swine on the same date was $1,665,987,000.

PROGRESS, TUBERCULOSIS ERADICATION, DURING YEAR 1918.

The tuberculosis-free accredited-herd plan, which was inaugurated in December, 1917, and has been worked out in cooperation with the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, was slightly changed at the twenty-second annual meeting of the United States Live-Stock Sanitary Association, held in Chicago, Ill., December 2–4, 1918. It was agreed to strike out the word "pure bred" so as to admit to certification grade herds in addition to registered cattle.

The annual conference between representatives of the United States Live-Stock Sanitary Association and the pure-bred cattle breeders' associations resulted in the further indorsement of the tuberculosis eradication campaign and a recommendation that the work be extended as rapidly as possible.

Very satisfactory progress has been made during the first year of the work, and prospects for the future are exceedingly bright. During the year 296 herds, comprising 9,284 cattle, have been fully accredited as free from tuberculosis, and 1,462 herds, having 35,052 cattle, passed one successful test in preparation for certification. In addition, 4,622 herds, both pure bred and grade, totaling 98,002 animals, have been under supervision for the eradication of tuberculosis. Each month additional herds are added to the list. A revision of list No. 1 of accredited herds will be made in the near future, and when printed will be widely distributed, as was the original list, the supply of which is now exhausted.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important items in this bill and to my mind in the years to come will be regarded as one of the wisest pieces of work that this body has ever proposed. I would not feel justified in letting this occasion pass without saying that this item in this bill is due, not in whole but in large measure, to the far-sightedness, the energy, and the perseverance, of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN]. [Applause.] It has always been a happy thought to me that the Committee on Agriculture knows no party lines. This item was suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska. He urged it with all of the force of his eloquence and logic and good horse sense, as we say south of this river, with the result that he convinced the committee and convinced the Congress. The work has progressed so nicely, it has proven itself to be so beneficial, and is meeting with such hearty response from thoughtful men everywhere that the committee of its own initiative at this session of Congress in preparing this bill increased the appropriation by $500,000 over the estimates submitted by the Department of Agriculture, and that action had the very hearty concurrence of the Department of Agriculture.

I feel that when the gentleman from Nebraska leaves Congress he can go before his people and receive from them the commendation of "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. LEVER. I yield that to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the people of our State were among the first to realize the danger of tuberculosis to our herds, and I am glad to say have made commendable progress toward its eradication. The States of North Dakota and Minnesota have made the greatest progress of any area in the United States. This has been accomplished by the application of the tuberculin test and the slaughter of reactors, for which State indemnity has been paid.

The testing of herds in Minnesota and North Dakota has been voluntary rather than compulsory, and the testing is now being confined largely to pure-bred herds. No indemnity is paid by the State unless the entire herd is tested annually and the owner complies with certain regulations specified by the live-stock sanitary boards. The fact that Minnesota and North Dakota have the largest number of tuberculosis-free accredited herds, and the further fact that these States have also required the pasteurization of skim milk and other creamery by-products before it is fed to hogs, undoubtedly explains in large measure the cause of the low percentage of condemnations for tuberculosis among both cattle and hogs at the St. Paul market, as compared with all other northern markets. The records of the Division of Meat Inspection of the Department of Agriculture show that 3.8 per cent of all the cattle slaughtered at the Chicago, Sioux City, and Milwaukee markets during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, were found on post-mortem to be affected with tuberculosis, whereas only 1.9 per cent of all the cattle slaughtered at the St. Paul market during 1918 were found on post-mortem to be affected with tuberculosis. These statistics also show that 17 per cent of all the hogs slaughtered under Federal inspection at the Chicago, Sioux City, and Milwaukee markets during the year 1918 were found on post-mortem to be affected with tuberculosis, whereas at the St. Paul market during the same year but 5 per cent of the hogs slaughtered were found on post-mortem to be affected with tuberculosis. The pamphlet issued by the Bureau of Animal Industry on July 1, 1918, entitled, "The Control and Eradication of Tuberculosis," asserts that North Dakota and Minnesota have by far the largest number of tuberculosis-free accredited herds of any States of the Union.

Mr. Chairman, it is very plain that this problem must be attacked upon a national scale in order to bring complete success. So long as other States are careless or neglect to protect their herds our State will be in danger. I ask leave to print in the RECORD a letter received from our North Dakota State veterinarian, Dr. W. F. Crewe.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DR. CREWE'S LETTER.

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
LIVE STOCK SANITARY BOARD,
January 22, 1919.

Hon. GEORGE M. YOUNG,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. YOUNG: I have received your communication of the 18th instant relative to the eradication of bovine tuberculosis.

It would seem superfluous to quote statistics regarding the prevalence of this disease in this country, as no doubt same have been furnished your committee by the Federal department. Our experience contending with this disease in this State during the past seven years and our knowledge of the prevalence of the disease in other States leads us to believe that the eradication of bovine tuberculosis is a national problem.

Work on this disease is being and has been carried on in a more or less irregular manner in many of the States with little or no uniformity. In some States practically nothing has been done. The disease is becoming more extensive every year until it is a serious menace to the cattle and swine industries.

On account of the enormity of the cattle and swine industries in this country the control and eradication of this disease presents the greatest undertaking that has been placed before sanitary authorities.

Scientific investigators, sanitary authorities, and stock owners practically agree on plans for this undertaking. The entrance of the Federal Government into this work in cooperation with the different States means the establishment of uniformity of these methods. The cooperation of the Federal authorities will add a great stimulus to the efforts of the different States.

The suppression of this disease means the reduction of the annual loss incurred. Neglect to control and suppress this disease means increased loss.

A liberal appropriation by the Federal Government means increased appropriations by the States and a corresponding decrease in the loss by disease.

North Dakota is expending effort in the endeavor to eradicate tuberculosis from our pure-bred herds and keep them free from this disease. We find that many pure-bred animals shipped from other States are diseased in spite of being accompanied by health certificates. To illustrate: Of 6,890 pure-bred cattle tuberculin tested in this State within the year, 4½ per cent were found tuberculous. Within the year, 598 pure-bred cattle imported into the State were retested and 65 were found to be tuberculous, or over 11 per cent. In conjunction with our own efforts we are anxious to see this disease eliminated from other States and be thereby given better protection.

I might state that the budget committee has recommended an increase of our appropriation for tuberculosis of $30,000 to $40,000.

Thanking you for your kind interest in this subject, I remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

W. F. CREWE.

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that our colleague from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], who has again spoken so convincingly in favor of this appropriation item for the eradication of tuberculosis in cattle is not to be with us in the Sixty-sixth Congress. He pioneered the movement looking to the eradication of tuberculosis in both cattle and hogs, and the campaign against hog cholera, and his face became so familiar in our Agricultural Committee room that one day our chairman forgot to ask him to leave when we were to have an executive session. Now that he has succeeded in boosting the appropriation items for the eradication of tuberculosis in both cattle and hogs I assume that he will retire from Congress feeling that the purposes for which he came down here have been accomplished. Perhaps that is not true and that he had other ambitions in respect to legislation. If so, the members of the Committee on Agriculture were never taken into his confidence and never permitted to forget the commanding importance of caring for the health of our cattle and hogs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota for three minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad indeed to concur in what the chairman of the committee has said with respect to my distinguished colleague from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] and his efforts to promote the work under this item. The item itself and its present proportions are due more to the industry and the careful preparation and study of the gentleman from Nebraska than to any other one man or thing, and I am very glad myself to testify to the fact; and I can do that with particular fitness, because the State which I have the honor to represent, in part, has more accredited herds, has more herds in process of becoming accredited, has more herds under agreement with owners, and more herds on the waiting list than any other State in the Union, although the State of Minnesota has by no means yet the largest number of pure-bred cattle. The work is of very great interest and of very great importance to the State of Minnesota, and that State, like I think every other State in the Union in which stock raising or dairying is of any importance, will do its part, and more than its part, in the work of eradicating this disease.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by incorporating in the RECORD a letter from a member of the live-stock sanitary board of the State of Minnesota touching the cooperative work done under the item in that State.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting certain material mentioned. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
LIVE STOCK SANITARY BOARD,
St. Paul, January 17, 1919.

Hon. SYDNEY ANDERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the absence of our secretary, Dr. C. E. Cotton, I am asked by our board, in session to-day, to report our response to your request of January 9 for information concerning tuberculosis-control work in Minnesota.

During the year ending July 31, 1916, we expended $28,283.81 in reimbursing owners for cattle killed on account of tuberculosis and approximately $9,000 for veterinary services, including traveling expenses.

During the year ending July 31, 1917, we expended in reimbursement of owners for cattle killed on account of tuberculosis $39,621.35, and approximately $9,250 for veterinary services and traveling expenses.

For the year ending July 31, 1918, for tuberculous cattle, $40,094.82, and approximately $8,500 for veterinary services and traveling expenses.

It should be understood that no charge is made to the owner for veterinary services in this or any other similar State work.

The opportunity for enlarging this work is limited only by available funds. The sentiment among Minnesota breeders is such that an almost unlimited work could be done upon urgent request from owners. To illustrate this, I would call your attention to the fact that Minnesota has now about 88 pure-bred herds on the fully accredited list; 182 herds have passed the first completely negative test and 131 other herds have had one test and are approximately clean.

The State and Federal bureau together have now work under way with about 562 herds. We have a waiting list of about 400 herds that have not been touched. There is absolutely no important opposition whatever, and the only objections and criticisms coming from Minnesota are that we do not get to the herds sooner. As to the present condition of Minnesota herds, I would offer the following quotation from a recent statement by a Bureau of Animal Industry official:

"According to a report rendered by the bureau ending December 1, 1918, Minnesota leads all States in tuberculosis-control work, with North Dakota a close second. At the present time there are over 820 herds under Federal-State supervision. The splendid position Minnesota holds along this particular line is due to the hearty cooperation of the past personnel of the live stock sanitary board, which has recently selected Dr. C. E. Cotton as secretary and executive officer, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. S. H. Ward."

This is certainly a fine showing for Minnesota, and the Minnesota State Live Stock Sanitary Board and the veterinary division of the State agricultural college and experiment station, which two institutions have been working in perfect harmony, take a great deal of pride in the showing.

I would also call your attention to the fact that Minnesota's pure-bred, clean herds are constantly threatened by importations from herds in other States that are not so clean as Minnesota herds; for example, in 1917–18 of 442 pure-bred herds tested, containing about 14,200 cattle, 340 animals, or 2.4 per cent reacted. This is a very low average for pure-bred cattle, but our average reactions for several years with Minnesota pure-bred cattle that have been previously known and tested, has ranged about 1 per cent. A seriously large proportion of these reactions in 1917–18 were of cattle recently brought into the State. Minnesota pure-bred cattle raised in Minnesota herds have continued very clean. The point is that we are getting too many reactions among imported cattle and this lowers our per cent showing for the State. In addition to this, it is endangering our clean Minnesota herds. At a certain sale in Sioux City 19 animals were purchased by Minnesota breeders subject to test. Of the 19 animals only 9 were shipped into Minnesota after the test, and of these 9, 5 subsequently reacted on Minnesota home test. During the year ending July 31, 1918, we had 207 tuberculin test reactions in cattle imported almost entirely from six States.

As a representative of Minnesota, we are sure you will take pride in knowing that Minnesota has now more Federal-State accredited herds, more herds in the process of becoming accredited (having passed one clean test), more herds under agreement with owners, and more herds on the waiting list than any other State in the Union, and Minnesota is not as yet the biggest pure-bred cattle State in the Union by any means.

We have under way in Minnesota, in cooperation with the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry, these three projects:

1. Federal and State accredited pure-bred herds project.
2. The circumscribed area tuberculosis eradication project.
3. Swine tuberculosis eradication work.

The swine tuberculosis is reducing automatically with the eradication of tuberculosis in cattle. I mean by this that just in proportion as we remove tuberculosis from our cattle we will at the same time remove tuberculosis from our Minnesota swine.

Trusting that this may be of some assistance to you in an extremely important movement, I am,

Very truly,

M. H. REYNOLDS,
Member University Department of Agriculture and State Live Stock Sanitary Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to rise to supplement with a word the remarks of the chairman of our committee. Well do I remember about a year ago the suggestion of the distinguished Member from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] regarding an increase of the appropriation for the eradication of tuberculosis in animals. He has worked in time and out of time almost gathering statistics and information from all parts of the country regarding this disease, and when he delivered his speech here upon this floor it was a forceful, complete, and a comprehensive presentation of the subject. As the chairman has well said, we were impressed with his remarks, his sincerity, and the ability with which he presented this subject. This year the lingering impression of his reasoning assisted the committee and we were willing and glad to increase the appropriation which we hope will result in greater benefits to the producer of beef and pork and the consumers of these food products.

CHARLES H. SLOAN leaves this body at the close of this session, and we wish he were to return and be with us during the next session. He will leave the impress of his ability, fidelity, valuable service here, which his people must admire and appreciate, and the people of the entire country will long remember him for his successful efforts in attempting to enact legislation tending to decrease the ravages of this dread and devastating disease among the live stock of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to say I heartily concur in what the chairman and others have said about our worthy and distinguished colleague from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN]. His ability, industry, and fidelity to duty is recognized by all, and it is due that it should be stated here that the item carried in this bill is the result of the industry and efforts of that distinguished gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, last year when the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] offered the amendment for the eradication of tuberculosis, which would have very materially increased the appropriation, enough to have been effective, it gave me great pleasure to follow his leadership and to get in and make as hard a fight as I could in support of his contention. It is peculiarly gratifying to me, Mr. Chairman, to find this year he has induced the committee to appreciate the importance of the industry, which is so important to his community and to my own, and I want to thank him in behalf of the farmers of Kansas for the great aid he has given us and the country's cattle interests generally. I have seen in the newspapers of this country many criticisms of Congress and many fine suggestions, I presume, of what we ought to do here, but I am not familiar with any editorial that has ever been published that has been of such utility to the people of this country as this suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska; and I am sorry that he has decided not to remain with us this year. As the newspapers have not been able to make any suggestions as valuable as his, I might suggest that they take up this valuable suggestion, very helpful expenditure, an idea of a Nebraska Member of this Congress, and tell the people about it. If they have any suggestions to offer equally as good, I would like to have them brought out and many of us would be glad to follow them. When we are at home we always think we can run a newspaper better than the editor can, but now that the price of paper has increased so very likely not anybody here has the qualifications to run a newspaper at all unless it is perhaps the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. On the other hand, the editors, by way of reciprocity, I reckon, they think they can run Congress better than Congressmen can. Perhaps there is some doubt about the correctness of that, too. And it is peculiarly pleasing to me to see one plan that after a year has fixed itself upon the House committee's bill and to anticipate the excellent results that will come from a proposition that is as beneficial as this. This plan will go far to getting rid of tuberculosis in cattle, and that will do more good for the country than any New York City daily has accomplished in 10 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 15018, a bill making appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and carrying appropriations totaling $31,691,562 is, as far as I can see, a very meritorious measure, and yet contains matters that my conscience will not permit me to let pass without a word of protest.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], and, coming, as I do, from an agricultural State, I am naturally in sympathy with everything he said about tuberculosis in cattle and in pigs. But tuberculosis, Mr. Chairman, is a disease that is brought about in humans by virtue of bad housing and undernourishment, and I want to know from the chairman of the Agricultural Committee, if he will give me his attention for half a minute, what he expects will result but tuberculosis to humans from a bill that contains items like $240 a year to charwomen? I can fancy to myself a home where the woman earns $240 annually, working as these women do, and, as I am informed, for five hours per day, and even those that are paid as high as $300, and some of them $360 per year—the United States Government sending women home with 60 cents per day, out of which to pay car fare and luncheon, and then working in offices and elsewhere for 60 and 70 cents a day, when at the same time we are appropriating money to destroy tuberculosis in animals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JUUL. Just half a minute more. I do not get much time on this floor, and, while I realize that the Chairman has got to be strict in the matter of time, the hammer in my case is entirely out of order. I sit here from day to day and see men get up a hundred times a day and talk——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has fixed the time for debate.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time be extended so that the gentleman may have five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. If that is the case we will have to make it eight minutes. The gentleman from Maryland desires three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] asks unanimous consent——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, there are a great many fingers going up. I wonder if we could not take the time on the next item?

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman from Illinois does not take much time.

Mr. LEVER. I appreciate that. I wondered if the gentleman could not take it on the next item just as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time be extended 10 minutes, so that the gentleman from Nebraska may have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time be extended 10 minutes, 5 to be occupied by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL], 3 minutes by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], and 2 by the gentleman from Nebraska. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I maintain that the Congress of the United States is placing itself in a false light before the people, particularly the working people of this country, by permitting a bill to go out with items in it like some which are contained in this bill. There is nothing else the matter with the average family when tuberculosis invades it than that they are not able to get proper nourishment and they are not able to get proper housing. I do not know what the circumstances are in a family where women are willing to tender their services for $240 per year, but I can imagine that nothing but dire poverty compels them to accept the employment; and I would like to ask the chairman of the committee and the members of it to revise that part of the bill dealing with the charwomen.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that these $240 charwomen are doing half-time work.

Mr. HAUGEN. And they get the benefit of the bonus also.

Mr. LEVER. And get the benefit of the bonus also.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask the gentlemen if these women are not required to work five hours per day, and that they must in coming and going from their places of employment pay their own car fare; and if the gentleman will take $240 and divide the sum by 365 days he will find we are paying an amount so scant that it reflects absolutely upon the humane thoughts and feelings of this Congress to retain such items in the bill, and I sincerely hope that the gentleman, before the bill goes to final passage, will remedy this evil. It is a crying disgrace that we should sit here and pass legislation carrying items like this.

Mr. LEVER. I would say to the gentleman from Illinois that this committee some years ago, again on its own initiative, took the bit in its teeth and raised the salaries of a great many low-grade salary people. Now, without any specific information on this proposition, I am satisfied that these individuals are doing probably half-time work. The salary may be too little, and probably is too little. I think that the next Congress ought to provide some remedy for this whole question of salaries in the various departments of the Government, and I trust that a committee of the two bodies may secure the information and make a report back at the next session.

Mr. JUUL. I would like to ask the gentleman if this Government has money to stamp out tuberculosis in cattle and at the same time has no money to stamp out tuberculosis among human beings? You can not get anything else but tuberculosis out of $240 a year for pay for a woman devoting five hours a day for 365 days a year to Government service. Allow me to tell you this, Mr. Chairman, that no woman can accept five hours per day employment from the United States Government and at the same time contract for employment elsewhere. She is barred from doing it. And I sincerely hope the gentleman will take the credit of remedying this bill instead of waiting for the Republicans to come in next year to do it.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JUUL. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. I was once impressed, just as the gentleman from Illinois is. I undertook once to make an investigation of the pay of the charwomen about the House Office Building and Capitol, and I was informed that they work three hours a day at such work, leaving them the balance of the day to take up other kinds of employment. I felt satisfied the wages they were receiving were entirely too low and that they would only result in the manner the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] has suggested. I thought it might be well for the gentleman to know that one feature, that they are not working five hours per day.

Mr. HAUGEN. The salary is $480 besides the bonus, and I submit that, considering the character of work they are doing, that salary is away above what servants are receiving in our houses when we hire charwomen at $480 a year.

Mr. JUUL. I want to say to the gentleman that almost any servant in the house of any decent white man gets her food and lodging in addition to the wages she receives.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the charwomen get $20 a month and $60 bonus for the time they spend.

Mr. JUUL. If the gentlemen will kindly look at this bill, page 4, line 23, they will find 1 charwoman at $360, 15 charwomen at $240; and if they will look further on page 5, line 9, 1 charwoman, $480; page 5, line 10, 5 charwomen at $240 each.

If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] will kindly look at his bill, page 7, line 4, he will find 1 charwoman at $360, 3 charwomen at $240 each. If the gentleman will take a look at page 11, line 7, he will find 16 charwomen at $480 each, 5 charwomen at $360 each, 2 charwomen at $300, 7 charwomen at $240 each; and the case becomes still more aggravated by examining page 21 and finding, in line 2 and line 3, 21 charwomen at $240 each, and so on through the bill.

Now, if the gentlemen will take their pencils, they will find by doing a little bit of figuring that these women receive barely 66 cents a day, out of which to pay car fare, for it is reasonable to suppose that they can not afford to live on Capitol Hill out of the compensation furnished by the Government. I want to do all in my power to join the gentlemen from the country districts in stamping tuberculosis out among the farm animals, but I think we might take time occasionally listening to the voices within us that tell us that to proceed along lines here indicated is cruel, and that to sit here comfortably making appropriations for the stamping out of tuberculosis among cattle and yet denying time for those who would like to prevent the same dread disease among humans is hardly in keeping with the high standard of thought that should prevail in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be given one more minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has just fixed the time for debate on this paragraph.

Mr. JUUL. I suppose it will be passed now as usual.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the committee for having inserted in the bill this paragraph for the purpose of eradicating tuberculosis in cattle. I have been speaking to this House for some time about the great importance of this subject, and it is inspiring to me that the gentlemen of the committee have seen the vision. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] has done splendid work, along with the chairman of the committee, and also the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] have done good work.

I believe it is one of the most important items that this Congress will pass at this session or that has been passed at any other session. It provides for safeguarding the purity of those necessities of life which the young consume. I think that when this inspection has been in vogue for a few years, after we have been able to enforce its provisions throughout the country, the inspection will cover all milk products that are consumed by the young—not only milk in its original state but butter and cheese. We will then have been able very largely to eradicate tuberculosis throughout the United States. It is a subject in which everybody is interested. It is a subject in which we are more interested to-day, perhaps, than ever before in the history of the country, because "the boys" are coming home, many of them in a condition which needs absolute attention and pure food, so that they may not be contaminated with any diseases, and particularly with the germs of tuberculosis.

The item will go far toward perfecting the desired condition of which I have been speaking for several years. I want to extend to the American Federation of Labor, and particularly to the Federation of Labor of Maryland, my sense of appreciation of the assistance they have given in this work, in that their lodges throughout the whole United States have adopted resolutions asking Congress to provide against tuberculosis in animals. My good friend from Nebraska, Mr. SLOAN, has worked in season and out of season for this proposition, and I am sure the consumers of his State and the consumers of the entire country will appreciate his work more and more as the years roll by. It is a provision in which Congress can well feel pride in that it protects and cares for the young children who consume these products in their raw state, and particularly the sick, who are compelled to consume milk products during their illness because those products are perhaps the only things they can digest. It is a proposition which the country at large will applaud, and there will not go up a single voice from the Atlantic to the Pacific or from the Canadian boundary to the Gulf of Mexico against this proposition. [Applause.]

I tell you, gentlemen, you are building greater than you realize, and generations yet unborn will rise up to call you blessed for the protection and purification of this all-important food product. Important to the young, when they are unable to care for themselves or look out for their interests; important to the sick, when they must rely upon the good judgment of their fellow beings for those things which they can use for their sustenance; a blessing to old age, when milk and its products perform such an important part of their daily food.

The time will come when the people will wonder why Congress delayed in the protection of the milk supply from the ravages of tuberculosis in the cattle, when they will wonder why we delayed in eradicating this dreadful disease among the cattle, in the face of medical testimony that it is largely transmitted to humanity, and when they realize that a vast part of this white plague which has ravaged man for innumerable years will have been discontinued through this protection afforded by Congress.

Not only will they appreciate the fact that you have provided against the spread of tuberculosis and the elimination thereof in the cattle, but the further fact that by the next item of your bill you have also provided for the investigation of the dairy industry and particularly for the inspection of renovated butter factories and markets. Renovated butter has perhaps carried more dirt and disease than any dairy product, second alone to infected milk. Now that you have provided for the inspection of these all-important factories I believe that the butter furnished the public will rapidly improve and that people shall again feel safe in eating that most nutritious of the milk products. Many people, by reason of cost, and sometimes by reason of fear of disease, have entirely eliminated the use of butter, and have substituted those new inventions which in many instances splendidly replace butter.

Congress saw the light in the inspection of beef; it has now seen the light and the wisdom in the protection of milk and milk products. I hail the day when the percentage of tuberculosis in cattle will be so low that it will be negligible. It is my proud privilege to again congratulate the committee and the workers of the same for the results they have brought about. It has been a long fight, but what a worthy one.

That my good friend from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] will not participate in the formation of future agricultural bills, but has voluntarily left this body, is a regret, I know, to each and every one of us. I have crossed swords with him on several occasions, fighting in the interest of the purity of milk, but I am glad to relate that it was not a difference of desire, but a difference of method only that caused these combats. To-day we stand together as one, united with the other workers for the cause in the betterment of milk and milk products and their purification. [Applause.]

I am thankful that the great war has ceased, that no longer do we murder and destroy the white races of the earth, but that conservation not alone of property but of the human race as well has begun. This appropriation will go a long way toward saving the lives of those 6,000 babies who have died from bovine tuberculosis each year. May the good work go on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, it is a great pleasure to me to listen to the compliments that are being paid to my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN]. He and I came here to Congress eight years ago and will leave at the same time. We have known each other intimately, and we have worked together for the interest of the farming communities and agricultural sections, especially in the trans-Missouri country. During that time there has been no one Member of Congress who has been more faithful to the agricultural portion of our country than my colleague from Nebraska.

When a year ago he took up this work to get an appropriation for the eradication of tuberculosis, he not only made a great speech, because he had made a careful study of the subject, but individually sought out every Member of this House and took a personal interest in the making of the appropriation. And he followed the course of that legislation to the Senate and there secured an increase of the amount which this House had given. Nebraska and every other State in this Union that is engaged in the production of cattle for human food or otherwise can be congratulated on the fact that my fellow Member from Nebraska was here and on the job attending to their needs. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in dairy industry, cooperative investigations of the dairy industry in the various States, inspection of renovated-butter factories and markets, $350,370.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LEVER offers an amendment: Page 16, line 14, after the word "markets," strike out the figures "$350,370" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$410,370: Provided, That the sum of $60,000 may be used for stimulating the utilization of dairy products and by-products as human food."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to enable the Department of Agriculture, through its Dairy Division, to stimulate the use of dairy products. When the food-production act was under consideration last year it carried an item of $60,000, I think, for cottage-cheese work. That item met with a good deal of ridicule by Members of the House, but at the time I tried to impress on the House the fact that the matter of encouraging the production and use of cottage cheese alone, to say nothing of the encouragement of the use of other dairy products, would be worth the expenditure.

This is not a committee amendment. I reserved the right to offer it myself without the indorsement of the committee. The committee did not pass upon it.

I was reading one of the pamphlets of the Public Health Service the other night, where they bring out the fact very forcefully that pellagra is most likely caused by an unbalanced ration. It is caused largely by a lack of milk or lack of milk products in the diet.

Cottage cheese is one of the most delightful of all cheeses, and yet it is almost impossible to get it in the markets. The average person in the city of Washington does not know what it is and has never eaten it, and, strange to say, the great majority of farmers in this country producing milk have not brought themselves to a very large use of cottage cheese. Of course, the processes of making it are very simple. My grandmother made it when I was a boy. Yet very little of it is used in my own family now. It is hard to get. The average consumer of milk products does not know anything about it. The farmer himself does not produce it. If we could teach our farm demonstration agents to encourage the production of it, and then teach the city people to eat it in its various forms, I think we would be performing a service to this country that would be well worth the appropriation that we desire to have made for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am told that the gentleman's amendment is largely for the purpose of promoting the use of so-called cottage cheese.

Mr. LEVER. That and all dairy products. I should say about $25,000 would be used for that.

Mr. MANN. It may be a useful thing. I do not know. Cottage cheese happens to be an article which is recommended to me by my doctors to eat. My difficulty has been to get it.

Mr. LEVER. That is it.

Mr. MANN. I had a standing order all last summer with a high-grade dairy concern in Chicago to deliver cottage cheese to me, and I never got an ounce of it all summer.

Mr. LEVER. I got my first in Washington the other day.

Mr. MANN. What is the use of stimulating the consumption of cottage cheese when you can not get it now? It is made from surplus milk.

Mr. LEVER. That is just one part of the proposition. I want to encourage the production of cottage cheese. I want to encourage our farmers and dairymen to save this waste milk and make it into cottage cheese and also to encourage people to eat it.

Mr. MANN. Cottage cheese is something that will not keep any length of time. It has got to be used promptly when it is made. The Bureau of Food Control issued pamphlet after pamphlet——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I do not want it extended as much as that.

Mr. MANN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from South Carolina be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. The Bureau of Food Control issued pamphlet after pamphlet at great expense urging people to eat cottage cheese when they could not even get milk, and milk is cheaper to eat than cottage cheese. Cottage cheese is made from surplus milk. If there is an extra amount of milk, then they turn it into cottage cheese.

Mr. LEVER. It is a waste product.

Mr. MANN. I would not say a waste product.

Mr. LEVER. A by-product.

Mr. MANN. But it is rapidly taken up when you can get hold of it. Now it is proposed to spend $60,000 to urge people to eat cottage cheese, which they can not get.

Mr. HAUGEN. Which they will not eat.

Mr. MANN. They would eat it if they could get it.

Mr. LEVER. The statement is made that last year it cost $38,000, and that 38,000 farmers in 38 States have taken up the systematic making and use of cottage cheese on their farms. And it is certain that thousands more not heard from have done likewise.

Mr. MANN. Oh, my mother made cottage cheese when I was not that high [indicating].

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. And taught me to eat it.

Mr. LEVER. Certainly. Mine did, too. All you have to do is to take a cheesecloth bag and pour clabber milk into it and hang it up and let it drip until the next morning; then you have a very good article of cottage cheese in the bag.

Mr. MANN. But if it is more profitable to make butter, they will make butter. If it is more profitable to sell the milk, they will sell the milk.

Mr. LEVER. Very true; but they do not make cottage cheese out of the milk that they use to make butter from.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. LEVER. Cottage cheese is made from sour milk, or clabber milk, as we call it in our part of the country. I strongly believe that, while this matter can be easily ridiculed, I have a duty to perform. I feel very strongly that people ought to be encouraged not only to produce cottage cheese but to use it, because it is one of the most delightful of milk products. I would rather have it than butter. I would rather have it than milk, but you can not get it. The farmers do not produce it.

Mr. MANN. But cottage cheese can not be made out in the country and shipped to the city to any advantage.

Mr. LEVER. Why can not the dairies around Washington be induced to make it?

Mr. MANN. They can if they do not sell their milk at a higher rate than people would pay for cottage cheese. You can get cottage cheese at the Center Market here.

Mr. LEVER. It is hard to get.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman's proposition was to teach people to make other kinds of cheese, to make cheese that would keep, there might be something to it. I have had occasion to study the food value of various cheeses. I got a long list showing the food values of cheeses, from examinations made by the Department of Agriculture, and practically none of the cheeses mentioned are to be had. You can not find out anything about the food value of those that are to be had.

Mr. LEVER. As a matter of fact, a portion of this sum will be used to teach the people of this country to eat more cheese. On looking over this article I find that the people of the United States per capita consume less cheese than any other people in the world, and there is no reason for that except we have had other things in such great abundance.

Mr. PLATT. It seems to me it is foolish to try to teach people to make something out of waste milk when milk is selling at such a high price that all the milk will be sold and there is no waste milk. You have got to stop guaranteeing wheat at $2.20 and get it down so that people can buy it.

Mr. LEVER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that this is anticipating peace.

Mr. PLATT. We had better wait until we get peace.

Mr. LEVER. We shall have the price of wheat taken care of pretty soon.

Mr. PLATT. Butter is so high that the people do not eat it and have to eat substitutes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that cottage cheese is made from milk that has soured and that could not be disposed of otherwise, so that when it has become sour, and there is a market for cheese, it can be made into cottage cheese?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How much was spent last year in trying to teach the people this extremely elaborate method of making cottage cheese?

Mr. LEVER. Thirty-eight thousand and some-odd dollars.

Mr. HAUGEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, the total amount was $65,141. The statement of Dr. Rawl, on page 32, as to this matter is as follows:

> We spent on it last year—1918—out of the emergency fund, $23,066 on the factory work, $38,167 on the farm work, and $3,907 on the city work, making, all told, $65,141.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is correct. I had the figures before me, but I had not added them.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on this proposition.

Mr. LEVER. I have two minutes remaining, but I do not care to use the time now.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, as stated by the chairman of the committee, this proposition has been ridiculed in Congress, not only here, but it has been ridiculed from one end of the country to the other, and most properly so. Of all the absurd propositions ever suggested by Congress this is certainly the most ridiculous one that ever came before it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Would not the gentleman go further and say it has brought ridicule on Congress?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly; not only cottage cheese has been ridiculed but Members of Congress have been ridiculed as well, and properly so. As stated by the chairman, the process of making cottage cheese is very simple. On page 31 of the hearings the chairman, speaking of cottage cheese, says:

> I can take an old cheesecloth and make the finest in the world.

That is all there is to making it. You remember the testimony of Dr. Rawl two years ago. He described the process. His proposition was to send out an agent to teach how to make cottage cheese, next to fill them up with cottage cheese, return in a few days and again pump them full, and to repeat the process three or four times; then it was believed, after the process had been repeated four times, that they could be made to eat that precious product. [Laughter.] We have carried this ridiculous, absurd, proposition a number of years and spent $65,141 last year, and yet the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says he had an order in for cottage cheese and not one pound could be procured.

We have been trying to teach people what they have known for hundreds of years. There is scarcely a woman or child in the country who does not know how to make cottage cheese. They do not make it because there is no market for it. They make all that is needed at home and all they can find a market for. As stated by one representative of the department, they did stimulate production, I believe, in Detroit, but found no market, and it was found necessary to send their agents there to stimulate a market for it.

Like many other unworthy and foolish appropriations this unfortunate child was ushered into this world. It was accepted as a war measure. Now, after masquerading as such, and now that the war is over, we find that it has not only been discredited and ridiculed in general but deserted by its own parent, Dr. Rawl. No estimates have been submitted for its continuance. It has been turned down, turned out into the cold, relegated to the rear, to be consigned into oblivion. Here it is, without parentage, without that loving protection and influence of the Department of Agriculture, and would have been left to sleep undisturbed had it not been for its godmother coming to its rescue. Through his generosity and his tender heart and sympathy for the fallen and unfortunate, he has taken this unfortunate skim-milk member of society under his protecting wing, offering it shelter and sustenance. With due regard for its present sponsor and due appreciation of his deep sympathy for the unfortunate, now that it has been given a thorough trial and has failed to make good, disowned and humiliated, I repeat it is the most absurd proposition ever suggested. Why should we make ourselves even more ridiculous?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. If you enter upon this, why not get a judicial writ, a mandamus, and make everybody eat it?

Mr. HAUGEN. If it is necessary to make an appropriation, by all means we should make it mandatory and compel them to do so.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I trust this amendment, offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, will not be adopted. I do not oppose it altogether for the reasons suggested by other gentlemen. A year ago some attention was called to the work done by the Department of Agriculture and to the result of literature sent out urging farmers to make cheese, and to make cottage cheese of their sour milk, and the reports were very gratifying. It was shown that tons of additional food were produced—tons of nutritious and wholesome food produced during the war—practically from what would have been but for this a waste product. But the sum proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina is not necessary, because that kind of work is provided for in this and other appropriations. We are providing for the employment of a man in almost every county in the United States and for a woman in almost every county in the State, the man to advise the farmers respecting their work and the woman to advise the women as to their work in the house, the preparation and use of food, and the use of material in the making of clothes. It seems to me, if we wish to make the appropriation and provide it shall be used as the gentleman from South Carolina suggests, there will be a duplication, and I believe there would be the taking up of work that the Federal Government ought not to engage in. I doubt very much the right or authority or advisability of the Government of the United States to engage and send agents into the homes to oversee the preparation of meals, see to the making of clothing, or to aid as suggested in the bill—to go out among the people of the country and organize sewing clubs to teach the women how to sew and make the ordinary garments for members of the family.

There is a limit to Government activities—or there ought to be—and in this particular case, if this money were provided and the agents of the Government were engaged and sent out, there would be a duplication of work. Agents—men and women—are to be employed to go around now, and if they know enough to hold their jobs and earn their money they are able to give all the advice necessary as to the making of cottage cheese. In fact, advice and instruction are not necessary. If there is a demand for further production of cottage cheese, a suggestion merely is enough, because, as gentlemen on the floor have well said, every housewife in the country knows how to make cottage cheese, and knowledge of the necessity for making it for the purpose of increasing the supply of food is all that is necessary. A suggestion is enough. It is not necessary to hire men or women to invade the home, to interfere with domestic affairs, and to urge and teach the making of this product, valuable though it may be. I trust that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. There are 100,000,000 people in the United States. Everybody knows about cottage cheese and all the difficulties there are in producing it; but does not the gentleman think it would be cruel to deny this appropriation or fail to make this appropriation which has once been utilized in instructing in the making of cottage cheese? What is going to become of the people who will get this $50,000? There are two sides to this question, I submit to the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is true that during the war emergency a very large number of men and women were employed in the department, and there is a tremendous effort on the part of the department to retain their services, to find something for them to do, and money is asked in these various items in order that many of these men and women whose services are not now needed may be retained. When the Government undertakes an activity it is almost impossible to induce it to lay it aside. When a man has once attached himself to the pay roll of the Government, it takes a major surgical operation to separate him from it, although there may be absolutely no need for his services. I suggest there is no need of the services of these people and that the appropriation ought not to be made.

Several Members rose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, it is very apparent that the committee is against this proposition. Why not have a vote upon it?

Mr. MANN. Why not withdraw it.

Mr. LEVER. Let us vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks for a vote.

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, Mr. Chairman, there is no more important question before this country, and it ought to be thoroughly debated.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard before we take a vote.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma desires to offer an amendment to the amendment. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first two lines of the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, being the following language:

The figures "$350,370," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$410,370."

And to retain the following language:

Provided, That the sum of $60,000 may be used for stimulating the utilization of dairy products and by-products as human food.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that an amendment is not now in order, because a point of order is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true. The Chair had overlooked the fact that a point of order is reserved against the amendment. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist upon the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I prefer to reserve it so as to get further information upon the subject.

Mr. LEVER. I insist that the gentleman make his point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, being of the same mind as the gentleman from South Carolina, that the sentiment of the committee is overwhelmingly opposed to this, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the disease of hog cholera and for its control or eradication by such means as may be necessary, including demonstrations, the formation of organizations, and other methods, either independently or in cooperation with farmers, associations, State or county authorities, $641,045: Provided, That of said sum $163,560 shall be available for expenditure in carrying out the provisions of the act approved March 4, 1913, regulating the preparation, sale, barter, exchange, or shipment of any virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product manufactured in the United States and the importation of such products intended for use in the treatment of domestic animals: And provided further, That of said sum $30,620 shall be available for researches concerning the cause, modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention of this disease.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of having inserted in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Bureau of Animal Industry as to the progress of the work that has been done in respect to hog cholera during the past year. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the data referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman, if the letter is not long, that it be read for the information of the House.

Mr. RUBEY. Very well. I ask that the Clerk read the letter in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS L. RUBEY,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. RUBEY: In accordance with your telephone conversation yesterday, the following data are submitted:

The hog-cholera appropriation in the regular bill for the current year provides $247,600 for the control of hog cholera in the field; $32,060 for researches concerning the cause, etc., of hog cholera; and $167,240 for regulating the preparation of hog-cholera serum and similar products. In addition, the food-production act of November 21 carries an item of $202,965, which supplements the regular funds.

During the year ending March 31, 1914, there were 7,004,756 hogs lost from cholera, or approximately 119 hogs out of every 1,000. Through the efforts of the bureau, in cooperation with various State agencies, this loss has been gradually reduced until the death rate for the year ending March 31, 1918, was 3,280,161, or 42.1 per 1,000, the lowest rate recorded by the department in the history of the swine industry. The aim of the bureau is to reduce these losses to a minimum, and if the funds made available by the food-production act are not continued next year the bureau will have available approximately $250,000 for field work, or 50 per cent less than the amount that will be expended during the current fiscal year.

This work is in the nature of an investment, and it is simply a question how rapidly the Nation wishes it to develop. It is believed that an additional sum equal to the amount provided by the food-production act could be efficiently expended during 1920.

The work looking to the control of hog cholera has been continued along the general lines adopted in 1917 and has been extended from a certain number of counties in 14 States to State-wide efforts in 34 States, the work in 30 of these States consisting of control measures. In California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Kansas, Ohio, Oklahoma, and Utah, in addition to control work, a veterinarian has been assigned to each State with the extension division of the agricultural college, with the object of giving his entire time to educational activities in the field. In Louisiana, South Dakota, New Mexico, and West Virginia the efforts are principally educational in character.

The following information may be of interest to the committee in connection with its consideration of this matter:

Number of States in which work is conducted	34
Arkansas, Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Montana, Missouri, Maryland, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, New Mexico, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin.
Number of veterinarians assigned	185
Number of investigations of reported outbreaks	38,046
Number of visits and interviews with farmers and stockmen	371,792
Number of hogs treated in connection with the work by bureau veterinarians, practicing veterinarians, and others cooperating	5,500,000

An important phase of the work has been to assist in formulating and applying rules and regulations covering the immunization and handling of stocker hogs at public stockyards intended for feeding purposes on farms in order that these animals may be returned to localities where feed is available without danger of spreading infection and where they may be subject to reinspection from time to time, assuring safety to the feeder while these hogs are being finished for market.

Of the 34 States in which we are working only a few are financially equipped to render any material assistance. Probably the most efficient cooperation received is the system in vogue in Missouri, where a number of practicing veterinarians are deputized by the office of the State veterinarian to assist the bureau inspectors in the investigation of outbreaks of hog cholera and the application of the serum treatment. Florida, Georgia, Arkansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Ohio, Mississippi, Kentucky, California, Kansas, and Indiana are lending material assistance, as these States have appropriated State funds for this class of work. The remaining 23 States are lending moral support only, but it is the understanding that in several of these efforts are being made to encourage the legislatures to set aside funds for the control of hog cholera.

The following are tables showing the number of hogs raised and the monetary loss from cholera for the State of Missouri and the United States extending over a period of five years.

	Hogs on farms January 1.	Hogs lost from cholera.	Monetary loss. March 31.
Missouri:
1913	4,087,000	643,680	$5,471,280
1914	4,250,000	344,250	2,926,125
1915	4,250,000	353,813	2,765,885
1916	4,505,000	385,178	3,334,764
1917	4,280,000	200,304	2,003,040
United States:
1913	61,178,000	6,064,470	58,833,431
1914	58,933,000	6,304,320	67,697,431
1915	64,618,000	5,541,971	54,322,549
1916	67,766,000	4,057,884	33,943,443
1917	67,453,000	2,959,322	32,475,190

Very truly, yours,

J. R. MOHLER,
Chief of Bureau.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, at this time I desire to express my satisfaction that the committee has wisely continued this appropriation. I think the success of the work of the National Government in the eradication of hog cholera throughout this country has been one of its most notable achievements. In nothing has the Department of Agriculture more commended itself to the farmers of the country than in this work. In nothing, I think, has there been a greater measure of success. There is now, comparatively speaking, on a percentage basis, less hog cholera in the country than there has been for probably 25 years. I think that to-day, when we have been able to reduce to the present minimum the ravages of hog cholera, we should recognize the fact, when the malady is at its lowest strength, that now is the time when we should most vigorously look to bring about its entire extinction. I am very glad indeed that the temptation that might exist, because of the small comparative amount of hog cholera in this country, to cut down the appropriation has not led the committee to make unnecessary and dangerous reductions, for I believe such reductions, if made, would lead to wider extension and greater percentage of mortality from hog cholera.

There is nothing that this country can do to reduce the high cost of living, as it pertains at least to the meats and fats, as to encourage the production of hogs in the country. Not only is it the farmers most profitable work, the most profitable stock that he can handle, but it is to the ultimate consumer the cheapest meat that he can obtain. It is the best meat that can be furnished to our armies in the field, because it can go to them in the best condition. It is not necessary that it should be refrigerated, it is not necessary that great losses should be incurred, but it can be taken to them in an appetizing, attractive form and at the same time with entire safety and without loss. So, Mr. Chairman, nothing that can be done by the Department of Agriculture, in my judgment, will be of more direct benefit to the farmers of the land than continuing this work for the purpose of saving the herds of hogs that are left in the country, and there can be nothing that would more directly contribute to this than the eradication of hog cholera. [Applause.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In doing this I shall not extend my speech as I did on the tuberculosis item. I have sat here under very flattering compliments of my friends and colleagues, unable to do more than blush. You know a man is not entirely bad as long as he can blush. I desire to say of this item it is important to the producing and consuming public. It gives me an opportunity to say of the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, and say it truthfully and sincerely, that one of the first important acts of his administration, really performed a few weeks before he became its active chairman, was to use the force of his influence in committee to bring about the first appropriation for this important enterprise. He will have been six years chairman of the great Agricultural Committee. The Agriculture Department has been the most progressive department of the Government, I am convinced. That never in the history of agriculture legislation did this body ever present more important measures than have been prepared in the last six years under the leadership of the able, eloquent, efficient, devoted, and patriotic chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. [Applause.] This particular item was started about the time the gentleman from South Carolina became chairman of the committee, and the results which have followed the activities are marvelous. Listen, if you will, to some figures based upon those taken from those furnished by the department, but so presented as to give a little different angle from that presented by the department's tabulations. In the United States for 29 years before this activity was begun the average annual loss was 74 per thousand. During that time the lowest loss was 49 out of every thousand, while the highest was 144.

I have from Dr. Hess an estimate of the last year's activities. The last hog year ended with March 31, 1918. Every dog has his day and a hog has his year, ending just ahead of April 1. And the rate for the last year—1918—is figured here at 36 per thousand. That is important, and more important is the following fact, that during the activities of this department, cooperating with the various States of the Union, the hog census has shown a large increase. A large increase in meat animals has not occurred anywhere in the world during the last five years except in the United States, and in the United States the increase of quadruped food-producing animals, hogs are the only kind that showed a marked increase.

In 1914 there were only 58,000,000 hogs in the United States. In 1918 there were 74,000,000 hogs. That increase occurred notwithstanding the attractive prices that had been going on and the tremendous drain of the European war. Men look at the price of their bacon and ham and say it has been high. I venture to say that if this cooperative Government and State activity had not been going on during the last five years there would have been no such encouragement to the hog producers. Instead of having 74,000,000 hogs in the United States we would have had 44,000,000. I submit to you, gentlemen, that would have made your bacon and ham twice the price you have been paying for it during the war. As a matter of preparedness for the great struggle in which the United States took its part the Committee on Agriculture and every one of its members in encouraging the production of this great product surpassed any department of the Government.

Let me call your attention to figures for a number of States. I begin with Iowa. Iowa is my native State; that is where I began. It is the greatest hog State of the Union. The average of its loss for 29 years before these activities was——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLOAN. The average rate during all these years in Iowa was 89 out of every thousand. For 1912 and 1913, in which years there was no activity, it was 180 out of every thousand. The average for the last two years, namely, 1916 and 1917, under the activities in Iowa is 42 out of every thousand. During the whole period of 29 years the highest loss in Iowa was 329 out of every thousand, nearly 1 out of 3; and the lowest in that time was 42. The lowest in all its history was 35, in 1917. Figures for none of the States for 1918 are available.

I read the other day the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], the ranking member of the committee, that his county of Worth had no loss from hog cholera during the last year. He is to be congratulated on that; but I want to say that of all the diseases that inflict themselves upon the food-producing animals of the world, as was said of the serpent in the Garden, the hog cholera is the most subtle of them all. The hog-cholera germ undoubtedly knew who was going to be the chairman of the great Agricultural Committee next year. It was warned, and it stayed out of Worth County. [Laughter.]

I here present similar statements from 9 other States of the Union. These with Iowa in their order constitute the 10 States that produce more than half the hogs in the country:

As I said before, referring to different sections, two of these States are those that are not usually considered hog States. Georgia and Texas are on that list. So that what was said about the cattle is going to be true about the swine. The United States in the years to come, under these two great activities, will look to the Southland for its beef and for its pork nearly as much as it has heretofore been looking for its cotton.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD by presenting a number of statistics which I have figured out myself, and a communication from Dr. Hess of the Department of Agriculture, who has special charge of this work, and to insert some other matters that I think would be pertinent to the subject under consideration.

The following embodies facts and views of Dr. Hess, who has charge of cholera eradication work in the Bureau of Animal Industry, and is entitled to great credit for his industry and achievements:

The work of controlling hog cholera has extended from experiments in three counnties in 1913 to State-wide activities in 34 States, comprising the principal hog-raising sections of the country. The work in its present scope involves sanitary surveys, the investigation of reported outbreaks of hog cholera, supervising and assisting in the treatment of infected herds, cleaning and disinfecting premises, establishing quarantine when necessary, applying State and Federal regulations, and furnishing assistance and advice to farmers, stockmen, practicing veterinarians, and others concerning the proper disposal of dead animals and methods of prevention and control of hog cholera.

An important phase of the work has been to assist in formulating and applying State and Federal rules and regulations that require the immunization and proper handling at public stockyards of stocker hogs intended for feeding purposes on farms, in order that they may be returned to localities where feed is available without danger of spreading infection. These animals are subject to reinspection from time to time, thus assuring safety to the feeder while the hogs are being finished for market.

The following States are receiving the benefit of the work: Arkansas, Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, Montana, Missouri, Maryland, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, New Mexico, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

For the year ending March 31, 1914, out of a hog population of 61,178,000, cholera destroyed 118 in every 1,000, or a total of 7,204,756. March 31, 1918, according to the Bureau of Crop Estimates of the Department of Agriculture, there were on the farms of the United States 74,324,000 hogs. Assuming that these hogs were marketed at an average weight of 200 pounds each, they would return to the producers not less than two and a quarter billion dollars, or approximately one-third of the largest loan ever floated during the history of the Government. Through the efforts of the Bureau of Animal Industry, in cooperation with State authorities, losses have been reduced over 60 per cent, or to 42 per 1,000, in the year 1918.

Even though the number of hogs lost has been greatly reduced, the monetary loss is still great, owing to the high value of this class of animals, and particularly at this time and stage of development of this very important industry we can not afford to neglect the protection which this hog-cholera work is offering. The monetary loss from hog cholera for last year, although the number of hogs lost was greatly reduced, represents probably seventy-five times the amount that is being asked for for the continuation of this work, or sufficient to maintain the work in its present scope for a period of more than 60 years. Without the protection that has been provided to the swine industry, the millions of pounds of pork products that have been added to the Nation's supply, through the increased number of hogs raised during the period of the war, would not have been possible.

The following is a table taken from Farmers' Bulletin 834, prepared by Drs. Marion Dorset and O. B. Hess. It may be proper to state that Dr. Dorset was one of the scientists who discovered and developed the hog-cholera serum.

On hand March 31, 1918, 74,324,000. Losses from cholera year ending March 31, 1918, 2,701,825 hogs.

In this connection I desire especially to thank the members of the committee and others who have said the beautiful, complimentary, and flattering things concerning myself. I expect to leave Congress at the end of this term, voluntarily of course. Having always while here been a minority member, that meant pulling hard against the stream. I have tried during all that time in a modest way to impress some of my views upon constructive legislation. It is difficult to establish credit to much accomplishment, but among the measures of constructive legislation for the good of the whole country, while having special application to my own district and State, I consider having a creditable part in starting the two great National and State cooperative enterprises, namely, to eradicate hog cholera and tuberculosis, among the best measures upon which I lavished my study and industry. I shall leave behind me, I trust, many friends upon this floor upon either side of this great party aisle. I am convinced that if the future of this Republic is left to Members such as we have now and will have in the coming Congress, and they live up to their great opportunities, duties, and responsibilities, the measure of the years of the Republic has not been taken, nor will it until many centuries have been added to our history. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12001) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911."

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent censuses disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. ASHURST, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Meat inspection, Bureau of Animal Industry: For additional expenses in carrying out the provisions of the meat-inspection act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stats L., 674), there is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $803,960: Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, in his discretion, to pay employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry employed in establishments subject to the provisions of the meat-inspection act of June 30, 1906, for all overtime work performed at such establishments, at such rates as he may determine, and to accept from such establishments wherein such overtime work is performed reimbursement for any sums paid out by him for such overtime work.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out all the language after the word "determine," on line 3, page 19, down to and including the word "work," in line 6.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MADDEN: Page 19, line 3, after the word "determine," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, when the meat-inspection law was first passed, as the result of a nation-wide agitation, the then President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, anxious to see that American meats were prepared in such form as to be acceptable to the meat buyers of the world, fearful that Congress would fail to appropriate the needed money, suggested that the cost of the inspection should be paid by the packers. The reply to the suggestion was that the payment of the inspection cost by the packers would indicate that the inspection was a packers' inspection. The law provides that every packer who fails or refuses to pack the meats according to the regulations commits a crime, for which he is liable to be punished.

I take it that the meat inspector is nothing more nor less than a detective, although he has special knowledge of the manner in which the meat should be packed. But the main purpose for the employment of the inspector is to see that the meat is so packed as to comply with the law, and for failure to pack the meat in such form it is his business to accumulate evidence to be used in the courts against the man who violates the law.

Now, who is liable to violate the law? Is it not the packer? And if the packer is called upon to pay any part of the compensation of the inspector, you have taken away the incentive of the inspector to see that the law is observed. And you have also compelled the man who may commit the crime to pay the man who is employed to get evidence against him, if I may so put it, to furnish the evidence upon which to convict himself. And this provision of the law reported by the committee would do just that.

Now, I maintain that this is an iniquitous suggestion. If the men who are employed by the Government of the United States to inspect the packing of the meats to be consumed by the people of the United States or by the meat users of the world are entitled to overtime pay, the Government of the United States ought to pay them. And I have no objection to their payment for overtime; but I do object to placing the matter of the payment of these men for overtime work in the hands of the men whom they are employed to accumulate evidence against in case of their failure to pack the meats as they should be packed according to the provisions of the law.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Does the Government pay or the packer pay for the time that is not overtime?

Mr. MADDEN. The Government pays. And if the Government did not pay, the inspection would not be considered worth a cent anywhere in the world. Why, everybody knows if the packers were permitted to pay, the people everywhere would consider it a packers' inspection and not worth the paper it was written on.

When this law was up for consideration originally I recall that President Roosevelt sent for me to talk the matter over. He said then that he wanted a provision placed in the bill to provide that the packers should pay the cost of the inspection, and that the amount of money received from that source should be placed in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, to be used by him without being appropriated by Congress. And he wanted me to support it. I said, "I will not do it. The proposal that you make is untenable."

The people of England fought for 400 years to take the power away from the King to expend money that was not appropriated by Parliament, and at the end of the 400 years' fight the people won, and the King of England has never had the power to expend any money since that time except such money as was appropriated by the Parliament. When we organized this Government we included a provision in the Constitution of the United States that no executive officer of the Government should expend money except that appropriated by the Congress. And the Secretary of Agriculture ought not to be permitted to expend any money received from any source that does not go through the Treasury of the United States and which is reappropriated by the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. And this item here, although the money would go into the Treasury of the United States if it was received from the packers, and be paid by the Government from those receipts, yet it is an indirect payment of the men by the packers for the overtime work they are called upon to do. And it is not the way to do the business. If the Government of the United States feels that its employees are entitled to more compensaion for additional work done, then the Treasury of the United States ought to be drawn against for what it costs, and no outside interest should be compelled or required or permitted to contribute any part of the money necessary to be paid for that purpose except through the ordinary methods of taxation.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it not within the power of the packers under the arrangements for inspection that they can in fact determine how much overtime work is performed and when the overtime work shall be performed, so that it is within their power to favor or not to favor the men who are inspecting the meat products?

Mr. MADDEN. That may be the case. I really do not know. But the main thing with me is that I object to any private individual being required or permitted to pay any part of the Government expense for men who are employed to inspect the work which those private individuals are called upon to do.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the Committee on Agriculture, a new member, when the original meat-inspection law was passed. The contest in committee was as has been described by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], namely, as to who should pay the expense of inspection. It was a contest long drawn out and bitterly fought. I remember the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, a Member of the House, came before the Committee on Agriculture and made a very earnest plea for some action at the hands of the committee.

When this proposition first came to my attention I felt exactly as the gentleman from Illinois does about it. I felt that it would be a most unwise policy to have the packers pay the expense of this overtime, but after looking into the matter I saw that the payment was so indirect that there could not be any possible influence upon the character of the work of the inspection force. We had before the committee Dr. Mohler, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and we cross-examined him at considerable length, and he informed us that the Canadian Government has exactly the same system, recently put in force, for the packers to pay the overtime work. And the Canadian officials have recently informed him that the system works beautifully.

These inspectors, these employees of the Government at the packing houses, frequently work from 7 o'clock in the morning until 8 o'clock at night. There is no incentive on the part of the packing establishments to speed up their work. They may keep these men there as long as they please.

I feel now, after thoroughly considering the matter, that it would very much inure to the benefit of the inspector himself; it would save him time. It would really reduce overtime work in these packing houses if the packer himself is made to pay the burden of the expense of the overtime work. If the proposition were to pay these men directly, I would oppose it just as vigorously as the gentleman from Illinois. But the payment for this overtime work is turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture. He must accept and pay for this overtime just as he does under the present law, and I do not see how there can be any possible influence by the packer over the inspector by an arrangement of that kind. For example, one or two years ago in the Forest Service we permitted certain lumber companies to cover into the Treasury, or we allowed the Secretary of Agriculture to accept from these lumber companies, payment for brush being burned. It is a matter of similar nature, and no harmful results have come from that kind of an arrangement.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. There is quite a difference between the burning of brush and the packing of meats that all the people of the world must use, and the value of the inspection depends upon whether it is a Government inspection or a private individual's inspection.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I appreciate that, and the whole inspection law is based on that theory. If this in any wise would break down the inspection service of the country, I would be opposed to it, but I do not think it can possibly do so.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Does not the gentleman think that if it becomes generally understood that the packers pay in part at least for the inspection it will militate against their faith in the efficiency of the inspection in the eyes of purchasers all over the world?

Mr. LEVER. I do not see how that can be possible, because the whole inspection proposition is under the Government control all the time. These inspectors are very carefully supervised in their work. They have their efficiency commissions and all that kind of thing, which makes it certain that the inspection will be efficient.

I am informed from the testimony that the overtime work is now costing $345,275 a year, and that would be the expense that the Government would have to pay if it paid for overtime.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. It is not a question of the amount involved. The amount involved ought not to make any difference. It is the moral side of the question that is under discussion here, and that is the only side that ought to receive consideration.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman inform me if there is any other food industry in the United States that is examined or that has this inspection system for which the Government pays?

Mr. LEVER. Well, the enforcement of the food and drugs act, of course, is paid for by the Government. We have inspectors who go into the markets and get samples and see whether there is adulteration or misbranding. But there is no other Government service just like this meat-inspection service.

Mr. SABATH. This applies to the meat industry of the United States?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Is this amount of $803,960 the entire amount that the Government expends on the meat-inspection service?

Mr. LEVER. No. The original law carries an annual appropriation of $3,000,000.

Mr. SABATH. This is additional to the $3,000,000?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. This is put in here for the purpose of providing additional inspectors, and also for the purpose of increasing the salaries of some of the low-grade inspectors.

Mr. SABATH. And all you desire is that the industry pay that small portion which is being paid in addition to the regular service of those who are obliged to work overtime?

Mr. LEVER. That is all that there is to this proposition.

Mr. LOBECK. It says here—

Total for Bureau of Animal Industry, $5,127,033.

Mr. LEVER. That includes this and other activities of the Bureau of Animal Industry. The total for meat inspection, if this item passes, will be $3,803,960.

Mr. MADDEN. It was $3,000,000 to begin with.

Mr. LEVER. It was $3,000,000 to begin with, and this is an additional appropriation.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, when the meat-inspection law was enacted, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, it was provided that the Government should pay the expense of inspection. We were confronted with this situation: Limited appropriations were made. The appropriations were inadequate to meet the demand, and as a result certain packers—in most instances the large packers—were provided with inspection. The smaller plants throughout the country were not provided with inspection. The suggestion was either that the Government make adequate appropriations or that it permit the packers to pay for the inspection. They objected to coming before Congress every year on bended knees and asking for these small appropriations. It was then suggested that a permanent appropriation be made large enough to meet the expense for all time to come. The chief of the bureau estimated that $1,800,000 would meet the demand. Later he revised the estimate to $2,200,000, and it was suggested that a permanent appropriation be made of $3,000,000, so that that question would never arise, but every packer would be supplied with the inspection. We have met that demand, but the business has so grown that it now requires about $4,000,000. Now, it is suggested that all the packers be treated alike. Each packer is to be provided with inspection on an eight-hour schedule, and if additional service is required or desired it is proposed that the packers are to pay that additional amount, or pay for the overtime. As suggested here, the $400,000 is, of course, a small percentage of $4,000,000. We are simply following the policy of Canada, and following the policy adopted as to other inspections.

Mr. LOBECK. I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman a question. In the report here it says:

There is an apparent increase in this item of $326,760, but, as $27,720 has been transferred to statutory rolls, there is an actual increase of $354,480. This sum will be used for increasing the salaries of 2,932 employees of the meat-inspection service by $120 per annum each and of 11 employees of said service by $240 per annum each.

Why the difference?

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman mean between $120 and $240?

Mr. LOBECK. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Those 11 men are higher-salaried men.

Mr. RUBEY. The others get the benefit of the $120 bonus.

Mr. LEVER. We just give these 11 men $240 and the others get the $120 bonus.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, by this section I judge that the Secretary of Agriculture has the power to determine the wage to be paid. I am glad to see that he has that power, because for several years past I have taken an active interest in it to see that in some way these lay meat inspectors and veterinarians were paid a reasonable wage for their work. Therefore I am glad to vote for this section, for it does look to me like the Secretary of Agriculture has been given the power in this portion of the Agricultural bill to get a reasonable inspection and to pay a reasonable and equitable wage for the meat inspection and that the men may get a living wage for work and service rendered. In the Sixty-fourth Congress I made untiring and persistent efforts to get the Lobeck bill passed, which would classify the wage of the inspectors and veterinarians. The opposition to the bill was very active, and finally, on account of the limited time for discussion in the House, it did not come to a vote and under the rules the Agricultural Committee could not have another day for consideration. During the Sixty-fifth Congress, on account of war legislation no classification bills or scarcely any legislation not known as war legislation has been enacted into law. Therefore I am glad to be present to-day and by my voice and vote favor this legislation, which, I hope, will be of real value to these men, who are and have been rendering valuable and splendid service to the inspection bureau of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak to the amendment for just a moment, because I think it is a very wise amendment, and I believe if you want to keep the inspectors independent of the packing influence this is one of the ways of doing it, because I am of the opinion that nothing would suit the packers better than to have the privilege of providing for the overtime for these inspectors. For that reason I hope the amendment will pass.

Mr. CANNON. I have just come in. What is the amendment?

Mr. LEVER. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] would compel the Government to pay for the overtime proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Then, if I understand it, the provision as reported by the committee appropriates for eight hours' work, for reasons that I have heard assigned here, so that the packers can not tamper with them. But for overtime, which is time and a half, as I understand it, the packers are to pay; so that the Government would pay part and the packers would pay part. It seems to me that there is no sound reason why the packers would not pay all or the Government pay all.

Mr. LEVER. There is this distinction between overtime work and regular work: Overtime work is more largely in the interest of the packers than it is in the interest of the public. The packer has a large accumulation of hogs or cattle on hand, and he wants to get rid of them. He wants to have them butchered, but must have them inspected before and after they are slaughtered. Therefore he works these inspectors overtime. For that reason I think he should bear some of the expense of the benefit we are giving him.

Mr. CANNON. After all is said and done, if it would work harm to pay for eight hours, because it might put the inspector under an unworthy influence, it would work harm to pay for time and a half for over eight hours, so far as I can see.

Mr. GALLAGHER. The idea is to have the packers pay everything or the Government pay everything.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. It ought to be one way or the other.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I have no objection to the packers paying it all, if you want to put it on the packers, but it is a matter of principle.

Mr. LOBECK. The fact is the people have got to pay it finally anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, on January 27 there was an article printed in the Washington Post, written by Mr. Herbert Hoover, which was an interesting discussion of some farmers' problems. In that article he makes this statement:

If the farmers' prices threaten to fall below the level of a fair return, it behooves the country to do some quick, clear thinking.

And he goes on to discuss some problems of marketing of cattle and hogs in connection with the packing industry. The packers are not the only offenders. The men who trade with them, the commission men at the stockyards, often treat the shippers very unfairly.

I want to call the attention of the House to one particular case. A farmer in North Dakota made a shipment of his cattle to St. Paul, to George Hawkinson. The farmer followed up the shipment and reached St. Paul the morning after the cattle had arrived. He called to see Mr. Hawkinson before the market opened, and Mr. Hawkinson told him that he had sold the cattle for 6½ cents a pound. A little later he walked over to the cattle yards to see where the cattle were. He found them in one yard not mixed in with other cattle. Another commission man belonging to the same board or exchange came along and the farmer said, "How much can I buy these cattle for?" He said, "I just sold them for 8 cents a pound." The farmer said, "I guess you are making good money, for I sold them at 6½ cents a pound." "Well," he said, "you know I had to mix them with other cattle to bring them up." The farmer examined them and found every single one in the yard was marked with his brand and there were no other cattle mixed with them. This figured up a loss to him of $2,000 on that one shipment of 130-odd cattle.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. That is just a case of an ordinary crook handling this fellow's stock.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; an ordinary shyster, as my father would say.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. The farmer consigned them to a crook.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Does the gentleman find that condition in his section of the country?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Oh, we run into crooks sometimes down there.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Do you not think that Congress ought to give some attention to this when we are trying to find out why things are costing so much?

Mr. LOBECK. Are not the stockyards of St. Paul under the regulation of the State of Minnesota, giving them the privilege to do business and coming before the legislature every year as to the price they can charge for corn, hay, and feed?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I presume, like other stockyards, it is under regulation by the State, and now it gets some regulation under the license system.

Mr. LOBECK. We had hearings whether the Government should take over the stockyards and run them themselves.

Mr. HAUGEN. They have taken them over to the extent of licensing them.

Mr. LOBECK. I have seen the time when I proposed to sell and my commission man said I could get a better price the next day, but it did not turn out so.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The facts concerning the case I have just been telling about are set forth in a letter from U. L. Burdick, a prominent and successful stockman of Williams County, N. Dak., to the Equity Cooperative Exchange of St. Paul, Minn. This concern is sound financially, with capital of upward of $2,000,000, and is honestly managed. It is owned by farmers—a great many of them—each one owning a small portion of the capital. This concern, having done a successful business at St. Paul and performing there a real service for northwestern stock raisers, has recently opened a branch at the Union Stockyards, Chicago, Ill., under the management of an old and trusted friend of mine, Fred E. Osborne. If the stockmen generally knew about this honest and efficient farmers' agency there would be no trouble, but many of them do not, particularly in the Chicago territory. It seems to me steps should be taken to prevent a return after the war to conditions which obtained in the stockyards prior to the war. I ask for permission to print the letter of Mr. Burdick in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LETTER OF U. L. BURDICK.

WILLISTON, N. DAK., February 5, 1918.

Mr. F. B. WOOD,
Manager Live Stock Department, Equity Cooperative Exchange, South St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the report that I shipped you 130 head of steers last September and that I lost approximately $2,000 on them, I wish to state that this is not true as to the first part of the proposition.

I have never shipped you any cattle at any time. The second part of the proposition is true, and the facts are as follows:

On or about the 1st day of September, 1917, I shipped to South St. Paul 130 head of steers, all branded with U bar on the right shoulder, same being a brand I use in Williams County, N. Dak.

In making up my mind where to ship these cattle, I at once decided to ship them to an old friend of mine—George Hawkinson, of South St. Paul. These steers would average about 900 pounds on the first 75 head and probably 750 pounds, or thereabouts, on the balance.

I arrived at the South St. Paul stockyards at 9.30 a. m. on the day which the cattle were sold, and at once went to the yards of the Hawkinson Commission Co. I arrived there before the general market had opened up, or at least had apparently opened up. When I came I was informed by Mr. Hawkinson that he had sold the cattle—to whom I did not know; that he had sold them at $6.75 for the top end and $6.25 for the poor end. I was, of course, surprised at the sale, but as I had consigned them to him I did not think at the time that I could stop the sale.

I investigated the market and found on that day that the general run of prices for the top end of my bunch was 8 cents. I then investigated to find out where the cattle were, and discovered that Mr. Hawkinson had sold them to Paul Thuet. In company with Peter Knutson, of Williston, N. Dak., I then went to the Thuet yards, and, as he did not know me, I looked over my own cattle and asked him what he would take for them. He said, "I have just sold them to a party in Iowa for 8 cents." I said, "That is pretty good business. I just got $6.75 for the same bunch." He said, "Well, of course, I had to mix them with other cattle to bring the grade up." I examined the bunch and found that every single steer in the pens had the U-bar brand on them. I said, "Mr. Thuet, you know you lie when you say you had to mix the bunch, because you couldn't brand them and have the brands heal up on them within one hour."

I have not calculated to the exact figure just how much I lost on this transaction, but approximately $2,000 on the bunch.

I then discovered that Paul Thuet made a regular business of making rounds of the stockyards early on market days and buying up all the cattle he could buy, taking them over to his pens and reselling them on the same day. I presume, while I don't know, that I am not the only victim of the speculator who operates on the South St. Paul stock market.

I complained of the same to Mr. Hawkinson, but he said to me that he got all the cattle were worth. I asked him why it was, then, that the general price of cattle on that day (which anyone can now look up) for the same class of cattle was approximately 8 cents. "Well," he said, "cattle vary so much. Your cattle were not extra good ones." I replied that they were fat and averaged 900 pounds. "Well," he said, "I did the best I could, and I am sorry that you lost so much money, but if you will ship to me again I will do my best to make a sale next time that will represent the full value of the cattle."

Very truly, yours,

(Signed) U. L. BURDICK.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I also desire to call attention to a plan for correcting the abuses of future selling on the great exchanges prepared by Gen. A. P. Peake, of Valley City, N. Dak. During the war we have not had occasion to give much attention to this subject, because the exchanges have been closed as to option trading in wheat. At the end of this crop year we may face lower prices for wheat, and it behooves the wheat growers and those who represent them to study out or work out some plan to put a stop to gambling in the market places. Gen. Peake, who has made a special study of this subject, believes that any plan adopted should protect both the farmers and the flour millers. He believes that any injury to the flour industry will be reflected back to the wheat growers. He therefore proposes that the flour millers and others legitimately connected with the trade shall be permitted to make contracts for future delivery of grain under conditions which will prevent uneconomic speculation. In order that Members may have the opportunity of examining Gen. Peake's plan, I desire to have permission to print the same in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GEN. PEAKE'S PLAN FOR PREVENTION OF SHORT SELLING OF GRAIN.

Situation: Farm products are now unprotected against short selling of nonexistent quantities by speculators.

Problem: To prevent the selling of contracts for future delivery of nonexistent grain and other farm products without interfering unduly with hedging by warehousemen and grinders, including country and terminal elevators, mills, and packers.

Solution of problem proposed:

First. Provide a form of warehouse receipt signable by the bonded agents of elevators, packers, and mills.

Second. Provide that any sale contract made on any grain or produce exchange or branch office thereof for sale of any farm product for future delivery must be completed by the delivery to the clearing house of such exchange within five days from date of such sale contract of a warehouse receipt showing such grain or produce actually in store, in a warehouse, or terminal or country elevator in charge of a bonded agent.

Third. Provide rules for the conduct of exchange clearing houses which will compel the keeping of such a file and record of warehouse receipts that the gross amount of warehouse receipt covering grain or produce in any warehouse or elevator will be shown by balance each day in so far as that exchange is concerned.

Fourth. Provide that the warehouse receipts contain an agreement for the payment of delivery charges to contract point by outside warehouses and elevators.

Fifth. Provide for inspection of files, records, and warehouses by agent of the Department of Agriculture and for frequent reports to said department, arranging severe penalties for allowing warehouse receipts to remain in exchange clearing houses after grain or produce is shipped beyond the period necessary to deliver grain or produce at the terminal where the contract provides for delivery.

Sixth. Provide penalties for failure to comply with these rules, including the forfeiture of contract, heavy fines, and imprisonment.

Suggestions: To allow mills to continue selling wheat to hedge flour, it might be made allowable for them to have warehouse receipts issued for wheat at the rate of 3½ bushels per barrel of flour.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman, if he will yield, that the transaction such as he has narrated, in my judgment, if it took place in the Chicago Live Stock Exchange and became known, the men who participated in it would be expelled promptly from membership of the exchange, because the whole basis is the personal honesty of the men who operate the live stock exchange in buying and selling cattle, and without it they can not do business very long.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimons consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this is an age when legislators must recognize as they have never recognized before the necessity of doing impartial justice to the man who works for a living, and particularly the man who works in the great industries.

I have the honor to represent a constituency containing 200,000 working men and women, and it is the center of one of the most important industries in the entire world. I represent the voters of that great district, the men who send me here, and in no sense do I hold a brief for the great packers or the packing industries, yet I believe it to be my duty and privilege to see that these industries are both fairly and justly dealt with. The immediate question—overtime and increased compensation for the employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry—has been thoroughly discussed by the Members, and I believe the consensus of opinion is that both the overtime and the increased compensation should be granted, as asked in the bill before the House.

Mr. Chairman, I take it that the committee itself wishes the House not to show any partiality as far as appropriations or assessments are concerned. I would like time to perfect an amendment so that in this part of the bill we may treat all alike. It has been suggested by my colleague [Mr. MADDEN] that he is opposed to the packers paying overtime. I likewise hold the same position. It is not my desire to give the packers an opportunity to put their hands or fingers on the employees in the inspection of meat, where they might influence the opinion and judgment of these men, but if it is the wish of a majority of the Members of this House to so assess the packers for overtime, why not be fair and assess all the people of this country who are using the time of the veterinarians engaged in this important work. The farmer has a sick cow or a sick horse, and I am told that he calls a veterinarian on a Sunday morning; the veterinarian, perhaps after four or five hours, arrives at the farm, attends to the hog or the cow, and maybe stays until 1 o'clock the following morning.

Mr. LEVER. The argument of the gentleman falls for the reason that the veterinarian is in private practice and not a Government employee.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I say this, because I am not as familiar with the work of this bureau as the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, and I bow to any suggestion he offers. But I am informed that the veterinarians employed by the Department of Agriculture from time to time are called upon by the farmers to attend their sick cattle. Am I correctly informed that the farmer has the right to call for veterinarians employed by the Bureau of Animal Industry or Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. That is not my information. I might have to refresh my memory about it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Let me say that it is the custom, at least out in our country, for any farmer having cholera among his hogs to call up the veterinarian as they would a physician to come and visit his family.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. And he is a Government employee?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is for hog cholera, but he is not to practice outside of that.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Of course, I had reference to hog-cholera work.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be correctly informed on that. I have been informed by veterinarians engaged by the bureau that they are called upon by farmers from time to time to attend their herds of cattle or swine or sheep—their sick animals.

Mr. LEVER. I should say that as to their ordinary work as Government employees that may be true, in their hog-cholera work and their tuberculosis work, and things of that kind. That is true, but when they are called upon by some individual to treat a sick animal at night, I imagine they are called upon as individuals and not as Government employees.

Mr. LESHER. The testimony shows that they dare not even do that.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I am reminded by my colleague from Pennsylvania that the testimony shows that they can not even do a private practice.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I know they are not permitted to engage in private practice.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I know that this is the practice, so far as the veterinarian is concerned, connected with the United States Government station at Purdue University. When the foot-and-mouth disease broke out the veterinarians, with all of their assistants, were busy throughout the State of Indiana until the thing was finally allayed. I know that whenever any new disease breaks out among animals the first report is made to that institution and the veterinarians are sent out from there for that purpose—for the purpose of making investigation and report.

Mr. LEVER. They go as Government employees?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the time has been fixed, but the gentleman is a very modest member of the committee and is not going to take up much time, so that if this does not set a precedent I shall not object; but it is with the understanding that at the conclusion of his remarks debate upon the paragraph and amendments shall close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, again the chairman of the committee overwhelms me with his kindness. The point that I want to impress upon the minds of the Members of this House is this: I come from the stockyard district. As I have said, I hold no brief for the packers. As we all know, they are now under investigation by a congressional committee. The other day on the streets of Washington I had my first opportunity to meet two of the most prominent men in this industry. That is an illustration of how little I know of the packers personally; yet the packing industry is in my district and I can not refrain from saying that it seems to be the will of some Members of both branches of Congress whenever they desire to break into public print to attack these large industries in the most reckless and unjustifiable manner.

All that I ask for these industries, as a matter of justice, is that they shall receive fair treatment at the hands of the Members of this House.

Again, I know that the farmers of this country have a few friends in this House; at least my observation has convinced me of that fact. Therefore I suggest that if we are going to assess the packers or any other industry for investigational work, or for labor performed by the Department of Agriculture, such assessment should be spread upon all who receive the same benefit, and that means the farmer as well as the packer. If I am misinformed and the farmers do not have the advantage of the services of veterinarians engaged in this work, then we can not ask the farmer to pay for the services; but, gentlemen, I know that the farmer has the benefit of these services, and if you care to hear me I will go into that at greater length.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, if the amendment such as my colleague proposes were embodied in the bill and the farmers were not called upon to use the services of the veterinarian, they would not have to pay, so there could be no harm in it.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for time to offer this amendment as soon as I can perfect it.

After the fullest investigation and the best consideration I have been able to give this question, I want to say that I am not in favor of either assessing the packer for the overtime of veterinarians, nor am I in favor of assessing the farmer for the services he receives from these governmental employees. I am firmly convinced the Government of the United States has a duty in such matters, and that duty is to pay its own employees in order to retain the fullest control over their actions.

When this question first came up in 1906 President Roosevelt at that time favored payment by the Government for all meat inspection, and he is quoted to this effect in the House hearings of that date on the Chicago stockyards.

I do not believe in any business or industry paying for Government inspection of its own work. Such a practice is wrong in principle, and it would be disastrous in practice. In order to secure undivided allegiance the Government must pay and control its own employees.

With reference to the amendment I propose to introduce, Mr. LEVER has suggested and the Chairman intimates that it is subject to a point of order, and consequently it would be a waste of valuable time for me to attempt to offer same under these circumstances.

Now, I would ask you to bear with me while I discuss the necessity for the increase of pay to the inspectors and veterinarians of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

There are at this time employed by the United States Department of Agriculture approximately 1,700 veterinarians, whose duties are to inspect live stock and to aid live-stock owners and State live-stock sanitary officials in the control and eradication of contagious, infectious, and communicable diseases of animals.

The meat-inspection service, in which bureau veterinarians are employed, consists in the examination of cattle, sheep, swine, and goats from the moment they are received at public stockyards, where they are unloaded from stock cars, through the commission merchants' pens, into the packing houses, where they are slaughtered; thence to the innumerable sections of packing houses, where the meat is prepared in various ways for human consumption. In other words, these servants of the Government inspect and are charged with the responsibility of seeing that only wholesome meat food products enter into commerce for interstate shipment, as well as meats which are consumed within the States, and other meat products which may be exported.

As testimony of the efficiency of the Government meat-inspection service, not one valid complaint has been sustained against the service since the outbreak of the great world war in 1914, notwithstanding that these products, which have been labeled with the stamp of Government approval, have been sent to every corner of the world. From several sources complaints have been received, and upon investigation have been confirmed, of shipments of meat to Army camps from some small plants where Government inspection is not maintained.

This work was inaugurated many years ago, but the principal meat-inspection act under which the work is now being carried out did not become effective until 1906.

A corps of veterinarians are employed in the control and eradication of diseases of live stock, such as hog cholera, tuberculosis, the eradication of the cattle tick, the eradication of scabies of sheep and cattle, the eradication of glanders from horses and several other maladies which live stock may contract.

Twenty years ago the sheep industry of the United States was rather a precarious one on account of the excessive existence of scabies. At that time there was really no true type of sheep in the United States. Sheep developed much like wolves and coyotes; they multiplied, but without any appreciable upbreeding. It was a case of "survival of the fittest." Oregon sheep were long-legged and thin and could be recognized in contrast with Montana sheep. Texas sheep were different from those raised in California, and the sheep from the plains of New Mexico were unlike those from Utah and Idaho. The disease known as scabies, which is caused by a parasite, not visible to the naked eye and which causes scabs to appear upon the hides and also causes the shedding of the wool, existed in practically every State, and not very much attention was paid to it. It was spreading so rapidly that, if no concerted effort had been made to control it, is it not reasonable to suppose that the industry would have been so seriously handicapped that it would have proved entirely unprofitable?

The United States Department of Agriculture took up the question of the controlling of this disease with State live-stock sanitary officials and the sheep owners, experiments were conducted by treating the sheep with disinfectant to kill the bug which was the cause of the trouble. From those experiments evolved a very practical method of freeing the sheep from the disease by a process of dipping them in a solution of lime and sulphur. Dipping vats were constructed on the sheep ranges and at all of the public stockyards, and whenever a band of sheep were found diseased they were prohibited from being shipped through the country unless they were properly disinfected under supervision. This work developed very rapidly because it proved of vital benefit to the sheep owners.

In the course of 10 or 12 years this disease was practically exterminated, and the quarantine under which many of the States had been placed was removed, thus permitting the free traffic anywhere in the United States. Veterinarians were removed from the work to be placed on work of greater emergency at that time, and in consequence the disease began to spread again, and it became necessary, and, in fact, the sheepmen demanded, that the inspectors be returned to the field to direct the eradication work.

Sheep scabies exists to but a moderate degree in the United States to-day, and out of the hazardous business, which was despised by most live-stock men 20 years ago, there has developed one of the most lucrative and interesting branches of the live-stock industry. There have been developed in the United States true types of sheep. Sheepmen are progressing along definite, well-planned lines, and they are not handicapped now by a disease which, but a few years ago, threatened them with bankruptcy, for it is impossible for sheep to thrive that are affected with scabies and other parasitic diseases.

In 1906 the bureau veterinarians were sent into the Southern States to aid the farmers in the boll-weevil stricken areas in the eradication of the cattle tick. It has been proven beyond peradventure that a profitable cattle industry could not be developed where the cattle tick existed. It has been found by the Bureau of Animal Industry that this parasite, which transmits the organism which causes a fatal disease known as Texas fever, could be eradicated by dipping the cattle which harbored the pest. This work has proven one of the most popular and successful pieces of live-stock sanitary work ever undertaken in any part of the world. More than 70 per cent of the original area quarantined on account of the Texas fever has been freed of the tick, and in the freed counties and States there has been developed, and will continue to be developed, a high class of cattle husbandry. Cattle which in 1906 were valued at about $10 per head in the tick-infected area are now worth $40 per head, and the increased valuation is not entirely due to the high price of cattle everywhere, but these animals are worth more because they are in better condition to be used for beef; that is, while the animals are covered with ticks the parasites suck the blood, and in consequence the host always remains in an unthrifty condition, unsuited for beef purposes. This work will be carried on until there are no cattle ticks left in the United States. This one piece of live-stock sanitation is worth at least $50,000,000 in the additional beef that the Nation conserves thereby.

Other veterinarians in the Bureau of Animal Industry are engaged in the eradication of hog cholera, a disease which, a few years ago, was cause of an annual loss to the Nation of $100,000,000. It was discovered by the Bureau of Animal Industry that swine could be immunized against the infection of cholera. This immunization consists of injecting the hogs with a serum obtained from swine which, through treatment, have become highly immunized against the disease. Millions of hogs are treated annually by veterinarians of the bureau, and thereby the losses have been reduced to a very large degree.

Another field in which veterinarians are engaged is in the eradication of tuberculosis. It was absolutely necessary that some agency inaugurate a campaign to check the ravages of this insidious disease. It was spreading from State to State and from herd to herd, as may be judged from the amount of infected animals found in the abattoirs in 1918, where Government inspection was demanded. Out of 35,000,000 swine slaughtered in those establishments, practically 3,500,000 animals were found tubercular to some extent. Likewise with the cattle which were killed, more than 200,000 cattle were found to be infected with tuberculosis in those abattoirs. The owners of live stock from every section of the United States demanded that this work of controlling the eradication of this disease be taken up by the Federal Government. While the campaign has been in existence only a little more than a year, there is sufficient evidence to show that it is making satisfactory progress and is proving to be a very popular work with the farmers.

The Bureau of Animal Industry has in its organization a pathological division, in which veterinarians are engaged in scientific investigations dealing with live-stock diseases. Every year thousands of samples of diseased specimens are forwarded to the bureau, where they are examined microscopically and by animal inoculation, so as to determine the exact nature of the malady.

There are a number of other branches of the live-stock industry to which the veterinarians of the bureau are assigned, such as the supervision of the manufacture by private concerns of hog-cholera serum, virus, and other biological products, such as black-leg vaccine, tetanus antitoxin, tuberculin, mallein, and so forth.

The entrance salary of the veterinarians in the Bureau of Animal Industry is $1,500 per annum, and, of course, with this parsimonious stipend the bureau is having great difficulty in obtaining the services of professionally trained veterinarians. The future opportunities for veterinarians in the Bureau of Animal Industry is anything but attractive to an earnest, competent, and energetic employee. Of course, the lack of appreciation of the Federal Government for this class of employees has caused hundreds of them to resign every year to take up positions which enable them to support their families and bring them up in a true American way. The average veterinarian in the Bureau of Animal Industry does not receive sufficient compensation to properly feed and clothe the average-sized family.

Many of the best-posted live-stock owners and other persons interested in that industry have grave apprehensions as to how their immense industry is going to be properly protected in the future. Veterinary colleges are closing their doors because young men are not attracted to the profession, simply because there is no opportunity for them to gain a respectable livelihood in it. During the past 12 months four veterinary colleges in the United States terminated their careers. These institutions were known as the George Washington Veterinary College, Washington, D. C., the Kansas City Veterinary College, the San Francisco Veterinary College, and the Terre Haute Veterinary College. It is believed that it will be necessary within the next 12 months for other schools to discontinue.

A veterinarian to-day is a trained man who receives an education of the same completeness as a medical man receives at colleges for physicians. The veterinarian is required to be a high-school graduate, and the course in the veterinary college is fixed at four years of nine months each. Can you imagine a vigorous, intelligent, ambitious high-school graduate being attracted to take up the veterinary profession when the best prospect that he has in sight as an employee of the Federal Government is $1,500 per annum? Such men will spurn any such proffer for a lifetime career. They need not complete a high-school course or a grammar-school course to become a butcher, which trade will give them $60 to $90 per week, or a puddler in a steel factory, which will pay them $400 a month, or any other line of industry. The Federal Government, if it does appreciate the services of its employees, should have enough business acumen to see that the efficiency of the whole structure of the Nation will be greatly diminished unless efficiency is recognized and equitable compensations made. Unless the Government is aspiring to inefficiency and failure, it must be willing to at least go part of the way in increasing compensations to its employees as the merchants and manufacturers and every other person, firm, and corporation throughout the length and breadth of the land have done in recognizing the services of the employee.

The veterinarian is the agency upon which the live-stock industry of the Nation, valued at $10,000,000,000, must place its faith to preserve that gigantic business from the ravages of disease. What would it profit this country to go on building up the cattle, swine, and sheep industry if at the foundation of the industry it was rotten with disease? We are coming to an era now where European countries and South American countries will be seeking for breeding cattle, swine, and sheep. If they come to our land and buy these animals and later they are found to be diseased, our reputation and industry along that line are ruined for all time to come; whereas if we sell them the right kind of live stock free from disease, the Nation will build up a reputation throughout the world that will assure for all time a prosperous industry.

The grade lay inspectors are men who through years of practical experience have gained a wide knowledge of the meat industry. They are men who are qualified to serve the United States Government in the capacity of inspectors or as foremen of various branches of the packing-house industry. A great many of this class of employees have left the Government service to fill positions of more lucrative nature with the meat-packing concerns.

Sometime ago I took up with Secretary Houston and also suggested to his assistant, Mr. Harrison, the imperative need of a substantial increase for the lay inspectors and veterinarians in the Bureau of Animal Industry.

I desire to urge upon you the imperative need of increasing the salaries of these employees. I know something of their work. I know that these men report at their post of duty long before 7 each working day, that they work from 9 to 12 hours, and during the busy season often work both Sundays and holidays.

I know that the veterinarians are responsible for all the work in the enforcement of the regulations pertaining to the meat-inspection laws, that they are directly responsible for all work performed by inspectors under their supervision, and that they are responsible for the enforcement of all the sanitary regulations at the packing houses.

I know that the receipts of animals of recent months have been unprecedented.

I know that many have resigned to take up work in commercial fields where the compensation is considerably greater. This has necessitated a greater responsibility on the older employees. I know that a great number of them have not been advanced for several years; and I also know that by comparing the salaries of the Bureau of Animal Industry employees to packing-house employees, that the employees of the packing industries receive from 50 to 100 per cent more than do the Government employees for equal responsibilities.

Safeguarding the health of the consumer of packing-house products is of greatest importance, and I feel that I am extremely conservative in urging that this be appropriated for the fiscal year 1920.

I want to say something now about the comparison between wages paid by the United States Government and wages paid by private concerns. We know what the veterinarians and inspectors of the Bureau of Animal Industry receive, but take, for instance, the cattle and hog butchers; their weekly wages for weeks ending, respectively, October 12, 19, 26, November 2, 9, 16, and 23, amounted to $63, $62, $60, $62, $59, and $62 each. In addition to wages, many of these men received a bonus amounting in some instances from $200 to $300.

The above wage is an average of what is being paid to skilled labor and includes floor men, rumpers, packers, cutters, splitters, hide droppers, and chuck splitters. When you compare their wages with the salary of the Government inspector who has spent the best of his young days in educating and preparing himself for his life's work—namely, the preservation of the health of humanity in the preparation of meat-food products—you will readily see even under normal conditions these inspectors are very unjustly treated.

Let me further submit the following table of wages paid to beef boners for the same weeks suggested heretofore:

Loin rib chuck and plate boners average $50 to $100; $50 to $105.11; $50 to $103; $37 to $70; $47 to $104; $50 to $80; $50 to $120.

Common laborers in the beef cutting, who as a class are men composed of uneducated Mexicans and the like, receive weekly wages from $25 to $38. The same class of laborers in dry salt curing cellars receive from $28 to $40 and in the sweet pickle curing cellars from $30 to $45. Foremen and assistant foremen in these departments, whose duties are not more arduous than inspectors and who at all times have advantages for promotion, receive from $40 to $65 per week, and it can easily be said that the lay inspectors in educational and executive ability measure up to the standards of these foremen.

The award made by Judge Alschuler in the arbitration between the packers and their employees convinces me that the Government employees are the lowest-paid men in the packing industry, and they are the men that the public holds responsible for the condition of every piece of meat and all meat products that leave the packing house.

I am indebted for some of my information with reference to the Bureau of Animal Industry to Dr. S. J. Walkley and Dr. Hess, who have willingly responded to numerous inquiries made by me.

Let me cite a few reasons why men engaged in the work should receive an increase of salary.

A friend of mine in Chicago—a high-grade gentleman named Richard Walsh—has been in the service of the Bureau of Animal Industry for 24 years and is now receiving $90 a month. How can he support and educate a family on this salary?

I know another gentleman who associated himself with the Bureau of Animal Industry some twenty years ago. The salary at that time for a young man was attractive—$60 per month. After being in the service a few years his mother died and left him the family home, worth approximately $2,000 to $3,000. Not long afterwards he married, and God blessed him, as he does most of the people of my district, with a large family. Sickness followed; doctor bills and many other incidental expenses accumulated. It finally became necessary for him to mortgage his little home. Unable to keep up the interest the mortgage was finally foreclosed and he had to sacrifice his place of abode.

After 20 years' faithful and efficient service with the Government he is now receiving the enormous salary of $1,200 a year. I have talked with him a number of times and tried to convince him that he should discontinue his services with the Government and attach his name to some pay roll where his work and efforts would be appreciated, but like many others, after being associated with the Government for a great number of years, he lives in hope the Government will do something substantial for him. These men seem to lose initiative and are fearful because they know nothing but Government work, and fear they may not be able to do as well on the outside.

The gentleman I last spoke of was compelled, on account of the high cost of living, to take his children out of school as they reached the age where State laws would permit them to go to work and send them into factories, thus depriving them of an education so necessary to-day, and practically making impossible an opportunity for them to advance and progress.

Other concrete examples that have been brought to my personal attention:

A gentleman entered the service; lived out in Iowa; owned his own home, worth about $1,800, with a mortgage of $600 he had borrowed to improve the property. After he was in the service a year he had to increase the mortgage $100. The taxes and interest were too much for him, the mortgage was foreclosed in the summer of 1918, and he lost the property. In 1909 he was transferred to another town in Iowa at his own request, figuring that he could do considerably better. He borrowed $100, which he still owes. After he was in this town for a while it was necessary for him to take his daughter, 16 years of age, out of high school and put her to work. The establishment in Iowa closed down and he was transferred to Chicago. His next oldest daughter was attending high school, but when they came on to Chicago he found expenses so high daughter No. 2 was compelled to leave her studies and start to work. Grocery bills approximated $55 to $60, the monthly rent $35. Of course, cheaper homes, rather more reasonable rates for rent could be had, but this gentleman was anxious to rear his family in a respectable neighborhood. It costs this man about $120 a month to live. If sickness occurs, doctor and medicine bills accrue, and it is absolutely impossible for him to keep his head above water.

In the case of a man who entered as meat inspector in 1906 at $1,000. He was 26 years of age when he started. Seven years after his appointment he received an increase of $200. In order to live it was necessary for him to have his wife find employment. They had three children. His wife had to accept a position with hours from 3 p. m. until 12 o'clock midnight. It was necessary for this gentleman to prepare dinner for himself and the children; also to go about 1 o'clock every morning and meet his wife when she returned from her work.

Another letter from a gentleman who has been a meat inspector for four years. He receives $1,200 and is unable to meet his obligations. He had to place his household goods in storage and send his wife and three children to be supported through the generosity of relatives.

Another gentleman has been in the Bureau of Animal Industry for 10 years. He now gets $1,200. He has no children. It takes every dollar he earns to get along. His wife took sick last summer; a doctor's bill resulted, and up to the present time he has been unable to make any payments to the doctor who took care of his wife through her illness.

Another letter from a gentleman who started to work two years ago at a salary of $840; he is now receiving $1,080. He has a family of five children. If it were not for the assistance he receives from his parents and the fact that he engages in outside employment several nights a week he would be unable to keep going. Sickness in the family has incurred obligations to the amount of about $500 in the last two years.

And so on, gentlemen, I could furnish any number of cases such as these from letters I have received; but I do not care to take up your time any longer. The Good Book says, "Feed the hungry and clothe the naked." That suggestion is offered in the spirit of charity. It is not charity that I ask when I request that you take care of the men in this important branch of governmental work; that their families may have an opportunity to receive an education; that they might enjoy some of God's sunshine; that they might have the advantages of a few luxuries; that they get sufficient bread and butter, and occasionally squeeze in a little jam; it is in the spirit of justice I make this request.

Another suggestion: These men suffer many hardships in their line of duty. Working in blood and water in the killing floors, in dry salt and sweet pickle cellars, coolers, and freezers, where temperatures are often 10 degrees below zero. They must be warmly clad for this work, as they are exposed to low and high temperatures which endangers their health. In many cases these men can not afford to buy proper clothing. Boots, shoes, woolens, and leathers have increased over 100 per cent, and the blood, salt, and water conditions wear out the clothing very quickly. Suffering and sickness frequently result on account of their inability to purchase proper clothing. Now, the packers provide men doing this kind of work with suitable clothing, and I think the Government should take this under advisement, and I hope in the near future they will equip men engaged in this capacity with proper raiment that will prevent any ill effects as a result of their work.

Out in Chicago it is often suggested by business men that it is not a question of salary, but a question of getting the right man to fill the job; that they would be willing to pay any price for the right man. If the opportunity is afforded me to meet any who offer this suggestion in the future I am going to refer them to some of the men in the Government service and associated in the Department of Agriculture.

A young man named Harrison, for whom, I am happy to say, a deserved increase was provided, can intelligently and correctly answer more questions than anyone I ever met. Dr. Mohler, connected with this department, a most capable and able gentleman, a master of every detail; Dr. Kiernan, who impresses me as an intellectual giant, and I am advised that he is an authority in his profession. In Chicago, since my election to Congress, I made the acquaintance of a Dr. W. N. Neil, in charge of the Chicago office. All lay inspectors and veterinarians are under his direction; he is interrogated and cross-examined continuously by men engaged by the packers to look after their interests, and the packers pay their representatives from two to three times the salary paid Dr. Neil, who has devoted more than 20 years to the service of the Government. He has won the respect and admiration of all with whom he has come in contact and has received several tempting offers to leave the service. I feel absolutely certain that these gentlemen—and when I speak of them I know this is true of the great majority of men engaged in this bureau, veterinarians and lay inspectors—if they were associated with some large corporation their services would be appreciated, their ability recognized, and their salaries would at least be doubled.

So in conclusion, gentlemen, let me urge upon you the adoption of the amendment I offered in our committee, and while the amount I requested was materially reduced, the sum suggested here, I am pleased to state, is the unanimous report of the committee and it in a small way manifests our appreciation of the great work these men are doing and for the adoption of which I will be thankful and the employees in this department exceedingly grateful.

May I add this poem of T. P. White, an employee of the bureau, which appeared recently. It suggests far more eloquently than I am able to the status of the employees in the Bureau of Animal Industry, commonly referred to as the B. A. I.

YE MORTALS WHO WORKED FOR THE B. A. I.

The day of judgment at last had dawned,
And millions of souls had stretched and yawned;
Had passed in ranks called by trumpet horn,
The souls of sinners and babes unborn.
And amid the few to be glorified
Were the souls of men not yet "classified."

The Master, He judged, and 'twas done well,
Sending souls on to heaven or hell.
With careful thought he reviewed their creeds,
And the record book for acts and deeds.
Till he came to a horde of souls most shy
Of the men who had worked for the B. A. I.

"Recording Angel," the Master said,
"Why are the souls of these many dead
So humble in mien, so dreary, so sad?
Are their records filled with actions bad?"
"These souls," said the Angel, and heaved a sigh,
"On earth were employed by the B. A. I.

"Their records are filled with noble deeds;
They have labored long with many needs;
Through their mortal lives they have done their share
To assist mankind, and have dealt fair,
While they struggled on with wage not high,
As they worked on earth for the B. A. I.

"In the cities' marts where meats were sold,
In slaughterhouses, in the heat and cold,
They applied their skill, under sworn oath bound,
To the end that food be pure and sound,
Thus protecting health when danger drew nigh,
These trusty men of the B. A. I.

"In the field they worked both day and night,
Preaching the gospel of wrong and right
To stock raisers and tillers of soil,
That costly plagues they might learn to foil.
If failure came, once again they'd try,
These faithful men of the B. A. I."

A stroke of the pen canceled all debts,
And He smiled on clerks and "lays" and "vets,"
Who stood near the throne with gaze steadfast,
Hoping a "raise" had come at last.
Then the sentence came, "remain on high,
Ye mortals who worked for the B. A. I."

And let me add:

That all you Congressmen answer "Aye,"
And increase the pay of the B. A. I.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that I would make the point of order against the amendment anyway as not being germane.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman from Illinois might just as well give the gentleman a chance to do something, notwithstanding the point of order which was made against it.

Mr. LEVER. I am ready to receive the gentleman's amendment, but I do not want to stop the reading of the bill until it is prepared.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask that the matter be passed over?

Mr. LEVER. No; I would not want to do that. I think it is an unnecessary waste of time, because it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hesitate to take the time of the committee on anything, but we are making very good progress on this bill. I would ask the gentleman from South Carolina, or any other gentlemen a member of the Committee on Agriculture, if he knows anything about this new order issued forbidding the importation of nursery stock into the United States after June 1 next?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman that if he will permit me to get it from my office I shall be very glad to give him a very full statement of the matter. It came to my office this morning, I think, but I have not yet had time to read it. It is not involved here. The Secretary sent me a very full statement about it.

Mr MANN. I am very much obliged to the gentleman, because I intended to go over to the Horticultural Board and ascertain, as the country is very anxious to know, whether this order is to stand or not. No one defends the form of it, except to say it may be the best they can do. It allows the introduction of a seedling tree and forbids the introduction of a grafted tree, it allows the introduction of a tulip bulb and forbids the introduction of a peony root, and it affects a great many nurserymen and florists throughout the United States disastrously. Now, I do not undertake to say whether the order is justified or not, but somebody ought to be prepared to say they are certain that it is justifiable; and, gentlemen, there will be a roar going up in this country against this order when it takes effect such as we have not heard even about the hog cholera or tuberculosis in cattle, which swept the House off its feet.

Mr. LEVER. As a matter of fact, the roar has already come, as would be seen if the gentleman could see some of the letters I have received.

Mr. MANN. I know the roar has come, but the roar really has not commenced yet, as the order has not taken effect and they can still import until June 1. Now, it is going to be utterly unfair to the business interests involved if they start this thing and then stop it because somebody protests. It may ruin many a man, and the department ought to be very certain of its ground both as to its desirability and its legality and its power to withstand the roar that will come up from Members of Congress.

Mr TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Under what authority is this order issued?

Mr. MANN. I think very likely they have the authority. We have an insecticide law not only prohibiting the importation from foreign countries but prohibiting the transportation of anything from an oak tree to an acorn or a smaller seed from one county to another or from one State to another.

Mr. TOWNER. But for some particular purpose; I was wondering what the particular purpose was that would be assigned in this case.

Mr. MANN. The purpose in this case is not protection of home industries but to prevent the introduction of insects or disease in plants.

Mr. TOWNER. I was going to ask the gentleman in that connection if a wholesale order of this kind could be justified for such a purpose. That was the thought I had in my mind.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the order as it is framed started out with the idea, I think, that it would prohibit the importation of any plants that had any dirt upon them, on the idea that the diseases might be in the dirt, although we permit the introduction of a great many plants, the roots of which are taken right out of the dirt in the native soil. But what I wanted to get at also, if the gentleman's letter covers it, is whether any method is provided by which importations can be made through the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. These prohibited plants?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. I have not read this communication, but I will ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD so we may have it at this point. It is a memoradum prepared by the department.

Mr. MANN. Is it a printed memorandum?

Mr. LEVER. No; it is merely a memorandum, one just sent up.

Mr. MANN. I would like to get it before it goes in the RECORD——

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent to insert it at this point.

Mr. MANN. Because I hate to destroy my eyes by reading the small type in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FEDERAL HORTICULTURAL BOARD,
Washington, D. C.

MEMORANDUM OF INFORMATION CONCERNING QUARANTINE NO. 37, RESTRICTING THE IMPORTATION OF NURSERY STOCK AND OTHER PLANTS AND SEEDS ON AND AFTER JUNE 1, 1919.

A HISTORY OF THE ACTUAL STEPS LEADING UP TO THE ISSUANCE OF THE QUARANTINE.

The need for additional restrictions on the importation of nursery stock and other plants and seeds has been under careful consideration by the board for several years. This need has been emphasized by numerous requests for greater restrictions on plant importations from official bodies representing the State departments of agriculture, the inspection officials of the States, entomological and phytopathological associations, forestry, horticultural, and other associations, etc. As a basis for such additional restrictions, a public hearing was conducted at this department May 28, 1918, and the proposed restrictions were thoroughly discussed with all the interests involved, including, in addition to the above, both importing nurserymen and seedsmen as well as producing nurserymen in this country.

Following this hearing, and at the request of the board, the subject was given careful study in all of its phases by the plant experts of the Department of Agriculture over a period of several months, in the course of which many of the principal nursery and florist establishments of the United States were visited by these experts, and the details of the proposed quarantine were discussed with the persons in charge of these establishments. As a result of this extended inquiry, a tentative draft of proposed regulations was formulated and submitted to the principal nurserymen of the country. A final conference was then held in the office of the chairman of the board October 18, 1918, at which all interested parties were invited to submit criticisms or suggestions either in person or by letter. The quarantine and regulations as finally adopted represent the best judgment of the plant experts of this department after a thorough reconsideration of the entire subject.

In formulating the quarantine and regulations the idea that has been kept constantly in mind is to reduce the danger of introducing injurious insects and plant diseases to the minimum with the least possible disturbance to the interests involved. The classes of nursery stock and other plants and seeds, the commercial entry of which is to be continued, are those represented by importers and other trade interests as being most essential to the horticulture and floriculture of this country under existing conditions.

DISCUSSION OF PRINCIPAL OBJECTIONS IN LETTERS OF PROTEST AGAINST THE QUARANTINE.

Recently numerous letters have reached the department protesting against the enforcement of the quarantine. Practically all of these letters are in response to a printed circular entitled "Protest against the horticultural import prohibition," signed by Henry A. Dreer, of Philadelphia, and sent to nurserymen all over the country. Most of the letters received simply repeat the information contained in Mr. Dreer's circular letter.

In that letter reference is made to what is considered inconsistencies in the regulations in that they permit the entry of rose stocks for propagation and of six varieties of bulbs, while they exclude budded or grafted roses and all bulbs with the exception of the six varieties referred to.

During the period when the quarantine was under discussion the Federal Horticultural Board was urged very strongly by many advisers, including horticultural and forestry associations and State plant inspectors and their organizations, to prohibit entirely the importation of all plants, bulbs, and other classes of nursery stock on the ground that all of them were sources of risk of introducing dangerous insects and plant diseases.

Such dangers do exist. They are greatest in importations from distant or little-known countries, many of which do not maintain any system of inspection. The dangers are proportionally greater among the miscellaneous classes of nursery stock and other plants, including bulbs, which are imported in smaller quantities, but which represent numerous genera and species and bring in a corresponding number of new parasites.

While complete exclusion undoubtedly affords the greatest measure of safety, the governing principle in the quarantine as issued was to limit plant introductions to the classes of plants which were represented by the plant interests concerned in this country as being essential to plant production; in other words, the raw material out of which salable fruit trees, roses, etc., are made. To this were added certain classes of plants, including bulbs and seeds, which could be safeguarded by inspection and disinfection. In the case of bulbs it was realized that a danger existed, and the entry was restricted to classes of bulbs least subject to risk of bringing in new pests and which from their nature could be most readily inspected and certified as clean and, for the most part, originating in countries where the least risk of danger attaches. The excluded bulbs involve the less important and miscellaneous importations coming from widely scattered sources over the world, and the entry of which is attended with much greater risk of introduction of plant diseases or insect pests.

The quarantine makes provision for the entry of these miscellaneous other bulbs and other prohibited articles in limited quantities through the office of foreign seed and plant introduction, this department, for the purpose of keeping the country supplied with new varieties and creations and the necessary breeding or propagating stock, such entry necessarily being safeguarded by the highly developed inspection and quarantine service which has been organized by this department. It is impracticable to give this type of inspection to commercial importations. The cost would be prohibitive, especially under conditions which would require very frequent provision for holding the imported material in quarantine for a period of months or years and the necessity for very high-grade and expert inspectors. Furthermore, inspectors with the training required are not available.

The distinction between rose stocks, on the one hand, and budded or grafted roses on the other, was made with a view to accomplishing two objects: (1) To reduce the number of roses imported, thus reducing the risk involved, and (2) to limit importations largely to such stock as is usually grown in commercial nurseries where special care is exercised to control and eradicate pests. The stocks permitted entry under item 3 of regulation 3 are practically always grown in commercial nurseries, while budded and grafted roses may, immediately upon their arrival in the United States, be shipped broadcast over the country to consumers who pay little or no attention to the eradication of any insects or diseases the plants may carry.

Mr. Dreer's letter also conveys the impression that at the hearing and conference the information given the board was against the advisability of putting the quarantine into effect. On the contrary, at the hearing, which was largely attended and of which a stenographic record was kept, the argument was strongly in favor of the quarantine, and, as indicated in the early part of this statement, the restrictions which have been embodied in this quarantine have been strongly urged and indorsed by many representatives of the nursery trade and unanimously by letters received from officials representing the forest, agricultural, and horticultural interests of the several States.

The argument that this action is unjust to European countries, particularly at this time when they are just released from the restrictions on commerce caused by the war, has its force and is emphasized by the keen sympathy which we all feel, especially for Belgium and France. If, however, there are important dangers to be guarded against and therefore a real need for these restrictions, mere sentiment, however strongly warranted, has no place. In point of fact, with respect to the two countries which have suffered most from the war—France and Belgium—the latter is the only one which is much affected by this quarantine. The plant exports of France are largely fruit-tree stocks, which are still permitted entry. Unfortunately the plant exports of Belgium are largely ornamentals, shipped with earth about the roots, and are therefore the ones which entail greatest risk to the United States; and, furthermore, the inspection service of Belgium is inferior to that of both France and Holland. In the case of Holland the argument from the war standpoint does not apply to the same extent, and, furthermore, the bulb exports of Holland are not materially interfered with. The potted and baled plants, however, from Holland convey the same dangers that they would from Belgium and other foreign countries.

In general, with respect to this action and to European countries, it should be remembered that this quarantine merely places the United States in more close alignment with action long since taken by these countries relative to plant imports from the United States. France, Holland, Germany, and to a less extent Belgium, have long maintained practically complete prohibition of plant imports from the United States.

DISCUSSION OF THE CONDITIONS WHICH HAVE RENDERED SUCH QUARANTINE RESTRICTIONS NECESSARY.

With respect to the actual condition of nursery stock and other plants hitherto received from foreign countries, it is appreciated that the countries which have been most concerned in such exports to the United States have established inspection and certification service, with the result of very greatly reducing the amount of infestation on such exported plants. The conditions in this respect prior to the passage of the plant-quarantine act and the requirement of inspection and certification on the part of foreign countries, and the rigorous holding of these countries up to as high a standard as possible, were deplorable. Brown-tail moth nests and gipsy-moth egg masses and numerous other insect pests in various stages were coming into the United States in quantity, and in one season thousands of such brown-tail moth nests were found in nursery stock, particularly from Holland, Belgium, and France.

The improvement since the establishment of this service, as indicated, has been very great, but it has not by any means eliminated the danger. Of these principal export countries Holland has perhaps as good an inspection service as any, if not the best. The service of France is nearly as good as that of Holland. The service of Belgium is inferior, and the risk from other countries is even greater.

The status as to freedom from insects and diseases of plant imports from Holland probably represents, therefore, the best work that can be expected under existing conditions of inspection and certification. Notwithstanding the supreme effort of the Netherlands Government to safeguard its plant exportations to the United States, a great many injurious insects have been found on stock imported from that country since August, 1912, when the Federal plant-quarantine act became effective. During this period of six years of enforcement of this act and inspection of imported plant materials no less than 148 different species of injurious insects have been collected on nursery stock imported from Holland. Some of these have been found in over 1,100 different shipments of plants. Many have been detected hundreds of times. It is true that many of these are insects which have already become established in the United States, but many others are insects which have not been so established and which are new elements of danger to the horticulture and agriculture of this country. For example, the European tussock moth (Notolophus antiqua) has been found in connection with no less than 67 different shipments of plants from Holland, representing over 16 different kinds of ornamental plants. Similarly, many other injurious leaf-feeding and wood-boring insects have been collected on from one to many different shipments of plants.

This list of 148 different kinds of insects on Holland stock includes comparatively few of the soil-infesting species, because it has not been possible without destruction of the plants to disintegrate and make adequate examination of the soil imported with baled and potted plants. The danger is probably much greater from such insects concealed in the soil than it is from the insects which are found on the aerial portion of the plants. Dr. T. J. Headlee, New Jersey State entomologist, reported at the hearing conducted by this department in May, 1918, on the subject of this quarantine, that his office two years before had made a limited study of the insect fauna in baled plants from Europe, and a short examination of perhaps two dozen baled plants had resulted in the finding of over 20 different species of insects in the soil.

There is risk of entry from foreign countries through the medium of such soil of a vast number of insects, many of which may have no relation to the plants imported but are possibly important enemies of field crops, such as clover, alfalfa, and other forage crops and the grains. For example, there are more than a score of European weevils and root borers known to infest clover, alfalfa, and related plants. Several of these have already been introduced into this country and are now among our most serious forage insect pests. Examples of these are the alfalfa weevil now invading half a dozen States surrounding Utah, its point of introduction, and the clover-leaf weevil now widely distributed throughout the United States. Of the same nature are many insects likely to be brought in with soil which affect common truck crops. Several of these have already been introduced with plants imported with soil, such as the European mole cricket, the European earwig, and various wireworms. The list of such European truck-crop insects possible of introduction with soil is a very long one. There are also many important European fruit insects which can be introduced with soil about the roots of nursery stock. These include apple, pear, and plum weevils, fruit and bud weevils, twig and stem borers, and various leaf-feeding insects which hibernate in the soil.

With respect to plant material which it is necessary to bring in with the soil, it should be borne in mind also that no system of effective disinfection of the soil about such plants without destroying the plants is known.

The risk from importations from Oriental countries, such as China and Japan, and other quarters of the world where the insect enemies and diseases of plants have been very meagerly studied, is illustrated by the establishment in this country from such sources of many of our most important injurious insect pests and plant diseases. Few of these were known prior to their appearance in this country, and therefore could not specifically have been looked out for and guarded against. Among such introduced insects are the San Jose scale, the citrus white fly, the oriental peach moth, and the Japanese beetle. The peach moth and the Japanese beetle, furthermore, illustrate insects which it is apparently impossible to kill by any practicable fumigation in their hibernating condition.

The list of insects introduced from such little-explored countries is already very large, and the new pests constantly being intercepted on such stock now coming in represent a constant and very serious menace to this country. A recent illustration of this state of affairs came in last month's report of Mr. E. M. Ehrhorn, a collaborator of the board and chief of the division of plant inspection of the Board of Commissioners of Agriculture and Forestry of Hawaii. Mr. Ehrhorn reports that in December, 1918, he made a thorough examination of two small pots of a dwarf Chinese arbor vitæ (Thuya orientalis) offered for entry at Honolulu and took from the soil about the roots of these plants no less than 122 grubs of a curculionid beetle, a near relative of such injurious insects as the alfalfa weevil, plum and apple curculio, etc.

The danger of introducing plant diseases is just as great if not greater than that of introducing new insect pests, and with respect to such diseases inspection is a safeguard of no importance. Very often these diseases are not discoverable by inspection, or may develop to a visible stage only after a period of months or years after the plants have been imported. Notable examples of such diseases received from the Orient are the chestnut blight and citrus canker from Japan and China. With respect to the risk of introduction of dangerous diseases from Europe, it is significant that of the three serious forest diseases that have been imported into this country in recent years, two of them, the white-pine blister rust and the European poplar canker, have come from Europe, where both these diseases are well known, and in spite of the protection of the European inspection service.

A manual describing the dangerous insects likely to be introduced into the United States has recently been published by the Department of Agriculture. It was designed for the information of Federal and State inspectors, and lists and describes over 3,000 distinct insect pests. Probably half of these are Old World insects injurious to forest and shade trees, and the balance insects injurious to fruit and ornamental trees and to the various farm and garden crops. A similar manual is in preparation on the fungous diseases on plants likely to be introduced into the United States.

LOSSES OCCASIONED BY INTRODUCED PESTS.

In this discussion the actual losses now being suffered from plant enemies, insects and disease, which have been introduced from foreign sources have not been considered. These losses, occasioned by insect pests to agriculture in this country, have been carefully worked out by experts to cover both the actual damage of these pests to the crops concerned and also the cost of the control operations. This is not the place for an extended discussion, but a few illustrations may be given.

Typical examples of insect pests introduced with nursery stock or other plant material are the San Jose scale, the oriental peach moth, and the Japanese beetle. The San Jose scale has been in this country for certainly 40 and perhaps 50 years. It became widespread throughout the United States in the late nineties, and at the present time there is practically not a commercial deciduous orchard in the United States that it is not necessary to spray at least once annually to control this pest. The expenditures for apparatus and spraying alone in the United States amount to approximately $10,000,000 annually. In addition to this are the losses which the insect causes in spite of this control treatment, and they are very large, especially in small orchards and household plantings, where spraying is not always practiced. This insect alone undoubtedly has cost this country during these years upward of $100,000,000.

The oriental peach moth, which gained entry in 1912 with imported ornamental cherry trees from Japan, has just begun its spread and depredations. It affects practically all deciduous fruits, and bids fair to be a much more destructive pest in the long run than the San Jose scale.

The Japanese beetle, brought in about the same time as the peach moth, has already obtained such firm foothold that in view of its habits and powers of prolonged flight it is probably incapable of extermination, and will no doubt ultimately overspread the United States. It attacks not only practically all fruits but also many garden vegetables and corn. The amount of damage which it will ultimately cause to American agriculture is undoubtedly tremendous. It is worthy of note that this beetle, in the opinion of the experts of this department and of the State of New Jersey who have investigated the matter, was brought in by the Dreer Nursery with importations of iris from Japan. The insect first appeared in the heart of the Dreer Nurseries, and has spread from this center over an area of approximately 25,000 acres, involving four townships in New Jersey, opposite Philadelphia.

The annual cost to this country of the San Jose scale and the probable ultimate annual cost of these other two recently introduced oriental pests, would probably pay for the total importations since the foundation of this Republic of ornamental, nursery, and florist stock. The declared value of the importation of such stock for the year 1914 was only $3,606,808. It should be understood that the plant stocks still permitted entry represent much of this value.

These insects are mere examples of a vast horde of introduced insect pests. Upward of 100 different imported injurious insects to agriculture and forestry have been thus introduced, and in addition to these, hundreds of other minor insect pests. The total annual loss occasioned by these introduced insect pests to our national forest and farm crops, etc., from careful estimates which have been made, very much exceeds a million dollars a day—in other words, approximately $500,000,000 a year.

It is true that many of these foreign insect pests have come in independently of nursery stock, as, for example, the Hessian fly, the pink bollworm of cotton, and European corn borer. Nevertheless, the bulk of the introductions have been with living plant material of all sorts.

Losses correspondingly large are chargeable to introduced plant diseases. Nursery stock and other plant importations are responsible for such important diseases as the chestnut blight, which has already destroyed the chestnut forests over much of eastern United States, and threatens the existence of the entire chestnut growth of the country, the white-pine blister rust, a disease already widespread in the eastern white-pine area, and the citrus canker recently introduced from Japan and Asia and threatening the very existence of much of the American citrus development of Florida and the Gulf coast. The attempt in Florida and elsewhere in the United States to eliminate this disease has necessitated the burning of nurseries and hundreds of established orchards. Giant oil torches have been devised which will lick up and utterly consume large fruiting trees in a few minutes, and the entire orchards in a few days. This, of course, means the destruction of property which represents thousands of dollars of expenditure and years of labor. Furthermore, Congress has appropriated and is still appropriating considerable sums to aid in the control of these pests.

INADEQUACY OF SPECIAL QUARANTINES.

To prevent the entry of like plant pests quarantines and restrictions have been applied under the plant quarantine act to all important dangers as they appear, and in this piecemeal fashion some 20 restrictive orders or quarantines are now in force against foreign plants and plant products. Such piecemeal action can only be taken, however, when the enemy is known, and gives no security against such unknown or unanticipated enemies as the San Jose scale, the oriental peach moth, and the alfalfa weevil.

NECESSITY OF GENERAL QUARANTINE.

It certainly would seem to be good business and practical common sense to stop as far as possible such dangerous introductions to the agriculture and horticulture of this country. This is the primary object of the action taken in quarantine No. 37. The experts of this department are convinced that it will be possible very promptly for the producers of this country to supply practically all the needs for plants prohibited by this quarantine, and this opinion has been indorsed by leading nurserymen and florists.

After having studied this subject for many years, and after giving earnest consideration and practical trial to the possible alternatives of inspection and disinfection of plant imports, the department and the country at large have reached the conclusion that the only possible solution of this problem, which is constantly becoming more serious with the widening of commerce, is in the policy of practical exclusion of all stock not absolutely essential to the horticultural and floricultural needs of the United States. The conclusion is absolutely a forced one that no other system will give adequate protection to the great fruit and agricultural interests of the country, and these interests are so paramount as to fully warrant the restriction prescribed at this time in quarantine No. 37.

The main lines of this quarantine are undoubtedly justified, but it is entirely proper at any time for the interests affected to make any suggestion of modification which may appeal to such interests as being warranted to meet essential needs and which can be granted without opening up dangers which quarantine No. 37 is designed to guard against. Correspondingly, should it develop that the entry of any of the plants or classes of plants now permitted should be accompanied with dangers which can not be otherwise safeguarded, on such showing the restrictions must necessarily be extended to cover such plants. In this connection the department now has prepared an amendment to regulation 3, permitting the use of sand, soil, or earth in packing the bulbs specified in item No. 1 of that regulation, when such sand, soil, or earth has been previously sterilized in accordance with methods prescribed by the Federal Horticultural Board.

C. L. MALATT,
Chairman of Board.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For conducting such investigations of the nature and means of communication of the disease of citrus trees, known as citrus canker, and for applying such methods of eradication or control of the disease as in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture may be necessary, including the payment of such expenses and the employment of such persons and means, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and cooperation with such authorities of the States concerned, organizations of growers, or individuals, as he may deem necessary to accomplish such purposes, $196,320, and, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, no expenditures shall be made for these purposes until a sum or sums at least equal to such expenditures shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by State, county, or local authorities, or by individuals or organizations for the accomplishment of such purposes: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the cost or value of trees or other property injured or destroyed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so to obtain information from the committee as to the condition of the citrus canker and its ravages throughout the South. As I recall, a year ago when this item was under consideration the gentleman stated that this pest was under control and it would be but a short time when there would be no further need of this appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. In a measure that is very true. The citrus canker has been largely eliminated from Florida and a number of the other Southern States. They have, however, a rather serious outbreak in the Rio Grande Valley in Texas. The work being done now in Florida and other States is largely a matter of investigating and inspecting certain nursery stock to see if there is any left. It will take a few years before the work is complete. Dr. Kellerman, testifying before the committee, stated that two years would probably complete this work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of this $196,000 appropriation how much is contemplated to be used in Florida and the adjoining States, where the pest was most virulent a few years ago?

Mr. LEVER. My recollection is that it is a very small percentage.

Mr. STAFFORD. So that the greater percentage of this appropriation is to be placed for emergency use in the Rio Grande Valley?

Mr. LEVER. In real eradication work.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will observe there is a decrease of $50,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

For soil-bacteriology and plant-nutrition investigations, including the testing of samples, procured in the open market, of cultures for inoculating legumes, and if any such samples are found to be impure, nonviable, or misbranded, the results of the tests may be published, together with the names of the manufacturers and of the persons by whom the cultures were offered for sale, $39,060.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, the civilized world has just passed the supreme crisis in its history. Civilization and its right to exist has been put to its bitterest test. War has been waged between two antagonistic and irreconcilable systems of government—on the one hand a government of brute force administered by the few, and on the other government by designated representatives of the masses. Out of this clash of contending systems may we hope that lasting good to all the world may flow.

In this great conflict in which right and justice contended successfully and victoriously against all the minions of autocracy and infamy the United States played no small part. A more magnificent army of brave and sturdy young men never went to battle with a sublimer courage nor in a juster cause. All honor to them for the part they have played. Nothing that we can do will be too good for them when they return nor in the years that are to follow. Nothing that we can do for them will be more gladly received by them nor do them and their posterity as much and lasting good as to preserve for them the best government ever devised by statesmen.

These intrepid young men went forth to fight for this Government and its rights, not for some other form of government or its rights. They went forward with zeal and glee to fight for this Republic and its great institutions. We should make it our highest hope and our first ambition to preserve for them when they return a representative Republic and not a conglomerate mass of socialism and all the other isms.

The great work of this war has been finished, and let us hope that in finishing this task we have put war so far in the future that none now living will ever again be called from the wonderful arts of peace by the dreaded note of martial music.

With this task now completed, we turn to the tragic days of reconstruction. I say "tragic" because I think they are the most momentous days that this Republic has faced since the curtain rose on American history. The coming months are freighted with more opportunity for evil than any ever faced, not excepting those following the great War between the States, when so many foolish and unnecessary things were done by people in the atmosphere of passion and prejudice.

I fear that the trend of the times is a sinister portent for the preservation of the Government that our soldiers fought to continue. Instead of the established way of curing evils that grow up in industry, by legislating to correct those evils, from many quarters the only suggestion that comes is for the Government to take over, own, and operate the industry—and every time some sick and tottering makeshift of an industry gets into the deep waters of real affairs it comes running to the Government, crying "Take me ere I perish."

When the Federal Trade Commission had a short time ago conducted an investigation into the packing industry of the country and found that evils existed—and I do not doubt there are many that should be corrected—they did not come to Congress with a recommendation of a program of legislation to correct these evils and divorce the packing industry from some of the many lines they have taken up, which the commission reports is not just and right to the public, but they came with a single recommendation that the Government take over and operate the allied lines of the packing industry.

Then comes the assertion that the telephones and telegraphs are not performing the functions for which they were intended and that evils have grown up in their operation, which I believe is correct. Does a recommendation come from the Postmaster General, who now has charge of the telegraphs and telephones under the war power, of a program of legislation to correct these evils and force the telegraphs and telephones to well serve the people and the Government? No; but the single recommendation that the Government take over, own, and operate the telegraph and telephone lines. What do we find in connection with the telegraph and telephone lines? Complaint from every portion of this land comes of the poorer service and a higher rate. I want to say that I am in favor of restoring the telegraphs and telephones to private control, under Government regulation, at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Chairman, the greatest problem that we face to-day is the railroad question. The question is, Shall we keep the railroads or with proper legislation turn them back to private control? I am not now nor have I ever been in favor of Government ownership of railroads, and nothing that has happened in the recent past in Government operation has caused me to lessen my opposition to Government ownership of railroads, but has intensified that opposition. I here and now make the broad assertion and defy successful contradiction that Government ownership in practical results has been a dismal failure the world over. Everywhere it has brought higher rates, more unsatisfactory service, and a lower wage to labor. I am within the facts when I say that every country in Europe except England has now or has had in the past some form of Government ownership of railroads, and I am further within the facts when I say that statistics show beyond a doubt that in the whole of Europe it costs as much to haul a ton of freight 1 mile as it does to haul a ton of freight 2 miles in the United States, with a poorer and more unsatisfactory service, both for freight and passengers.

Take Prussia, where Government ownership is at its best, where it is operated under the best conditions anywhere in the world, the haul on the same commodity is just about twice as much as it is in the United States. These conditions exist in Europe, where the railroads are standardized, and where the country is fully developed—where all the railroads that are needed or wanted have already been built and are in operation. How much more burdensome and expensive would Government ownership be in a country like ours, where so much of our country is practically undeveloped, and where people are crying for the expenditure of enormous sums to extend existing lines and to build new roads that are necessary for the development of virgin territory? How much higher would freight and passenger fares mount here, when the Government can not now run the roads without an enormous deficit, even though the rates have been increased to an unheard-of extent? Private initiative and the hope of ultimate profits only will cause the hazard of new roads into new and undeveloped territory. Individuals always operate industry more economically than government.

What magic has been wrought anywhere at any time with Government ownership of anything that would cause this wild shriek of the centralizationist in favor of plunging this country into this maze of destruction to the fundamental principles of this Republic? I make the assertion here and now that under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution the Government has all the regulatory power over the instrumentalities of interstate transportation that it would have under Government ownership. If the Government should encumber itself with the ownership and operation of all the railroads, it would involve itself in political confusion and corruption unspeakable, which alone would offset any possible advantage suggested by the disordered mind of the wildest theorist. Government ownership has been the football of politics everywhere. The man who thinks for a moment that Government ownership and operation will take the railroads out of politics is indeed a shortsighted man. If we had Government ownership of railroads there would be more political logrolling by Members of Congress and influential organizations to get new roads built, existing lines extended, and ornate depots built in ambitious towns than there has ever been with the rivers and harbors or with public buildings, with all the reported stench of "pork barrel."

Gentlemen talk of Government ownership lightly and seem to think that it would be an easy transition from private ownership and control to Government ownership and operation. They seem to forget that at one fell swoop they would add more than $20,000,000,000 to our national debt. On December 13, 1916, the latest date for which the Interstate Commerce Commission has complete figures, the total outstanding capitalization of all the railroads in the United States amounted to $20,679,350,501, of which $8,958,815,801 was stock and $11,720,534,690 was bonds. There are in the United States to-day 503,833 stockholders, and the Interstate Commerce Commission reports that they do not have a definite number of bondholders, but there are probably as many bondholders as stockholders.

Do you think that it is a small question when we start out to try to deal with these billions worth of property and with a million stock and bond holders of this country? It matters not whether the stock and bonds which they hold represent value or not, at least all the small stock and bond holders have paid value for their holdings. You would also by this one stroke add 2,000,000 employees to the Government, which would again add to the politics of the situation. The politicians would at that time be torn between two contending factions—the public on the one hand demanding better service and a lower rate, with 2,000,000 employees on the other hand demanding increased wages. I believe that every laboring man should have a wage that is a living wage, provided he earns it. I think that wages in many lines, and especially in the railroad service, have been too low in the past; some of them have probably been high enough. It is not because I want to defeat the ends of labor, whereby a man may receive a wage that he can support himself and his family decently, that I oppose Government ownership of railroads, but I believe that a great many employees of the railroad companies have been misled into supporting Government ownership of railroads on the one ground only, and that is that under the recent Government operation they have received a higher wage than they did in the past. Does labor want to go on under a system where merit commands promotion and where the humblest man may aspire to the highest place in the service, or does he want the good jobs to be handed around as political plums to some one because he supported some particular man or some political party?

In the United States under private control, even before the recent increase in wages to the employees, the employees of railroads received the best wages and had the best hours of labor of any class of railway employees on earth; but with the Government owning the railroads, with 2,000,000 men on one side demanding higher pay, with the other millions of Americans on the other side demanding better and cheaper service—does the railroad employee believe that he would be able to command higher wages when the organized taxpayers of the country felt the tremendous burden of increased rates that always goes with Government ownership and operation of railroads?

Talk of taking railroads out of politics by Government ownership! Gentlemen have only to refer to the history of countries that have tried it. In some of the countries that have Government ownership of railroads the politics of the situation has become so bad that every person high or low employed by a railroad has been denied the right to vote for any member of the legislative branch of the government. It would build up here at Washington a bureau government the like of which has never been seen in the world, and no one who has read history with any degree of understanding will deny that a government by bureau is the worst and meanest autocracy upon the earth.

Ah, gentlemen, shall we send forth our gallant young men to fight and die to destroy autocracy and tyranny in a foreign land, and at the same time allow to be built up in our own land another kind of autocracy? In this hour of reconstruction and hysteria we had better go slow in throwing off the tried and tested and taking on the new and untried. Every consideration of the public welfare, it seems to me, argues against government going into any more business than it is now in. It is the province of government to govern business where there is need, not go into business. If the American people are ready for higher taxes, higher, more expensive, and more unsatisfactory service, they are ready for full Government ownership and operation of industry.

If the cotton farmers of the South want higher rates on cotton shipments, which will be taken from the price of cotton, and hence a lower price, they are ready for Government ownership of railroads. If they want a system under which the service will be poorer, as is the case in all countries that have had Government ownership and operation, then they are ready for Government ownership. I do not believe they are ready for this or want it.

Everyone knows who is not blind to the facts that we have race feeling in some sections of the country, where whites and blacks are not now and never will be on an equal social plane. Do the people of these sections want the separate coach law abolished and whites and blacks made to ride in the same cars? I tell you frankly, this is what will happen, as Congress will never pass a law nor uphold one forcing whites and blacks to ride in separate coaches. This matter alone would add fire and action to this question that we are all seeking to keep from flaming into destruction.

Is it possible that government is so impotent that it can not deal in a legislative way with the great problems of industry, or will the statesmen of this hour acknowledge their inability to cope with the situation and surrender to this form of bureau autocracy that is against the genius of our Republic and its institutions and which will, if adopted, ultimately destroy our form of government?

Government ownership of railroads would destroy every sort of competition in facilities and service, and no one who knows the situation will argue but that the conveniences to the public in travel are brought about by the competition in service and facilities.

Under private ownership we have built up the greatest and most efficient and extensive railroad system in the world. In America we have, by the latest official report, 252,029 miles of railroad. The next country approaching this in number of miles of railroad has about one-sixth as many miles of railroad as the United States. There are only seven countries in the world that have more miles of railroad than the State of Texas. Do you think that under Government ownership, with all of its attendant ills, we would to-day have the great system that we have? I warn the people of the undeveloped sections that they had better think twice before they embrace this Government-ownership theory. All the money that could be raised would not be enough to make the improvements wanted in the developed sections where they have enough representation here to outvote the sparsely settled sections. I here put in the RECORD the number of miles of railroad in the leading countries of the world:

Number of miles of railroad in the leading countries of the world.

During the next two years the opponents of these doctrines must be vigilant, as there is going to be conducted a campaign for Government ownership the like of which this country has seen few times in the past. I know not what course others may take, but as for me I intend to resist with all the force I possess any attempt to commit the party of which I am a member to this destructitve and socialistic heresy.

I thought when we passed the railroad-control act that the railroads should be held a reasonable time after the war for good reasons, and the principal of these was that whatever remedial legislation was desired should be passed. The act provides 21 months after the formal ratification of peace. I thought then, and think yet, that this period was long enough, and I sincerely hope that the necessary legislation may be passed and that they may be turned back to private control at even an earlier date. I therefore do not favor the recommendation of the Director General of Railroads to extend the Government operation for five years after peace is declared, for I know if Government control is extended for five more years that it means permanent Government ownership and operation. Millions of money must be spent upon the railroads within the coming five years, and I know that with all of these millions of Government money in the railroads that we will be so enmeshed in Government operation and control financially that we can never get out.

The retiring Director General of Railroads says that he wants this five-year extension of Government control in order to take the question out of politics, yet a five-year control would place it beyond two more presidential elections. The incoming Director General of Railroads says that he wants a five-year extension of Government control so that the question may be fully discussed in the political campaigns that are to come. The same as I am against a five-year extension of Government control because I know that the question is to be unsettled and in the politics of the country for five more years, I am also against the recommendation of the railroad executives that a secretary of transportation be named as a member of the Cabinet, and as others argue the railroad executives say they want to take the question out of politics, yet they would name a Cabinet officer secretary of transportation as the supervisor of railroad operations in this country, whose office would change with each changing administration and would plunge the question into politics and keep it there continuously.

Much has also been said about regional control. I have not yet heard a plan announced for regional control and operation of railroads that I believe is feasible. If we have regional operation of railroads we must do one of three things, in my opinion. We must first have one control and one ownership in the region which would be necessary if we are to have a region, in order that poor roads and rich roads alike may survive; for under one single system the profit or loss would be spread out over the whole system; or, second, in this region rates must be set high enough, if there are to be separate systems, that the poor road can get enough money to maintain itself, which rate would allow the rich road to make more than would be just and fair, and the only way that this could be equalized would be to tax out of the rich road above a certain percentage of its earnings the remainder of its earnings; or, third, a rate must be set in that region on all railroads, considering the rich and the poor road, which would be presumably just and reasonable, but under which the rich road would make money and the poor road would lose money, and that the surplus of the rich road would be taken and applied to the deficit of the poor road.

These are the only three ways that I can understand or that I have heard advocated that a region be adopted and operated, and I can not subscribe to either. Instead of destroying the State commissions, as some would advocate, they should be used for all of the valuable information that they may possess and allowed to exercise their proper functions, and in this way make the State commissions the directors for the State regions. I quite agree, therefore, with the recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission that a better understanding should be brought about between the State and Interstate Commissions. They are both great instrumentalities for good, and instead of the antagonism that has heretofore existed between them they should work in the fullest harmony. I believe further that when the Interstate Commission is considering a case that affects a railroad that enters a State that the commissions of those States should be officially notified and allowed to appear either in person or by representative.

Mr. Chairman, I can see nothing in the present situation that make it any supertask as to turning the railroads back to private control, and I fear that the idea that is so prevalent that some radical changes must be made and a maze of new law enacted will cause the advocacy and probable passage of wild and needless legislation. There are some things that I am definite should be done and some that should be given our best consideration, which at this time I am not sure as to the wisdom. When I say that I think private control and ownership is much preferable to Government ownership and control, I do not mean to justify many acts of railroad management for many things done in the past, nor acquit them of the injustices that they have practiced toward the public. A railroad wrecker is a commercial highwayman and should be dealt with as any other robber. He should have the extreme penalty of an extreme law.

Much complaint has come from the railroads that they have been unable to raise money by sale of their securities to make needed improvements. This lack of confidence of the investing public in railway stocks and bonds has been the fault of the railroad owners themselves. In the past they have issued and sold securities based on nothing but wind and water that represented nothing in the hands of innocent purchasers but hope, and that has usually been a vanishing hope.

In 1914 I introduced a bill to give the Interstate Commerce Commission control over the issue of securities of railroads, which bill passed the House almost unanimously but never got through the Senate. I still advocate the measure as one of the vital things that should be done before the railroads are turned back to private control. I believe that before the railroads should be allowed to issue any additional securities, that they should come before the Interstate Commerce Commission, present their full case, and be forced to justify the issuance of these securities; lay before the Interstate Commerce Commission what they intended to do with the money and receive the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission of the issue before they are allowed to put them upon the market.

After these securities have been put upon the market and sold, the railroads should then, at the call of the Interstate Commerce Commission, be compelled to go in and show that they spent the money for the purposes for which they asked that the issue be made. I believe that it should be made so that railroad securities in this country should represent value the same as any other sort of security. The railroad companies should have no secrets from the public; therefore their books and papers, letters, files, and all should be open to the inspection of the accredited representatives of the Government. When the railroads make an application to the Interstate Commerce Commission under this system for approval of an issue of securities, the different State commissions, through which the railroad runs, should be notified of the application and of the hearing, and be allowed to appear in person or by designated representatives to present the facts as they get them from their supervision of the railroads in their State. And while I am upon this point I desire to say that power should be given so that there may be a complete and a definite understanding between the Interstate Commerce Commission and the different State commissions. In other words, I would adopt the recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is as follows:

That, without abdication of any Federal authority to finally control questions affecting interstate and foreign commerce, the commission be authorized to cooperate with State commissions in efforts to reconcile upon a single record, the conflicts between the State and the interstate rates.

There should be a better unification of service and especially of terminal facilities. The railroads should be allowed or should be forced to have common terminals, operated so that there will be no discrimination between roads. There should also be a unification of ticket offices, which would, indeed, effect a saving. I also believe that under the strict supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission that some forms of pooling of traffic and equipment should be allowed.

Furthermore, I think that under proper supervision freight should be routed over the shortest or the least-congested lines, to the end that it will reach its destination in the shortest time and hence in the least expensive way. Then, I think that the question should be taken up and well considered as to giving the same body that controls the rates the power of control over wages. This is a question upon which I express no definite belief at this time, but one that I think within the 21 months that we have for Government operation should be considered. Federal incorporation is advocated from many quarters. This is a question that should be taken up and given the fullest consideration. However, I at this time express doubt as to its wisdom or as to the country being ready to receive it.

There should be some way devised in railroad operation under which there would be a better understanding between employer and employee. It should no longer be that each should think that the other is his enemy. I sometimes think that probably the man who gets promoted to one of the higher positions forgets that the fellow down in the ranks from which he came is the same kind of a fellow that he was when he was also down in the ranks.

Mr. Chairman, the railroad question is only one of the many seriously important ones that will come before the Congress for consideration. None are so tremendous that they can not be solved if the statesmen of this day will, without fear, speak their minds and vote their convictions. This I intend to do. I know if I am right that my people will sustain me. I have supreme confidence in the fairness and intelligence of the American public, and I would warn the politician of this time that the great heart of America is sound and will stand for no attempt at deception. We have a great opportunity and a great work to do. Let us put our hand to the plow and not look backward until this labor is done.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in this Government and its institutions. On my desk and in my room at my hotel and also on my desk at home, down on the farm in Texas, I keep a copy of the Constitution. When I read it I many times think that the men who wrote must have been inspired by the One who notes even the sparrow's fall and knows all things. We should wait long before we do anything that would change the fundamentals of the Republic. Next to my religion, I believe in my Government, and if I should ever attempt knowingly and purposely to strike at its foundation, I hope that my best arm may fall useless to my side and that my tongue may speak no more.

Give us men at this tragic hour with strong hearts and true; men who are willing to sacrifice; men who are willing to lay political ambition on the altar of right and justice; men who will use their God-given talents to a fearless solution of these mighty problems and to the preservation of the best and freest Government ever devised by the wisdom of statesmen or wrought in the blood of heroes.

For the information of Members, I here insert in the RECORD the bill as introduced by me for the control of the issuance of securities by common carriers and which passed the House in June, 1914:

SEC. 20a. That from and after the passage hereof it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the act to regulate commerce, as amended, to issue any capital stock or certificate of stock or any bond or other evidence of interest in or indebtedness of the carrier (hereinafter collectively termed "securities"), or to assume any obligation or liability as lessor of another carrier, or as lessee, guarantor, surety, or otherwise in respect of the securities of any other person, natural or artificial, if connected with or relating to that part of the business of such carrier governed by the act to regulate commerce as amended, even though permitted by the authority creating the carrier corporation—

(a) unless it be for some purpose within its corporate powers and in the public interest, necessary or appropriate to the proper performance of its service for the public, and not intending to impair the financial ability of the carrier to discharge its duty to the public; and

(b) unless and until, and then only to the extent that, upon application by the carrier, and after investigation by the commission of the purposes and uses of the issue and the proceeds thereof, such issue is approved by order of the commission as reasonably necessary or appropriate for the purposes stated.

"Each such application shall be made in such form as the commission may from time to time determine and prescribe, and shall set forth such matters as the commission may require, including:

"First. (a) The total amount of proposed issue, and how authorized by or on behalf of the carrier;

"(b) The number and amount of all of its securities outstanding at any time prior to the date of such application, the amount thereof retired prior to said date, the amount thereof then undisposed of, and whether such amount is held in the treasury of the corporation as a free asset or pledged, and, if pledged, the terms and conditions of such pledge;

"(c) The number and amount of securities then to be issued, and whether to be sold, pledged, or held in the treasury of the corporation as a free asset, or otherwise disposed of or applied, as the case may be, specifying number and amount in each case; if any such securities are to be sold, the terms and conditions of sale; if any part of the consideration to be received therefor is other than money, an accurate and detailed description of such consideration; if any such securities are to be pledged, the terms and conditions of pledge; or if other disposition or application is to be made, a full and detailed explanation thereof;

"(d) The number and amount of its securities so authorized, but not then to be issued;

"(e) If the issue is of shares of stock, the number thereof, the face or par value thereof, if any, specifying whether common or preferred, and the number and kinds of then outstanding shares previously issued.

"Second. The preferences or privileges granted to the holders of any such securities; the dates of maturity, rates of interest, or fixed dividend, whether cumulative or not, and any conversion rights granted to the holders thereof, and the price, if any, at which any such securities may be retired or redeemed.

"Third. The purposes to which the proceeds of the issue are to be devoted, in such detail as the commission may require.

"Fourth. In case of proposed assumption of any obligation or liability in respect of the securities of any other person, natural or artificial, like showing shall be made as to the financial condition of said other person, as also of the objects sought and benefits to be realized by the carrier from such assumption, to be accompanied by copies of any agreements or contracts therefor.

"Every application for authority, as also every certificate of notification hereinafter provided for, shall be made out under oath, signed, and filed on behalf of the carrier by its president, a vice president, auditor, comptroller, or other executive officer having knowledge of the matters therein set forth and duly designated for that purpose by the carrier.

"Whenever any securities set forth and described in any application for authority or certificate of notification as pledged or held as a free asset in the treasury of the carrier shall, subsequent to the filing of such application or certificate, be sold, pledged, repledged, or otherwise disposed of by the carrier, such carrier shall, within 10 days after such sale, pledge, repledge, or other disposition, file a certificate of notification to that effect, setting forth therein all such facts as are required by subdivision (c) of the foregoing first paragraph, or as may be required by the commission.

"Upon application to the commission for approval of proposed issues of securities the commission shall cause notice to be given to the railroad commission or public service or utilities commission, or other appropriate authority, of each State in which the applicant carrier operates. The railroad commission, public service or utilities commission, or other appropriate State authority, thus notified shall have the right to present before the commission such representations as they may deem just and proper for preserving and conserving the right and interests of their people and the States, respectively, as involved in such proceeding. The commission may hold hearings, if it sees fit, to enable it to determine its decision upon the application for authority.

"Nothing herein shall be construed to imply any guaranty or obligation as to such issues on the part of the United States.

"The foregoing provisions of this section 20a shall not apply to notes to be issued by any said carrier maturing not more than two years after the date thereof and aggregating not more than 5 per cent at any time of the securities of said carrier then outstanding. Within 10 days after the date of such notes the carrier issuing the same shall file with the commission a certificate of notification, in such form as may from time to time be determined and prescribed by the commission, setting forth as nearly as may be the same matters as those required in respect of applications for authority to issue other securities.

"The commission shall require periodical or special reports from all carriers hereafter issuing any securities, including such notes, which shall show, in such detail as the commission may require, the disposition made of said securities and the application of the proceeds thereof.

"All issues of securities contrary to the provisions of this section may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or of any director, officer, or stockholder of the carrier proposing to make the issue; and any director, officer, attorney, or agent of such corporation who assents to, or concurs in, any issue of securities forbidden by this section 20a shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"From and after the passage hereof it shall be unlawful for any officer or director of any operating carrier to receive for his own benefit, directly or indirectly, any money or thing of value, in respect of the negotiation, hypothecation, or sale of any securities issued or to be issued by said carrier, or to share in any of the proceeds thereof, or to participate in the declaring or paying of any dividends of an operating carrier from any funds properly included in capital account, or otherwise than from the revenues of said carrier. Any violation of these provisions shall be a misdemeanor and on conviction in any United States court having jurisdiction shall be punished by a fine not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, or imprisonment for a term not less than one year nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

I here insert in the RECORD a statement made by the Hon. W. C. Adamson, at that time chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House. This statement was made at the time Judge Adamson was retiring from Congress and from membership on the Newlands committee. It is so full of wisdom and good common sense, for which he was famed, that I can not refrain from here again calling the attention of Members of the House to it:

STATEMENT OF W. C. ADAMSON, VICE CHAIRMAN AND MEMBER OF THE JOINT SUBCOMMITTEE.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman and associate members of the joint subcommittee, inasmuch as I am to sever my connection with the committee and not be present to join in a report, I shall embrace the opportunity afforded by the committee to express a few of my impressions.

It is obvious to me from the investigations held in San Francisco and general conditions that during the war it is not practicable to give satisfactory consideration to the subjects before the committee, much less to make a final report. The public attention is so engrossed in subjects connected with the war as to be reflected in the testimony of every witness. Naturally, witnesses are considering war conditions, and when we try to consider permanent peace practices and regulations the tendency is to try to apply to them the same treatment that is appropriate to war conditions, which is a mistake.

The truth is, all consideration should be given now to war conditions until we win the war, which we must and shall win sooner or later at all hazards regardless of cost. Until that is done all other considerations must be subordinated and all plans and arrangements for peace conditions, such as conducting business in time of peace and the securing of prosperity through private and public enterprise, must be postponed until that period arrives. The mischief of confounding plans for operation in time of peace with war conditions is that diametrically opposite conditions require entirely different treatment. In time of war we need centralization and consolidation, national mobilization of all instrumentalities and all lines of business, and individual enterprise must submit to such conditions of regulation and control as will support war purposes, whereas in time of peace we need general diversification and dissemination of enterprise and energy so as to enliven every portion of the country, stimulate every avenue of business, and production and distribution through individual and local enterprise under local control, which make the ideal conditions of peace.

We have already provided for the mobilization of our industries and resources during the war with a dispatch and efficiency unrivaled by any democracy, if not unrivaled in history, and this in spite of the fact that pessimists have prophesied this was impossible. We must not allow special and designing interests to take advantage of feverish and abnormal conditions during war to perpetuate these conditions to fetter and cripple honest private enterprise, investment, and prosperity when peace comes. During the war discussion of matters in time of peace hereafter to come can be at best but academic—in fact, if indulged in should be only academic, else it might produce either one or two evils—first, diversion of attention necessary to war maneuvers; second, perpetuation of war methods and application of them to peace times.

The propositions of the railroads were made before our participation in the war, and we entered upon their consideration. I hope my views on their propositions may be of some value in the final conclusions of the committee.

The basis of the railroad propositions is the lack of sufficient revenue and repressive, punitive, and unfriendly legislation. It is obvious that the railroads need revenue, but it is equally obvious that their representations have grossly exaggerated the situation and placed it before the committee in an imperfect light, not discriminating between strong and weak railroads and not disclosing to the committee the different figures and conditions of different roads nor assigning the true causes of such financial straits as exist.

Our railroad system is the pride of the country, the best and greatest in all the world, even after making allowance for the lamentations of all the pessimists. It must be preserved, but admission of the fact that it must be preserved does not logically lead to the conclusions insisted upon. I think every railroad in the country should be made safe to the public, safe for life and limb of travelers, and safe for prompt and expeditious carriage and delivery of all property, and it should be safe to the investors in the sense that they are allowed to enjoy profitable return on their money invested, and safe to the operators who depend upon their personal labor and attention for the daily bread of themselves and their families.

The excuse for appealing to Congress for redress is that the Government has hampered the attainment of these ends by repressive and restrictive regulation.

The carriers, in order to insure an ideal system conforming to the condtions which I have already stated, should be enabled to furnish in some places three and four tracks and more, and in all places double tracks, sufficient terminal facilities, and motive power promptly to transport all passengers and freight. It is believed that fair treatment of the public, such as they are entitled to, would insure to the railroads revenues, enough to meet all these demands.

Is it true that the railroads have been deprived of realizing these necessary revenues through unjust and punitive regulation? I deny it. When attention has been called to particular measures for regulation, it has been admitted by the advocates of this revolution that such has not been the result of a single Federal statute. The basic principle of our system of regulation is that rates and practices must be "reasonable and just." No honest man can object to that. Railroads should not make money by rates and practices that are not "reasonable and just."

They can not complain of a general system of regulation, because, although fighting such regulation at every step, the carriers themselves now generally admit the wisdom of the legislation. It can not be claimed that the prevention of rebates and special privileges was injurious or repressive, because many of the carriers themselves advocated that legislation. They can not deny that the law prohibiting the issuing of free passes resulted to their benefit. In fact, they told the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that if relieved of that burden they would carry passengers at a much lower rate. Free transportation should be forbidden. The transportation of employees should not be called free transportation. It should be provided for as a part of compensation.

They can not complain at the safety-appliance laws, for the carriers have generally participated in that legislation and have sanctioned the general principles, claiming usually that they have voluntarily been doing all that legislation or necessity required.

Without further enumeration it is safe to say, as I have already done, that no particular act can be justly criticized by the carriers as punitive and unduly restrictive.

Then they reduce the statement to the general complaint that they can not make profits because we control their practices, their rates, and their revenues, and that it is all done by politicians and not by business men. That statement is refuted by the fact that the Committee on Commerce in the two Houses have been composed for generations of the very best business men in the country, not only able lawyers, but men who have had experience in all sorts of litigation concerning transportation and other business, and they have had the advice and assistance in every instance of all the available skill and experience of the railroad experts both in administrative and operating departments of carriers in the United States.

When driven, however, from criticism of Federal regulation they say the trouble is with State regulation, and they want to be freed from 48 different masters. Well, if we taken your position and viewpoint with the millionaire investor, with no interest in the carriers or in the public except to derive dividends from stock or bonds, or take our place with the high-salaried directors and officers of the companies who wish to avoid all regulation possible, and all friction and labor possible, in transacting their business, we may be able to reconcile our minds to revolutionizing our system of government, denying and dethroning the authority of the 48 States, depriving local communities of conveniences and assurance of proper consideration and service in order for one central authority at Washington to make easy corporate operation and render certain large dividends by the proposed step. That view of the case, however, assumes and sanctions a historical and political revolution of our system.

The sovereign States were here first. They made the Government. With them rests the propagation of natural persons and the creation of artificial persons or corporations. Before railroads were ever dreamed of the makers of the Constitution realized that some States were discriminating against other States and that it was desirable that interstate commerce should freely operate throughout all the States. In order to overcome the discrimination of one State against another State, the commerce clause of the Constitution was enacted, giving the Federal Government the power to regulate interstate commerce.

It was not adopted for the purpose of destroying the power of the States to regulate transactions wholly within their borders, but for the purpose of enabling each State, while surrendering the power of discrimination against other States, to do business in all other States on equal terms. No purpose of the Constitution has been so widely perverted as has this particular proposition, intended solely for the purposes stated.

When we examined the great and able lawyer who represents the committee of 15, representing a portion of the railroads in the United States, he in his honesty and candor admits that that power of the Constitution does not authorize Congress to go into the internal affairs of any State in railroad matters or otherwise. But he proposes, at the behest of the committee which he represents, a system of Federal incorporation, and then he admits, as a lawyer, that a Federal corporation will have no more rights under the commerce clause of the Constitution than a State corporation. Congress, under that clause of the Constitution, has plenary power over all instrumentalities alike, no matter where a man is born nor where a corporation is chartered nor where a partnership has its headquarters, for physical and sovereign control over all such instrumentalities applies alike to all, without exception or qualification. The qualification applies not to the form or person of the instrumentality or its origin but only to a line of demarcation, to wit, is the operation within a State exclusively or does it appertain to more than one State?

The truth is that the idea, not of the distinguished lawyer who represents the railroad committee—he would not entertain such a thought—but it is prevalent throughout the country that there is a glamor and potentiality apparently investing anything with a Federal name that carries irresistible force everywhere that, bearing such credentials, an agent claiming Federal authority will infringe and fudge and the people will yield. Something akin to moral intimidation will break down local opposition and barriers and that a Federal incorporation would enable things to be done with less friction and resistance. That idea is fortified by a long historical list showing different assertions about the intendment of the clause and the manner of its construction—a long list dangerous to our liberties in connection with the Federal Government.

When that compromise was agreed upon Jefferson and his disciples apprehended and Hamilton and his disciples fully anticipated that Federal construction would lead to the extension of the powers conferred by Federal Constitution, and that accordingly by construction the centralizing idea which seemed to fail of expression in the Constitution would reap full fruition by construction. For strict construction a large number of wise patriots in the country have always contended. Unless we stand with that body of wise patriots we will hasten the destruction of the Republic, which will inevitably come sooner or later through liberal construction which permits Federal legislation and enforces it by more liberal construction.

Entertaining such views, I regard Federal incorporation not only as dangerous but as entirely unnecessary. The proposition "to rid the carriers of 48 masters" is a misleading statement. The persons who bought up these railroads have done so of their own volition, which they had a right to do and operate them cum onore, induced thereto solely by financial considerations. The proposition to change our form of government to add to their convenience or gains is entirely untenable. The charters granted by the States were intended for local purposes and were consented to by the people from considerations of local conditions, convenience, and profit. Rights of way, local concessions, local control of schedules and connections, the prosperity of towns and communities based on such considerations were all moving factors in original construction.

The fact that final ownership of these railroads has passed to bondholders, stockholders, and other chance investors does not justify disregard or destruction of these conditions. To say that our transportation is a national question is a misleading catch word. It sounds big and is useful in time of war, as has already been shown. In time of peace it is a matter for local consideration. The country is made up of local population and local and individual interests. Its greatness depends on local enterprise and local prosperity. It is sometimes convenient for a tourist or commercial man to hurry from Boston to California, but it is irritating to the local communities, on which the carrier is dependent for its prosperity, to see these palace trains dash by without noticing the localities on which they depend for revenue and verdicts in the courts while relegating the local population to second-class trains, which run before day and after dark, and which often make long waits at connecting points for those selfsame through trains. It would be profitable to the carriers to stop and study considerations of sound policy right there. Furthermore, it is not true that any of these carriers have as yet succeeded in dominating 48 States by ownership of all the railroads. It will be a sad day when they do; but if they should, it would not justify them in changing all laws to suit their convenience in all States.

Every business man has a right to do business in every State, but when he goes away from his own State he must behave himself as a gentleman and conform to the local police regulations for morality and good conduct in all those States. The owners of railroad stocks and bonds and the officials of the carriers are mere humans, citizens of the United States and of the various States, and have no superior right to claim any greater immunity from local submission than have other citizens.

The restrictive provisions contained in Federal and State laws are all leveled at bad men, not good ones. They do not inflict injustice and are not offensive to any honest railroad man any more than laws against immorality and crime are offensive or repressive to preachers and other good men in the country. Such laws are made for the protection of good men by curtailing the evil conduct of bad men.

All benefits of the commerce clause of the Constitution can be easily secured under the present plan of regulation. If we destroy the present Commerce Commission and establish regional commissions, the regional commissioners would be appointed at Washington. They would not be representative of the localities. They would not necessarily be representative of the public view in any locality, and under any suggested plan of review or appeal ultimately all authority would be exercised by some sort of commission at Washington. The new plan like the present plan must be executed by mortal men and their efficiency depends on their personal merits and efforts. The Federal Government can secure just as good men under the present system as under the proposed new plan. The trouble with reformers now and always has been, if you can call this a reformation, is that instead of trying to correct abuses by amending existing systems and executing existing laws they always want to do away with what exists already and undertake new legislation and new systems. If the reformers would first try to enforce present laws awhile, at least far enough to give them a fair trial, and suggest necessary amendments, it would be found much wiser and better.

We have lately amended the present law by adding two commissioners and authorizing subdivisions of the commission, each with power of the commission, with the action of each subdivision subject to revision by the entire commission. The membership should be increased to 15, and they should be selected from every part of the country. There would be no difficulty in providing for and carrying out the present scheme, and it would be better if the commissioners should hold investigations in all parts of the country and discontinue the present system of making these investigations through agents and examiners. If $10,000, the present salary, will not secure the ablest men in the country, it is easy to increase that salary. It is the most important body in the country and should be composed of the ablest and best men, and that could and would be accomplished as easily as with any other possible board.

Every benefit possible under the commerce clause of the Constitution can be realized under the present system. The line between interstate commerce and internal police authority is not definitely defined. It is a matter for ascertainment in each particular case. It is certain the Federal Government is the final arbiter as to where that line can eventually rest. If the present commission has not sufficient authority to condemn every State act which interferes in any way with interstate commerce, Congress can easily make that power clear. When Congress enacts such a statute and the Supreme Court construes it, then it is final.

I apprehend that ultimately the action of the Federal Government will leave very little control over transportation in the States themselves. Every transportation company, railroad or otherwise, which is necessary to the service of the people can be made a participant in interstate commerce, whether it desires so or not, for it can be connected with interstate carriers. Then every act of a State touching that carrier which interferes in any way with the free operation of interstate commerce will be illegal and void when the Federal Government occupies the field. It is certain it may do so and it seems inevitable it will do so. If so, let it come in an easy, progressive, constitutional, and natural way and not be precipitated by sudden and violent action.

So far as the financial operations of interstate carriers are concerned, there is no doubt of the power of Congress to enact appropriate legislation at least far enough to protect the carriers against themselves and one another against frenzied finance and misappropriation of funds, compelling wise application of funds so that the physical condition of the carriers will be improved instead of impaired by irresponsible operation and administration at the expense of the properties themselves and the safety of the public.

The House has once passed the Rayburn bill and the House committee has reported it a second time. If that bill should be enacted into law, in my judgment, it would meet all the necessities of the case, provided the carriers will adjust their rates and practices to insure fair treatment of the different communities in the United States and the development of those parts of the country which need development, thereby creating new and larger and more profitable fields for revenue instead of scrambling for revenue and traffic already created and depleting the revenues of other carriers by such a scramble.

So far as the proposition for Government ownership is concerned, it is absolutely useless in the first place, because whatever regulatory power the Government would have as a sovereign it may have and exercise over the operation of everything within its boundary regardless of ownership. It would have no more power over the regulation of interstate carriers as the owner of the carriers than it does have as the sovereign. It would have no more sovereignty over its own properties than it has over the holdings of other owners, and it would not exercise its power of sovereignty over its own properties to the detriment of the properties of private citizens. If the Government should encumber itself with the operation of all the railroads it would involve itself in political confusion and corruption unspeakable, which alone would offset any possible advantage suggested by the disordered mind of the wildest theorist.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to what I consider the most important subject, next to destroying the Kaiser, in time of war and of peace, and that is the liberalizing of the general dam act so as to induce private capital to improve the navigable streams. The possibilities of development in this country are so great that even if only partially realized the existing transportation facilities will be totally inadequate to distribute the products of our farms, mines, and factories. The navigable waters of the country should be made to carry most of the heavy freight. It is not probable that the Government will make all these improvements in a hundred years. They are very expensive and the number is large.

Almost every navigable stream in the country, however, is interrupted or broken by shoals, which attract capital to develop water power for the generation of hydroelectricity. Almost every such stream can be made to pay at least the expenses of its own improvement for navigability. In addition to that, they would be dotted with all sorts of factories. The electricity generated would electrify most of the railroads in the country and save coal. It would manufacture almost all commodities. It would not only produce from the air nitrates for war purposes and for agriculture, but it would be used to manufacture steel in the most approved methods and soda and aluminum, and cotton goods and woolen goods, and almost every conceivable thing needed for foreign and domestic trade, all of which furnish inducements to private capital to improve the shoals. Up to this time little streams which are nonnavigable have been relied upon, and the proposition has been clouded and confused with the question of dealing with power sites on the public domain of which the United States is the owner as well as the sovereign. These public-land sites and the nonnavigable streams are capable of comparatively small development and benefit, and those who promote water-power development should be induced, if not compelled, to develop the navigable rather than the nonnavigable streams, and the inducements are so much greater because of the much larger power obtainable. If permitted by law, they would be developed instead of the minor streams.

We enacted a general dam law in 1906, of which capital was rapidly availing itself. Many consents of Congress were granted and a great many companies were formed. With several projects constructed under that law, further development was suspended because certain persons in the country started a propaganda to the effect that we were giving away something to private monopoly. Our committee conferred with the authors of that propaganda and tried to agree with them on terms. For instance, they demanded that the Government should retain the power to regulate production, practices, and charges. We arranged to provide that. They insisted that the Government should retain the right to impose all conditions requisite to the public good. We agreed to provide that. It was insisted that the Government should reserve the right to charge an annual amount, based on the benefits to the promoter or grantee, with due reference to the benefits to navigation, and we agreed to that. Finally objection was reduced to the concrete form of demanding that the grantee should submit to a stipulation that he should not only construct such locks, dams, and other structures as required at the time of approval of his plans and specifications, but should thereafter put in such other structures at his own expense as might be required by the Government at any time during the life of his grant, and the further demand that annual charges might after 20 years be changed by the Government without the consent of the grantee, and might be changed each 10 years thereafter without the consent of the grantee. Of course, such stipulations would induce no capital to build dams. Other potent obstruction comes from existing electric companies, who assume an attitude similar to that assumed by the leading railroads, to wit, that development is practically finished.

The railroads say no other railroads should be built unless the present railroads need them and do the building. The present electric companies object to the further development of other electric enterprises through fear that competition would reduce the price of electric current, although such reduction would be of great benefit to the public in the building up of the country and break their strangle hold on prices and popular prosperity. They are willing for extensions to be made provided they can control extensions and prices. This suspension of construction has enabled them to acquire property rights at most of the sites, for the original owners were unable to hold unprofitable property, and sold it to the water-power trusts, the only purchasers in the restricted market. It is necessary to liberalize our legislation to provide for condemnation proceedings, so that other investors may secure these sites for improvement if the companies holding them persistently refuse or fail to develop them. I commend the entire subject to the committee for the consideration its transcendent importance deserves.

I shall attach to my statement nine exhibits, showing some efforts of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to amend the general dam law and also to control railroad securities.

Mr. MANN. I understand. The opportunity has not been very great during the last week or so, but we are now on the Agricultural bill, making rather rapid progress upon it, and no other appropriation bill is pressing. There is no other appropriation bill that has been reported, except the pension appropriation bill, which would not take 15 minutes to pass, except for the general debate, probably, and there is no likelihood of the Army bill being reported very soon; and I do not know when the naval bill will be in, but it never comes in on time, or it never has in my experience.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I am not going to object to the gentleman's request, but I had hoped that the gentleman would make his speech in the House, because the members of the committee upon which the gentleman serves tell me it would be in all probability a very interesting and elucidating speech.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I know I voice the sentiment of many Members on this side of the aisle who would like to hear the gentleman from Texas deliver this speech on the all-important subject of Government ownership of railroads. I think the membership of this House would be willing to stay here half an hour longer and allow the gentleman now to proceed to deliver that speech. Would the chairman of the committee have any objection, in view of the manifest expression of interest in the gentleman's remarks, to permitting him to proceed for half an hour?

Mr. LEVER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think it is hardly fair to the Committee on Agriculture, as much as we would like to hear the gentleman's speech. I regard him as one of the ablest men in this House, but the Committee on Agriculture has important business ahead of it. I have arranged for a conference with certain gentlemen touching the wheat-guaranty price on Saturday, and I am very anxious to finish this bill in time to attend to that matter. Next week the committee is going to be engaged practically all the week in trying to work out some plan by which the Government can keep its faith with the wheat farmers of this country.

In addition to that the Committee on Agriculture has other matters that it ought to give attention.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman just withhold that for a moment?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The chairman will agree that we are making very good headway on his bill. There are not very many items that will provoke debate. Does not the gentleman feel certain that we shall finish this bill at an early hour to-morrow afternoon?

Mr. LEVER. I hope so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why would the gentleman not be willing to make an exception now?

Mr. LEVER. Why not agree that at the conclusion of the consideration of this bill the gentleman from Texas may have his time?

Mr. STAFFORD. That would prevent the gentleman from Texas attending very important committee meetings.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Texas will do that, I shall be glad to promise to help make a quorum and secure him an audience.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose it would be more agreeable to the gentleman from Texas to go on right now, and we could stay an hour later this evening.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I have read the letter from the Federal Horticultural Board in regard to the plan for international prohibition, and, while it has some facts in it that might be new to me, the scope of the letter is in no wise new and it does not throw light on the question that I sought information about.

Mr. LEVER. I have not read it myself.

Mr. MANN. Well, the letter is misinforming in one respect. It says the objection comes because of a letter sent out by Henry A. Dreer, of Philadelphia, one of the great seed merchants of the country. This regulation has been discussed in a great many florists' and gardeners' journals, regardless of the statement of Mr. Dreer. I have not seen the statement of Mr. Dreer, but I have had communications from a great many people who, like myself, are interested in amateur gardening, and letters from a great many people who, knowing my interest in the subject, have written me because of their interest in commercial propositions. In the main, while they criticize the order, I think the desirable thing they wish to know is whether this order is absolute and is going to stand; whether the Federal Horticultural Board, vested with power, has made up its mind that it is going to enforce the plant quarantine for protection to American industries in the florists' and nurserymen's lines, or whether, as suggested by the latter end of this letter, it is going to yield on nearly everything that anybody kicks about—because that is the intimation in this letter.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. In some letters that I have received they seem to have objected to this order as to certain plants, azaleas, and things of that kind. Has the gentleman any information on that subject?

Mr. MANN. Most of our azaleas and fancy rhododendrons and most of the foliage plants and everything of that sort, for both outside and inside, we import from Belgium, or did import from Belgium in the past. We have not imported any in the last few years. They come to us in the main wrapped up with the balls of earth around the roots. They are wrapped. The Department of Agriculture claims, and perhaps justly—and I am not criticizing the claim at all—that the importation of diseases and insects in the dirt is very dangerous, not to mention the importation of the same things in the superstructure of the plant. But those things will be absolutely cut out. They can not raise those things in this country profitably.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The Gardeners' Club of my State are going to hold a meeting in February, and they are going to take up the subject. They think it will injure the business.

Mr. MANN. It is going to revolutionize the business of the florists and nurserymen if it is enforced. That is what I am trying to find out—whether they had made up their minds to keep it or whether this is a tentative proposition to find out how much kicking there will be. They need not solace themselves with the idea that the kicking is going to come only from Mr. Dreer, of Philadelphia. It is universal, I may say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For acclimatization and adaptation investigations of cotton, corn, and other crops introduced from tropical regions, and for the improvement of cotton and other fiber plants by cultural methods, breeding, and selection, and for determining the feasibility of increasing the production of hard fibers outside of the continental United States, $104,410: Provided, That not less than $7,500 of this sum may be used for experiments in cottonseed interbreeding: Provided further, That of this amount $3,000 may be used for experiments in the production of New Zealand flax in the United States and for its utilization in the manufacture of binder twine.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do so for the purpose of calling the attention of the chairman of the committee to the wording on page 24, line 14, a matter that we have passed, where the words are unusual, and such as we have refused in other places to use.

Mr. LEVER. On what line is it?

Mr. MANN. Line 14, page 24, "That not less than $7,500 of this sum may be used," and so forth.

Mr. LEVER. I suggest that the gentleman offer an amendment to cure that.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It should say, "Of this sum $7,500 may be used."

Mr. LEVER. That is in my print of the bill now.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It says, "not less than $7,500."

Mr. LEVER. That "not less than" ought to be cut out.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think it should read—and I think the committee will agree with me—"that of this sum $7,500 may be used."

Mr. LEVER. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] offers an amendment. Will the gentleman repeat his amendment?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It should read, "of this sum $7,500 may be used."

Mr. MANN. It depends on what is intended by it. It is easy to see how the language in the bill to which the gentleman calls attention is not correct. The last Congress required that $7,500 be used. I take it that this committee did not intend to require that $7,500 be used, but only to permit it to be used.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. Of course, in that event the gentleman's amendment is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] asks unanimous consent to return to line 14, page 24, for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 24, line 14, after the word "not," strike out the word "less" and insert the word "more," and transpose the words "of this sum" to follow the word "that," so that it will read: "That of this sum not more than $7,500 may be used for experiments in cottonseed interbreeding."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is not as I offered it, but it will do.

Mr. LEVER. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For testing and breeding fibrous plants, including the testing of flax straw and hemp, in cooperation with the North Dakota Agricultural College, which may be used for paper making, $16,760.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Certain Members of the House who served on the famous Mann pulp and paper investigating committee are interested in the investigation and development work provided for in this paragraph:

For testing and breeding fibrous plants, including the testing of flax straw and hemp, in cooperation with the North Dakota Agricultural College, which may be used for paper making, $16,760.

Can the gentleman from South Carolina tell the House of the status of this work, and whether this is a perennial appropriation that results in any good at all to the paper industry?

Mr. LEVER. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that the principal work now being done is on flax, with a view to manufacturing paper for the making of paper money, and that their work is progressing very satisfactorily. Of course, we did not hold very extensive hearings on this bill, but I was more encouraged by the brief statement that was made about this than I have been for some time. I think they are going to get some results out of flax.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have they progressed to any extent in the commercial manufacture of paper of any kind out of flax or hemp?

Mr. LEVER. No; not at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are just merely doing laboratory work?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose the gentleman can assure us that this appropriation will continue for many, many years?

Mr. LEVER. This appropriation, like all appropriations for investigation work, for the solving of such problems, is quite likely to continue.

Mr. CRISP. It is like Tennyson's brook—it goes on forever.

Mr. STAFFORD. After the very illuminating information I have received from the gentleman from South Carolina, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To cultivate and care for the gardens and grounds of the Department of Agriculture in the city of Washington, including the keep and lighting of the grounds and the construction, surfacing, and repairing of roadways and walks; and to erect, manage, and maintain conservatories, greenhouses, and plant and fruit propagating houses on the grounds of the Department of Agriculture in the city of Washington, $11,690.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that item. The Committee on Agriculture has no jurisdiction to report appropriations for the city of Washington or any part of the expenses of running the Agricultural Department within the District of Columbia.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman's point of order is probably good, but I trust he will not make it. This item has been carried in this bill ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and it provides only for the keeping up of the grounds, buildings, and greenhouses, and the like of that, on the Agricultural Department grounds.

Mr. MADDEN. The Park Board have jurisdiction over all that work, and they are no doubt doing it very satisfactorily.

Mr. LEVER. I do not understand that they are doing anything of the kind. As I say, this appropriation has been carried in this bill ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Agriculture, for 16 years. I suppose it is subject to a point of order if the gentleman wants to make it. I have not looked into it lately——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is not his first impression that this item is subject to a point of order; but if the gentleman from Illinois has any authority, the Chair will be glad to hear him.

Mr. MADDEN. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over the appropriations for all the departmental expenses and everything connected therewith within the District of Columbia. This Committee on Agriculture has no jurisdiction over appropriations except outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LEVER. I made the statement that this is probably subject to a point of order. I remember some years ago, before I was chairman of the committee, this bill was all cut to pieces on the floor of the House by some one making points of order that this committee had no power to report appropriations for purposes within the District of Columbia. This item may stand in a different light from that general proposition. It seems to me that if we are going to have an Agricultural Department, and going to have greenhouses and things of that kind, there ought to be power somewhere to appropriate for their upkeep, and that is all this does.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Chair made the remark that he made, he did not quite understand the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair will ask if there is any committee reporting appropriations for the care of the grounds and immediate surroundings of the different public buildings.

Mr. MADDEN. The Committee on Appropriations, in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, report appropriations for all improvements within the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. No other bill carries an appropriation for the care of the grounds of the Agricultural Department. The District of Columbia appropriation bill carries items for the care of various grounds, and the sundry civil bill carries an appropriation for the care of the Smithsonian grounds, but there is no other committee that takes care of the Agricultural Department grounds. Probably the only thing that is subject to a point of order here is the words "to erect."

Mr. LEVER. Of course, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] desires to press the point of order, I would rather cure it somewhere else, because it is necessary for them to erect small buildings for greenhouse purposes.

Mr. MANN. The item was carried in the bill when they were erecting greenhouses as they needed them. Probably they not not need any this year.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his point of order. I am satisfied that there is no duplication.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the Department of Agriculture goes to a lot of extravagant expense in maintaining the surroundings of buildings in which clerks are occupied and which is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague yield for a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am one of the few who goes through the conservatories or greenhouses, properly so called, of the Department of Agriculture on the grounds. They have a few men there who are expert hybridizers. The head of the greenhouses is a wonderful man, and he has a number of men under him who have developed more benefit to the country for the same expenditure than can be found anywhere else in the country. All sorts of plants are hybridized by hand fertilization; the seed is saved and planted and the greenhouse records kept. They keep developing some new kind of plant, some new kind of bean or wheat, or something of that sort, that is of inestimable value. That work has not been anywhere else in the world as efficiently done as it is done here. Any Member of the House who wants to get intensely interested in that subject should go down there and try to get hold of Mr. Peters, or some other man under him in the greenhouses, and he will learn more about the wonderful possibilities of the development through cross fertilization and hand fertilization and hand hybridizing than anywhere else in the world, unless he goes to Dr. Van Vleeck out here in Maryland.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that my friend from Illinois will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I was wondering what prompted my colleague to make such wonderful observations of the beautiful flowers that are propagated at the agricultural gardens around the office of the Secretary of Agriculture in order that the aroma may pass through the windows of the Secretary on a warm day and give him something of pleasure. I take it that most of the items for which money would be expended under this provision of the bill would have nothing to do with the raising of flowers at all. It includes the heating and lighting of the grounds. That I suppose is done by electricity drawn from the power plant of the Potomac Electric Power Co., and it does not require any of these artistic means that my colleague speaks about to change the colors of the flowers to that of the rainbow to do that work. I see, too, that this expenditure provides for the resurfacing and repairing of the roadways and walks, and I assume that they are made of gravel and cement and that no flowers are mixed with the gravel and cement, and hence there is no necessity for hybridizing flowers in that connection.

Then, I see, too, the paragraph provides for the erection of buildings, the management of buildings, conservatories, greenhouses, propagating houses and grounds, but nowhere do I see anything about raising flowers or the wonderful genius that may be needed for that purpose. But, notwithstanding my failure to understand the necessity for this great work of art about which we have heard, I am persuaded by the smiling countenance of the gentleman from South Carolina and the persuasive argument of my colleague that nothing would be gained by insisting on the point of order, and hence I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds; for the investigation and improvement of grasses, alfalfa, clover, and other forage crops, including the investigation of the utilization of cacti and other dry-land plants; and to conduct investigations to determine the most effective methods of eradicating weeds, $139,780: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $57,800 may be used for the purchase and distribution of such new and rare seeds.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask why the amount of the appropriation here is reduced for the purchase of new and rare seed?

Mr. LEVER. That is due to a transfer to the statutory roll. It is really not reduced. It is due to a transfer to the statutory roll of two clerks, class 1, and one clerk at $1,000.

Mr. MADDEN. So it had nothing to do with the purchase of seed, but it was to give a permanent job to somebody on the temporary rolls.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of investigation, including the office of the chief of bureau, the assistant chief of bureau, the officers in charge of publications, records, supplies, and property, and for miscellaneous expenses incident thereto, $29,040.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if this apparent reduction in the bill is occasioned in some way by the transfer of clerks to the statutory rolls?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The current bill carried $91,000 and this bill $82,700. As a matter of fact, it ought to be twice that.

Mr. LEVER. Eight thousand seven hundred and forty dollars has been transferred to the statutory rolls.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me ask the gentleman a question, if I may. I move to strike out the last word. How much did the gentleman say had been transferred to the statutory roll?

Mr. LEVER. Under that item, $8,740.

Mr. MADDEN. That would make the two items come to about $38,000.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How much of an expenditure does this general administrative bureau have jurisdiction over?

Mr. LEVER. This takes care of the office force of the chief of the bureau—his own immediate administrative force.

Mr. MADDEN. I mean the total expenditures under the jurisdiction of the administrative branch of the bureau?

Mr. LEVER. That is $29,000 and odd.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think the gentleman understands me. Of course, he would not spend $29,000 to run the office force without some duties. What duties do they perform?

Mr. LEVER. They perform the ordinary duties of an administrative officer.

Mr. MADDEN. Over what branch of the service? How much money do they get altogether?

Mr. LEVER. I do not think I get the gentleman's point.

Mr. MADDEN. For example, this says "for general administrative expenses connected with the above-mentioned lines of investigation." How much money is expended altogether in this investigation?

Mr. LEVER. None of this money would be expended on investigation. This money would be expended on clerical hire.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that. What I want to get at is, What percentage of the total amount of money expended under the jurisdiction of this bill in this bureau does this amount to?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will see below that the total is $3,294,000, so that this $29,000 would be a little more than 1 per cent. That is about the way it runs ordinarily.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a little over 1 per cent.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $358,980. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packeting, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, shall upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided, also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided, also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department: And provided, also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry, and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out this entire section. I make this motion for the reason that I think the best opinion throughout the country is that this is a very unwise and unnecessary appropriation or expenditure of money. If anybody here could assert truthfully that the Government was going to furnish the farmers or others a quality of seed which they could not buy from ordinary dealers, there might be some excuse for making the appropriation, but it is common knowledge that the seed that is distributed from year to year in this way is of exactly the same quality as they can buy at the store at the nearest town. I have had a good many letters each year from my district from people asserting that the seed was not even as good as the average quality of seed sold by reputable houses. But assuming that it is as good, I am absolutely unable to see any reason why we should furnish at big expense something which a farmer can buy for a few cents with the utmost convenience as he goes to town to get his mail. It does not seem to me that there is any excuse at all for the appropriation. It will be noticed also that this year we are proposing to expend 50 per cent more than we have expended before. Is not that correct, I will ask the chairman of the committee?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It is proposed now to add 50 per cent to an appropriation item which always has been attacked here every year since I have been here.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the answer that the chairman of the committee made probably is misleading to the committee.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I can not yield to the gentleman, as my time is very limited.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then I shall follow the gentleman and make a statement.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I have made only two statements since I got up. One is that this seed is of no better quality than the farmers can buy anywhere, and the other that the appropriation has increased 50 per cent. I do not see how the gentleman can correct either. I am unable to see why anyone can feel that he is adding in any way to his prestige in his district by sending out these small packages of seeds to the farmers. I am partly of the opinion that it is a political liability to send them out, because an increasing number of farmers from year to year are getting to understand——

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes.

Mr. WASON. Do I understand my colleague to say that the distribution of these seeds is a liability? Did he use the seed accredited him under previous acts by sending them into his district?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I will tell the gentleman that last year I passed the buck to others. I reached the conclusion that personally I did not care to select those to whom they might be sent, and I sent them to some people who gave it out that those who thought they could use them could come and get them.

I realize that some one is going to follow me now and say that those who happen to object to this appropriation ought not to use any of the seed. I do not think there is anything inconsistent about distributing the seed if voted by Congress and a certain quantity is set apart for each congressional district in the country. As long as Congress buys the seeds and places them at our disposal, I think the people of my district are entitled to their share. There may be some trifling value to them, and whatever value there is, I propose they shall have, but it does seem to me that it is a waste of money.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It seems to me that it is a waste of money to buy these seed and send them out, when perhaps three out of every four men who get them do not want them or have no use for them and would sooner buy them at the store. If it were proposed to use the money for rare or new kinds of field seed, such as the farmers could not otherwise secure, I would not object to the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this item brings up the annual discussion about free seeds. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in 10 minutes, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] to have five.

Mr. MANN. There are several gentlemen here who desire to be heard.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman had better make it 30 minutes, and then he will be getting off lightly.

Mr. LEVER. I will make it 30 minutes with the understanding that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] shall have five.

Mr. MANN. Make it 35.

Mr. LEVER. No; I include him in the 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina indicate who is to have time?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] to have five minutes, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] to have five minutes, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] to have five, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] desires five, and the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER]——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from North Dakota was to have five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. How much is that?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the request that debate close in 30 minutes. That takes care of everybody.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 30, line 8, strike out "$358,980" and insert "$239,320" in lieu thereof.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment be adopted it will provide the same amount of money as was available last year for this purpose. The Secretary of Agriculture in making his estimates and suggestions to the committee asked for $239,320 for this work. The committee added 50 per cent, or $119,660. I think that increase was unwise, and I think the whole thing is a very cheap proposition.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In just a moment. I would like to have the whole thing stricken out, but I believe the temper of the House is to make some appropriation for this work, and I believe, and I hope, it will agree with me that the amount of money that was available last year, the very large sum of $239,320, will be enough. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MORGAN. What was the object of increasing the fund? Was that occasioned by the increased cost of seed?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No; I think it was not on account of increase of cost of seed. It was made to increase the amount of money available to add to the allotment of seed which each Member will receive. There was some talk about the increased price of seed, but there is a difference of opinion about that. Some well-informed men say that the price will be higher; others, I believe just as well informed, say the price will be lower. In fact, I heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has large information on this subject, express the opinion that seeds will likely be lower than they were, so that the idea that the seeds may be high in price will not justify the increase of this appropriation by $120,000. The increase was made in the committee for the purpose of providing a larger allotment for each Member under this distribution, and it is very questionable indeed whether an appropriation of this kind ought to be made at all. I trust that the committee will decide that the old amount is sufficient, and that amount can be had by adopting my amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, this increase is only 50 per cent over the amount provided for in the last appropriation bill. Members who really represent agricultural districts have complained that the provision in the old bill did not furnish seeds sufficient to go around. This provision as it now stands restores the provision that was in the law prior to the last appropriation bill, and I submit to gentlemen if we are going to distribute these seeds at all they ought to be supplied in sufficient number to cover those districts where people really need them and want them. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] suggests by his amendment that we cut out this additional amount and leave the old amount that was in the bill before. Now, unless you could find out who in the district wants seeds and needs seeds, his amendment should not be adopted, because if you are going to send seeds out in this way you are liable to send them to people who do not want them, and you are liable to leave those who do want them and need them without seeds. So I submit to this committee that with the vast appropriations that this Congress is making for things that help every other class of people, that we ought at least to be willing to expend this small amount for rare seeds, the best seeds that the Government can buy from time to time, to send out to the farmers in the various sections of this country, and I think it were much better if gentlemen could suggest economy along other lines, rather than to follow the suggestions of the great seed houses, who have always fought this appropriation, and who have always tried to cut it down, because they hoped to be able to sell seed in the localities where the Government now sends this high character of vegetable seeds. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the old arrangement each Member obtained 25,000 packages of garden seed and 3,000 packages of flower seed. This year we get only 14,000 packages of garden and I do not remember how many flower seed, but we do not have the privilege of exchanging garden seed or flower seed one for the other, and does not the gentleman think if we are going to send these seed out and attempt to cover the district that instead of leaving it as it was before it ought to be doubled, so as to be enough to go around to the people of the various districts?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would support a proposition to give even a larger amount of these seeds to the various Members, to be distributed among the Members generally, than we have provided for in the bill. I hope what we have in it will remain there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I can speak as one coming from an agricultural district in regard to this item. Perhaps the conditions there are quite different from some others, but we regard this as a very important provision. I have in the years that I have been here received only one or two letters opposed to this appropriation, and they came, as I found out on investigation, from what you might call "bonanza" farmers, like the Grandins and the Dalrymples, who have large estates, with fine buildings, with automobiles and all the accouterments of wealth, like so many of the farmers in the district of my friend from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG]. But in my district we have probably two or three thousand new settlers. They settled in the timber country, where it takes time as well as lots of labor to develop farms, and they have only a few acres cleared. They have to go out into the "bonanza" district of North Dakota to work in the summer in order to earn money with which to pay living expenses and to gradually develop their lands. These small farmers are all anxious for these seeds. And the statement made by the gentleman from North Dakota that these seeds are for sale at near-by stores is hardly justified. Especially is it unwarranted so far as my district is concerned. The people who want these seeds are in many cases, I think, 25 to 30 miles from where the seeds can be bought. If any of these stores have garden seed, they get them without any skilled assistance in selecting them. The bill here is to authorize the department to purchase and propagate and test for congressional distribution valuable seeds and bulbs and vines. Where can you buy bulbs and vines in a country store? They have got to be selected and distributed in accordance with the suitability of the seeds to the different localities. They can not be purchased by the department without an investigation as to the suitability and value of these seeds for a particular locality. Now, the seeds that are sent promiscuously from the seed houses to the stores are not selected with the care with which these seeds are selected. Therefore, the contention the gentleman makes, that you can buy equally as good seeds in the stores as can be secured from Government distribution, is unwarranted.

Another class of people outside of the new settlers that want these seeds, as I have found from experience, are the people who have small gardens, the people in villages and towns who are, perhaps, mechanics and employed in the mills and factories, and who have a little plot of ground which they can cultivate. And the encouragement by the Government of war gardening has stimulated the demand for this seed, which everyone found out who had charge of this distribution last year. In addition to that, I have in my district from 7,000 to 8,000 Indians, whose original occupation was that of hunting and fishing and war, but whom the Government has gradually sought to train to a life of civilization by teaching them industry, and especially agriculture. The children gradually acquire a taste for the cultivation of the soil. The greatest demand I have for seeds has come from the people on White Earth and the Red Lake Indian Reservations, and especially from the schools. The school-teachers there tell me the children manifest a wonderful desire to have seeds and to watch their development and growth, and the crops raised from them, and this helps the very work the Government is carrying on, and upon which it is spending millions of dollars in the United States, to encourage civilization and self-support among them.

The only opposition I have discovered to this item comes from the rich farmers and, perhaps, from those who read too seriously the farm journals. These farm journals generally ridicule the items more effectually than anybody has ever done on the floor here. But if you turn over the pages of these periodicals you will find page after page of seed advertisements. So it is perfectly plain that the motive for it is not for the benefit of the people but for the benefit of the seed houses.

I hope the appropriation will remain in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, in the discussions of this question on former occasions I have never expressed my views, but I have always voted for an appropriation of this kind. I am in favor of this appropriation as it is proposed by the committee, and I am opposed to the amendment offered by my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]. This year we have but 14,000 packages of seeds allotted to each congressional district. This is only half enough for an agricultural district. I think if we send out these seeds at all we ought to have a quantity sufficient to go to practically all our farmers. And I assume if seeds go down in price the Secretary of Agriculture will not need to expend this entire amount.

Now, it is true that I have occasionally had letters from men who seem to be opposed to this so-called congressional seed distribution, but now, after 10 years of experience and somewhat intimate association with the people of my district, I believe that a very large majority of the people in my district, in the cities and towns as well as in the country, are in favor of this appropriation and of this distribution of seeds. I have been surprised how many men in the cities—lawyers, bankers, merchants—have written me special letters asking me for these seeds, not that they were not able to pay 10, 15, or 25 cents for seeds, but they wanted some from the congressional distribution. They have written me often for them, and I receive every year thousands of letters asking me for such seeds. Of course there are some of my constituents who get them who perhaps do not care for them, but there are thousands who write me for them. Now, then, there are some who believe, on account of the propaganda carried on by certain papers, that this distribution is made solely to help reelect Congressmen.

In all candor I do not believe that is true, and I say here honestly and truly that if I thought this appropriation was made and I voted for it simply to help elect myself to Congress I would be unworthy of a seat in the House of Representatives if I voted for it. But I have believed and I believe to-day that this distribution of seeds, when it is properly done, is a means of linking the farmers of this country to the National Government, and there is nothing so important to the stability and the welfare of this Nation as to have the farmers of this Nation in a friendly attitude toward the Federal Government. It is not the value of the seeds, but it is in a way a recognition of the farmer and his industry.

So I am for this appropriation, because I believe it is in the right direction and in accordance with the right policy.

I had a letter a year ago from the editor of the leading daily paper of my State asking me to turn a portion of my seed distribution over to that city, although it is not in my district. A few days ago I had a similar letter, and the writer goes on at length to tell how, by the use of the seed in that great city, in developing home gardening among the poor, he has been able to do a great deal of good. I am for this entire appropriation. I am opposed to reducing it. I think it is a proper expenditure of the public money [Applause.]

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, before I was elected to Congress there were criticisms in certain periodicals, such as the Searchlight on Congress, criticizing Congress for the sending out of free seeds, books, and pamphlets as a perverted system of politics. Several of my constituents have told me that when I got down to Congress they wished I would not send them any seeds. They preferred to have enacted good legislation, such as a grain-grading law and other matters relative to the distribution and marketing of farm products. In order to ascertain the popularity of free seeds, I sent out a letter, in which I embraced a statement asking whether or not these seeds were desired. I inclosed a list of bulletins issued by the Department of Agriculture. Out of 30,000 letters sent to my district I received 1,200 replies. These names constitute my live list for seeds.

But since the war began I found a new manner in which we can very usefully distribute these seeds. I had the pleasure of dining with Dr. Francis, who is the head of one of the school-garden commissions in this country, and it is surprising to know what they have done in this country toward encouraging the children in the schools to grow gardens. This is of great consequence to this Nation. We talk of the "back to the land" movement, but sometimes we do not act just as we preach. I think that the school-garden movement is inciting in the children an appreciation of the value of land and encouraging and inspiring them to ultimately become landowners. It is an excellent and worthy movement, which demands greater appropriations and more earnest attention of Congress. I am taking the balance of my seeds and sending a number of packages to each school, with a letter encouraging the children to see how much they can raise in their little gardens this year.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Has the gentleman ever succeeded in getting the Bureau of Plant Industry to put up seeds that are peculiarly adapted to the school gardens? I find that they are inclined to put up seeds such as the children can not use.

Mr. BAER. No; I do not favor the attempt to produce butterfly effects and flower seeds. We want something that the children can raise to show them the actual value which they can receive from the soil by cultivating it.

If we are to have free seeds, I believe we should have the full amount of this appropriation and should not cut it down at all. But if we are going to do away with the proposition in the Department of Agriculture, I would prefer that it be transferred to the Bureau of Education, so that the seeds can be distributed directly to the schools and superintendents through the head of this school-garden movement. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman from North Dakota use?

The CHAIRMAN. He had two minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] could use those two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Kentucky will be recognized for the two minutes remaining of the time allotted to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER].

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have always been enthusiastically and overwhelmingly for this garden-seed appropriation. [Applause.] I want to say further that I am bitterly and uncompromisingly opposed to any amendment reducing the amount [applause]; which means, of course, that I propose to fight all these amendments that have been offered. [Applause.] I wish I had it in my power to increase the appropriation, because the amount reported by the committee will not be sufficient to give each Member a quota large enough to enable me to send a package to each housekeeper in my district, and that means that I will have to keep up my former practice of begging and borrowing them. [Laughter and applause.] My judgment is that no greater harm could be done in the estimation of the public to this great Department of Agriculture, which is doing such magnificent work for the farmers of the country, than would result from the abolition or even the further curtailment of this garden-seed distribution. [Applause.] I have private information to the effect that this seed distribution next spring will have a lot more corn and beans in it than heretofore. Of course, we all want the beans, of which there has been a dearth for a good while, and I imagine that all are interested in helping to avoid a fall off in the corn crop for one reason and another. [Applause.]

Some reference has been made in the debate on this paragraph to the fact that a great many people do not want these seeds sent to them, and when they are sent they do not use them. I have found very few cases like this in my district. Wherever I hear of a fellow who makes fun of the garden-seed distribution or indicates in any way that he does not want them, I take particular pains to strike him off my seed list. I send them only to those who want them, and that means practically everybody in the tenth Kentucky district. [Applause.]

Referring to those Members of Congress who are always opposing this appropriation, I think it would be a good idea, and certainly a just one, to amend the bill so as to take their quotas away from them and pro rate what they would otherwise get among the balance of us Members who do want them. [Applause.]

I realize that there are some sections of the country, particularly in large cities, where they do not raise much garden stuff, and some sections where they prefer hops and other agricultural products not included in the congressional distribution. Now that these other products are less profitable than they used to be, that is no reason why they should raise Cain with us farmers who still want the garden seed sent out.

Some gentleman remarked a few moments ago that he was not voting for continuing the distribution of garden seeds, because it helped him in his races for reelection to Congress, and that if that was his reason he would be unworthy of his seat. I do not mind confessing, incidentally, that I am conscious of the fact that sending everybody in my district a package of garden seed does not decrease my popularity. If I thought it would have that effect I might hesitate long and seriously before I would vote for the seed distribution [applause], and I imagine that a good many others would do likewise. But speaking seriously, gentlemen, I am for the continuance of this custom and for its enlargement, because I know it is of great value to the people of the country, and especially to the farmers. It increases their interest in agriculture and stimulates production, and it also makes the people out in the country feel that the Government at Washington is interested in their welfare and that their Congressman remembers them and is desirous of helping and serving them. [Applause.] But, Mr. Chairman, I see that the Chair and the House are impatient to hear the immortal bard from the Tombigbee, the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], and I give way to him. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SISSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 13274. An act to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3220) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals and peat, to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill of the following title:

H. R. 8828. An act increasing the limit of cost for the acquisition of a public building site at Yonkers, N. Y.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful, indeed, to be thus called out from the Speaker's chair to discuss this important question. [Applause.] Of course it is absolutely necessary each year in Congress to have me express my views on this great question, in order that it may be properly settled and determined in the interests of the country and for the welfare of the people. [Applause.] For that reason I deem it my duty at all times to be present upon occasions like this in order that I may promptly respond to invitations from the Chair as well as from my numerous friends on both sides of this House, who desire to hear me speak for the entertainment as well as the edification of my fellow Members. [Applause.]

I have been quite ill lately. In addition to that my wife has been seriously ill. My secretary in my office has been seriously sick also, all of us with the influenza. For these reasons I have not been able to attend promptly to my public duties on the floor of the House or in the departments, or even in my office. I regret this very much, because it is my earnest desire to be prompt and efficient at all times. If there is one thing I have tried to do at all times it has been to be prompt and faithful in discharging every duty devolving upon me as a representative of the people. Therefore I am here now under these difficult conditions to protect, if I can, the interests of the plain people. [Applause.]

I always take notice—and I take notice to-day—of the great statesmen on the floor of the House of Representatives. I love them all. I have served with them during all these years in pleasant association. I have seen gentlemen who did not measure up to the high standard of genuine statesmanship arise upon the floor of the House year after year and move to strike out this very important item. [Laughter.] I have seen the real statesmen—among whom I am one—arise year after year upon the floor of the House to advocate and to defend this appropriation. I am glad that in times gone by the statesmen have always prevailed in the advocacy of the expenditure of this small sum in the interest of the plain people of the United States of America. [Applause.] Many efforts have been made to eliminate it, but they have not succeeded, and they will not succeed to-day. [Applause.] The truth of it is, my friends, that this is not only an appropriation that appeals to the people themselves but it is an appropriation that accomplishes real and genuine good. I have heard it said to-day—or insinuated—that these seeds have no value. In order to demonstrate their value I took some packages and put them away last year in my office. This year I took a small box and put it in my office, filling it with soil that I got just outside the House Office Building. In this soil I planted those seeds, which were nearly or about 2 years old, and put a little water on the soil, and every one of those seeds germinated and brought forth the identical plant the name of which was printed on the outside of the package. [Applause.] Still some people say these seeds are no account. The truth is they are the best seed you can get anywhere. [Applause.]

I hope this provision carrying this appropriation will be adopted, and I have no doubt it will be. Then let the other provisions of this splendid bill be approved and the bill in its entirety be promptly passed. Why delay and take unnecessary time in its consideration? There is not a line in it which is not in the interest of the people and for the good of the farmers of the country. That being true, it deserves and should receive the vote of every Member. Stand by the farmers and they will stand by the country, and prosperity and happiness will result. So let us hurry this bill along and pass it, and in doing so render a real service to our constituents and to the country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan) there were—ayes 17, noes 60.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] to strike out the paragraph.

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota) there were—ayes 16, noes 61.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Forest Service: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, national forests, forest fires, and lumbering, but no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same; to investigate and test American timber and timber trees and their uses, and methods for the preservative treatment of timber; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to erect necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any building erected shall not exceed $800; to pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, and improve the national forests; to ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests; and the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests to be exported from the State or Territory in which said forests are respectively situated; to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein; to employ agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry and in the administration of national forests in the city of Washington and elsewhere; to collate, digest, report, and illustrate the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service; to purchase necessary supplies, apparatus, and office fixtures, and technical books and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington, and for medical supplies and services and other assistance necessary for immediate relief of artisans, laborers, and other employees engaged in any hazardous work under the Forest Service; to pay freight, express, telephone, and telegraph charges; for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels, and official traveling and other necessary expenses, including traveling expenses for legal and fiscal officers while performing Forest Service work; and for rent outside of the District of Columbia, as follows.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LEVER: Page 36, line 4, strike out the word "and" between the words "fixtures" and "technical" and insert in lieu thereof the words "law books."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the comptroller has held that the Forest Service, under the words "technical books," has no authority to buy law books and has turned down their vouchers. This is to cure that situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment of Mr. LEVER was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the use, maintenance, improvement, protection, and general administration of the specified national forests, $2,069,201: Provided, That the foregoing amounts appropriated for such purposes shall be available interchangeably in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture for the necessary expenditures for fire protection and other unforeseen exigencies: Provided further, That the amounts so interchanged shall not exceed in the aggregate 10 per cent of all the amounts so appropriated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. We carry something over $2,000,000 for general administrative purposes of the national forests. In addition to that we carry total appropriations of about $6,000,000. What are the receipts from the national forests now?

Mr. LEVER. I am happy to state to the gentleman from Illinois that the receipts from the national forests are constantly increasing. The total receipts of the national forests for the last fiscal year amounted to $3,574,930.07. That is divided as follows: From timber, $1,621,000; for grazing, $1,735,000; for special uses, $227,000; so that the total is $3,574,000.

Mr. MANN. I am rather surprised that there has not been a greater receipt from timber during the last fiscal year. There was a very large demand for timber on account of the war, much of it of a character which was furnished by some of the national forests and at rather high prices. We have forests that are costing $6,000,000 a year, and having the timber under these conditions and have it only amount to one million and a half dollars seems to me rather strange.

Mr. LEVER. We made inquiry as to whether or not the Government got out much timber for aeroplane work from the national forests, and they said no, because it is too far removed from railroad facilities. Most of it was gotten from private property. They said that the prospect for timber sales next year is much larger than ever before, and the receipts for timber for the next fiscal year will be very largely increased. The promise was made years ago that the service would become self-sustaining, and I am glad to say that I think the receipts of the national forests show an increase from year to year.

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned, that does not concern me. I doubt whether they will ever get self-sustaining or whether they ever should be.

Mr. LEVER. Except for the permanent improvement, such as trails, roads, and bridges, and things of that kind, that ought to be regarded as permanent improvements, the national forests are pretty nearly on a self-sustaining basis now.

Mr. MANN. I think they are a good ways from it.

Mr. LEVER. That is the statement of the forester before the committee.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt he is honest about it, but it depends upon what is covered by maintenance. Probably they do not cover a great many items, and as a matter of fact the estimate for trails is maintenance, and roads are largely maintenance.

Mr. LEVER. The methods of wood distillation should not be charged to it.

Mr. MANN. Methods of wood distillation ought not to be charged against the account.

Mr. LEVER. The purchase of tree seeds and cones I regard as permanent improvements.

Mr. MANN. Not at all, the purchase of tree seeds for planting trees in the national forests is not permanent improvement; that is current expense.

Mr. LEVER. Then there is the item for silvicultural and dendrological and other investigations.

Mr. MANN. One is for the purpose of investigating the best methods for the conservation and management of forests and forestry lands, and that certainly is current expenses, an investigation of how to manage the thing you have got. That is certainly current expense.

Mr. LEVER. A good deal is spent on the national forests for silvicultural purposes. I feel encouraged at the outlook for the national forests.

Mr. MANN. I have never been discouraged about it, I believe in the national forests and I am not worried as to whether they pay an income at present or not, because they are maintained in the main for the future, but I did think that probably they would dispose of more timber than they have during the war.

Mr. LEVER. They say on account of the location they disposed of very little.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I have always been more or less interested in the national forest reserves under the control of the Agricultural Department, and it has been my understanding for a good many years that they were going to be put on a profitable basis. But I notice that every year as the bill comes in there are appropriations for new activities, and the service runs behind anywhere from two to three million dollars. Here we are told that the prospect for the succeeding year is brighter; that the sun is shining more clearly in the West than it shone the year before; that the rains are wetter than ever before; that the grass is greener and the trees bigger than they have ever been, and the receipts from the sale of timber are greater and the expenses are less. But as the bill comes in from time to time they have appropriations for new activities.

The salaries of the foresters are increased, perhaps the number of foresters is increased, the number of roads to be built up are on a larger mileage, the forest fires perhaps blazed more than they used to blaze, and there is always, first one reason and then another, why the Forest Service continues to run behind. I have rather hoped that we would be able to see the light of day some time in the not distant future, but when one calls attention to that the answer is that the trees are growing higher than they used to and they shut out the light of the sun.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is always humorous. Let us see what the facts are.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, facts are very interesting things on occasion.

Mr. LEVER. In 1907 the receipts from the national forests were $3,457,000. In 1914 the receipts were $2,457,000.

Mr. MADDEN. That is something of a decrease in receipts. What was the increase in expenditures?

Mr. LEVER. The receipts from 1918 were $3,574,000, in round numbers $120,000 increase over last year. The estimated receipts for 1919 are $4,400,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds further, will he be kind enough to tell me how near his estimates have come to the facts in the past.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, they are not my estimates. They are the estimates of some one else.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I understood the gentleman to say they were his estimates, or the estimates of his committee, and I assumed, of course, that his committee had become so proficient in estimating the outcome of its activities that by this time it had reached such a state of perfection that its estimates, as related to the facts, would be beyond doubt.

Mr. LEVER. I think the committee as a whole has reached that state of perfection, though I doubt that the chairman has.

Mr. MADDEN. Seriously, Mr. Chairman, I think the committee is to be congratulated upon its great efficiency.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WASON. Does the gentleman want to require a higher standing for the Committee on Agriculture relative to estimates than is exhibited by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Mr. MADDEN. If I did, I would have to look up to the gentleman who has just propounded the inquiry. I want to say of the committee that it really has displayed a great deal of wisdom, in some senses conservatism, although extravagant in other senses. As a whole, the committee has been one of the great committees of the House, composed of men of high patriotic purpose. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has occupied the position of chairman of this committee for a good many years. He is soon about to retire from the chairmanship, and I want to say of him that I have never known a man acting as chairman of any committee of the House during my membership who has qualified for the position better than he. [Applause.] He not only knows what he is about, but he has given painstaking care to every activity in which he has been called upon to participate. He knows everything connected with the agricultural activities of the country. He has been patriotic, painstaking, conservative, clean, forceful, intelligent, and, on the whole, has earned a right to the confidence not only of the membership of the House but of the people of the United States. [Applause.] I congratulate him upon the great services he has rendered to the American people, and the greatest regret that I have to express is that although I want him to sit beside me as an associate he is not going over to the body at the other end of the Capitol, to which he is so much entitled to go. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of methods for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber, for timber testing, and the testing of such woods as may require test to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper, for investigations and tests within the United States of foreign woods of commercial importance to industries in the United States, and for other investigations and experiments to promote economy in the use of forest products, and for commercial demonstrations of improved methods or processes, in cooperation with individuals and companies, $173,260.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I beg the pardon of the committee for having to ask information of it in this respect. In view of the claimed scarcity and rather high price of various kinds of print paper and other papers, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he happens to recall what the paper testing bureau is doing now?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I must say very frankly to the gentleman that we did not make any inquiry about that this year.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of tree seed, cones, and nursery stock, for seeding and tree planting within national forests, and for experiments and investigations necessary for such seeding and tree planting, $145,640: Provided, That of this sum the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to use so much as may be necessary, but not to exceed $200, to acquire by purchase land now used as a forest nursery site for the Michigan National Forest.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I rise for information for, though Michigan is an adjoining State to Wisconsin, I must confess I am not apprised of the Michigan State Forest.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to yield on this proposition to the gentleman from Michigan; I do not happen to see him at the moment——

Mr. STAFFORD. He was here a moment ago. Will the gentleman ask unanimous consent to have that passed?

Mr. LEVER. I shall be glad to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to pass the paragraph, page 45, lines 15 to 22, inclusive. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,500; 1 administrative assistant, $2,500; 3 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 10 clerks, class 4; 13 clerks, class 3; two clerks, at $1,440 each; 20 clerks, class 2; one clerk, $1,300; 75 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk, $1,100; 13 clerks, at $1,020 each; 15 clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 multigraph operators, at $1,000 each; 1 clerk, $960; 11 clerks, at $900 each; 2 food and drug inspectors, at $2,500 each; 2 food and drug inspectors, at $2,250 each; one food and drug inspector, $2,120; 13 food and drug inspectors, at $2,000 each; 13 food and drug inspectors, at $1,800 each; 1 food and drug inspector, $1,620; 11 food and drug inspectors, at $1,600 each; 10 food and drug inspectors, at $1,400 each; 1 assistant, $1,600; 4 laboratory helpers, at $1,200 each; 1 laboratory helper, $1,020; 4 laboratory helpers, at $1,000 each; 4 laboratory helpers, at $960 each; 3 laboratory helpers, at $900 each; 7 laboratory helpers, at $840 each; 2 laboratory helpers, at $780 each; 24 laboratory helpers or laborers, at $720 each; 2 laboratory helpers or laborers, at $660 each; 27 laboratory helpers or laborers, at $600 each; 1 laboratory assistant, $1,200; 1 toolmaker, $1,200; 3 samplers, at $1,200 each; 1 janitor, $1,020; 1 mechanic, $1,800; 2 mechanics, at $1,400 each; 1 mechanic, $1,200; 1 mechanic, $1,020; 1 mechanic, $1,000; 1 mechanic, $960; 1 mechanic, $900; 2 student assistants, at $300 each; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 1 skilled laborer, $1,050; 1 skilled laborer, $840; 7 messenger boys, at $600 each; 3 messenger boys, at $540 each; 6 messenger boys, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $420 each; 2 messenger boys, at $360 each; 7 laborers, at $480 each; 13 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $411,670.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I notice there is a new position created that is designated as one administrative assistant at a salary of $2,500.

Mr. LEVER. That is a transfer from the lump sum of the food and drugs act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is he receiving the same salary?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in this bill the bureau has also three executive clerks at $2,000. There is a chief clerk at $2,500, and the gentleman now proposes to have an administrative assistant at $2,500 in addition to three executive clerks.

Mr. LEVER. The same number is carried.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the necessity of having so many supervisory officials over a clerical force that is not very large?

Mr. LEVER. Well, I confess I do not know the exact details.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are divisions in some auditors' offices where they have only one chief clerk, but here in this bureau you have three executive clerks and a chief clerk besides, and now you intend to create an administrative assistant. Is there not danger of the force toppling over by reason of having too many at the head?

Mr. LEVER. I would not want to admit what the gentleman said before looking into the matter and finding out what these men are doing. It may be they are looking after the food and drug act in some city like New York or Boston. I am not sure as to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is certain this man is receiving the same salary at the present time?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, for nearly a year now I have intended, as soon as I could, to prepare some information to suggest to the Congress that it provide an authorization, and if necessary an appropriation, to investigate food values. I have been on a diet personally for over a year, and very likely will be for the balance of my life in a way, with at least a suggestion from doctors as to how much of food values I shall take in the way of proteins, fats, and carbohydrates, which mean sugars, sweets, and starches. The Department of Agriculture some years ago made an investigation of the subject, which is still in the main the standard authority. The Connecticut agricultural department has made an investigation of the subject and various other people have, but the main authority is the report made a number of years ago by the Department of Agriculture. There are various books published giving details of food values. To most of you those are of absolutely no importance, but to many people in the country they are of vital importance. The trouble we have is that they are inaccurate and conflicting. There is a standard book—Locke on Food Values—which is the standard used by many hospitals, and while I was in the hospital at Baltimore passing away the time, in the main feeling very well, I used to read this book and, having a rather retentive memory for things that I try to remember, when I would come to some item in the middle or the latter part of the book which absolutely contradicted a statement in a former part of the book I would return to it, and I amused myself quite a good deal while at the hospital asking my doctor, who had told me to study the food values of this book and to prepare a diet accordingly, which food values he would take in the book, whether the one on page so and so, giving the food value of a certain article of food, or vegetable or fruit, or one on page so and so, giving an entirely different food value.

The only response that I really ever got out of my doctor, I believe, was once when I asked him about grapefruit, which they were feeding me at the hospital. In one place in the book they said that grapefruit was to be charged with 15 per cent of carbohydrates, and in another place they said it was to be charged with 3 per cent of carbohydrates. I said to the doctor, "You are giving me grapefruit here. It makes a good deal of difference, under the tables you give me, as to which percentage is correct." He smiled at me and said, "Mr. MANN, if I were you I would not eat so much grapefruit, but would eat oranges instead." But there is just as much difficulty about oranges.

Now, this is a work that can only be done correctly by the National Government. Tables which were published years ago by the Agricultural Department, in a bulletin which is not now obtainable, are themselves very disappointing.

We had the subject up a while ago of cottage cheese and other cheeses. In these tables that are now published, even in the tables that are in the new books, no lists of cheeses which you can find anywhere in this country or probably on earth by the name are given, and the cheeses you can find you will not find any tables for, usually. They are out of date.

We are always preached to. Food values used to fall from me like water from a duck's back. Farmers know something about food values for the stock they feed. Occasionally they or their wives know something about the food values of the food which they eat in their families, but only in a general way. A man may eat too much protein, which will be extremely deleterious to his health; he may eat too much of fat, which will be extremely deleterious to his health; he may eat too much of sugar, or starch, or of carbohydrates, which will be extremely deleterious to his health; but he has no way of knowing now how much he is eating.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation and development of methods for the manufacture of table sirup and of methods for the manufacture of sweet sirups by the utilization of new agricultural sources, $12,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I notice this is a new activity of the department. What is proposed to be undertaken by the Bureau of Chemistry in the investigation of methods for the manufacture of table sirup and of sweet sirups by the utilization of new agricultural sources?

Mr. LEVER. The department proposes to make some investigation of the methods of manufacturing sweet sirups from grapes, apples, and other fruits. The department is now doing its work as to the manufacturing of table sirups, but it wants to extend its activities to these various fruits from which other sirups can be had.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that predicated on the idea that the country is going dry next July?

Mr. LEVER. The committee felt we might hope for some relief through this.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are all kinds of substitutes being suggested to appease the thirst, especially in the arid districts of the country. I hope there will be some oases where they may continue to be quenched even after July 1.

Mr. LEVER. I expect that this is rather important work. I never ate any grape sirup, I confess, but I do not see why grapes should not make very fine sirup.

Mr. CRISP. They make good wine.

Mr. LEVER. They make good wine, my prohibitionist friend from Georgia says.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, prohibitionists are generally authority on wines.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Perhaps this is with a view of making some other city "famous."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For experiments in the manufacture of rare chemicals for use in chemical research, including investigation of domestic sources of supply, $10,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture may furnish, upon application, samples of rare chemicals to investigators for research work and charge for the same a price to cover the cost thereof, such price to be determined and established by the Secretary, and the money received from sales to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I am quite interested to ascertain whether this activity could not be more properly performed by the Bureau of Standards. The Bureau of Standards has a large chemical laboratory. It is supposed that their function is to determine the standards of physical contents and, I assume, of chemical contents. You purpose here, in language at least, to have the Bureau of Chemistry perform work that, from my information, should be performed by the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. LEVER. This is the statement that was made to the committee: It is proposed under this new language to enable the Bureau of Chemistry to manufacture certain very rare chemicals, the quantities of which that are used being so small that commercial enterprises will not manufacture them, and they gave us as an illustration a very rare chemical of which the Bureau of Standards itself had on hand a little phial full, sufficient for a whole year in its work. It is to take care of these rare chemicals that the Bureau of Chemistry desired to do this work. It is not contemplated at all that it shall be done on a commercial scale. Dr. Alsberg says this about it:

The situation which led me to suggest to the Secretary of Agriculture the insertion of this item is something like this: There are a great many rare and unusual chemicals and reagents which are absolutely necessary in research that are not being made in the United States and for which we used to depend upon importations from Europe. When the embargo on importations came along an immense amount of research had to stop because the necessary chemicals with which to do it could not be obtained. These are rare materials that are produced in very small quantities and are not matters of ordinary manufacture, but are absolutely necessary if the country is to carry on any extensive chemical research. Now, if we are to hold our own in the chemical industries permanently, I think there is nothing that can be done by the Federal Government that will add more to the development of chemical research and to establishment of a self-reliant chemical industry in the United States than to put some agency of the Government into the position of assisting in research by furnishing to investigators and to others doing research work these rare and unusual chemicals which can not be obtained in the markets.

Then he goes on to give some illustrations.

Mr. STAFFORD. The statement that the gentleman has just read by Dr. Alsberg would confirm my position that the work should be performed by the Bureau of Standards rather than by the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. LEVER. Why?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because that is the very purpose of the Bureau of Standards—to ascertain standards of chemicals, as well as physical contents.

Mr. LEVER. This is a process of manufacture, not a standardizing of chemicals at all. It is a proposition to manufacture these chemicals in very small quantities and sell them to people engaged in research work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, well, in the Bureau of Standards they are manufacturing certain standards and selling them to the trade. For instance, they are manufacturing standards of certain chemicals that are used in the manufacture of steel and selling those standards. They have a large chemical laboratory. All the activities of the Government during the war to determine the proper content of textiles and manufactured articles was performed by the Bureau of Standards. From the President's emergency fund the Bureau of Standards was advanced something like $300,000 or more. Large buildings have been erected. Those activities are going to continue in peace times. Why should we throw some of that work into the Bureau of Chemistry when we have accommodations in the Bureau of Standards to develop it?

Mr. LEVER. I did not understand from the statement of Dr. Alsberg that the Bureau of Standards is prepared to do this work. As I understand it, there is a pretty clear line of demarcation between the work of the Bureau of Standards and the work of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture. Of course, this work might as well be done in the Bureau of Standards as in the Bureau of Chemistry, but what is the difference?

Mr. STAFFORD. There should not be any duplication of effort.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There is no duplication here. This is simply making things in such small quantities that they can not be manufactured elsewhere. The Bureau of Standards is reaching out and encroaching on the Department of Agriculture in many directions, but there are many things that the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture ought to be permitted to do in its own sphere.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is not limited, however, to agricultural work. It is to manufacture chemicals that can be used in any line of activity.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It is to manufacture chemicals that are useful in lines of activity in which the bureaus of the Department of Agriculture are engaged.

Mr. LEVER. If you wanted to manufacture chemicals, you would not go to the Bureau of Standards, but to the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. This work is too particular and too fine for the Bureau of Standards. It has to be intrusted to the hands of real chemists who know something about agriculture.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, when it comes to finesse of operation, of course the Bureau of Standards excels any other bureau engaged in any Government activity. The gentleman shows by that statement that he is thoroughly unfamiliar with the character of the work performed by the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. Chairman, for the present I make the point of order, unless we can have positive testimony that it does not conflict with the work of the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, I will ask unanimous consent to pass this item over until to-morrow. I am satisfied that there is no duplication, but I will get a positive confirmation of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire just a little further of the gentleman how is it that the Bureau of Chemistry has anything to do with this matter? Is not the work of the Bureau of Chemistry confined to chemistry connected with agricultural operations?

Mr. LEVER. The work of the Bureau of Chemistry is not confined entirely to matters connected with agriculture, but a large part of the work of that bureau is connected with what is called organic chemistry.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That would apply, however, to the Department of Agriculture, of course?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. The bulk of their work is agricultural chemistry. This is merely a proposition that some agency of the Government shall manufacture these very rare chemicals, which can not be had in the commercial trade, because the quantity used during any one year is so very small that no manufacturing concern will bother with it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understand that perfectly; but the trouble is, it seems to me, that this is simply an entering wedge to enlarge the work of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture, which properly has to do only with the chemistry connected with agricultural operations and has nothing to do with minor chemical operations.

Mr. BAER. It is my understanding that in the organic chemistry that is practiced in the Department of Agriculture they have use for certain acids and reagents that are not required in inorganic chemistry, and that is the reason they want those chemicals, to make the tests on proteids and other things, which are not needed in ordinary inorganic chemistry.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will permit, the very language of this appropriation says that it is to standardize something for use in the Department of Agriculture. Now, just as the gentleman from Wisconsin said, that is the province of the Bureau of Standards, which is standardizing for every department of the Government—the War Department, the Navy Department, the Treasury Department, and so on. Now, this is for experiments in the manufacture of rare chemicals. That is the very work that the Bureau of Standards was created to perform.

Mr. LEVER. Why have a Bureau of Chemistry at all, then? Why not abolish it?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I can see how there should be a Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LEVER. Then why are you asking the Bureau of Standards to do chemical work? The very name indicates that it is not a chemical department at all.

Mr. GOOD. This means to make analyses and to enter upon experimental work and discover something and standardize something. That is the province of the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the gentleman from Iowa is entirely mistaken as to the purpose of this item.

Mr. LEVER. Absolutely so.

Mr. ANDERSON. The purpose is to manufacture certain rare chemicals which are used by chemists in order to produce certain reactions. These rare chemicals are not manufactured commercially at all. They are necessary in the trade, but they are used in such small quantities that they are not manufactured on a commercial scale. The purpose of this item is to permit the Bureau of Chemistry to manufacture these chemicals, in order that the trade may have them when it is desired to produce these reactions.

Mr. LEVER. They are to be sold and the money turned into the Treasury.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This item says it is for research work and experimental work, as we are to understand.

Mr. LEVER. Would you not have the Bureau of Chemistry conduct research work with reference to very rare chemicals, as well as furnish them to the trade?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; that is the work of the Bureau of Standards. Of course, the Bureau of Chemistry in the Agricultural Department, I think, ought to confine its work to biological chemistry, the chemistry which applies to that department. Otherwise you will have these two departments overlapping each other.

Mr. LEVER. We have been getting these rare chemicals from Germany. That is the truth about the matter. We have been importing them, and unless we want to depend in the future, as we have in the past, on foreign nations for things of that sort some one has to do the work. It seems to me that, it being for chemical purposes, it ought to be the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is experimental work and peculiarly within the province of the Bureau of Standards.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraw his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. By no means.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SOILS.

Salaries, Bureau of Soils: One soil physicist, who shall be chief of bureau, $4,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 executive assistant, $2,000; 4 clerks, class 4; 2 clerks, class 3; 5 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,260; 10 clerks, class 1; 7 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 soil cartographer, $1,800; 1 chief draftsman, $1,600; 1 soil bibliographer or draftsman, $1,400; 1 photographer, $1,2000; 5 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 1 clerk-draftsman, $1,200; 2 draftsmen, at $1,000 each; 1 laboratory helper, $1,000; 3 laboratory helpers, at $840 each; 1 machinist, $1,440; 1 machinist, $1,380; 1 instrument maker, $1,200; 1 machinist's helper, $900; 1 messenger, $840; 1 messenger or laborer, $480; 2 messenger boys, at $480 each; 3 laborers, at $600 each; one laborer, $300; one charwoman or laborer, $480; in all, $74,160.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to correct a typographical error.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 53, at the end of line 18, strike out $1,2000 and insert in lieu thereof $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY.

Salaries, Bureau of Entomology: One entomologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk and executive assistant, $2,250; 1 administrative assistant, $2,250; 1 editor, $2,250; 1 financial clerk, $1,800; 4 clerks, class 4; 7 clerks, class 3; 16 clerks, class 2; 22 clerks, class 1; 8 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 insect delineator, $1,600; two insect delineators, at $1,400 each; 2 entomological draftsmen, at $1,400 each; 1 entomological draftsman, $1,080; 1 photographer, $1,200; 1 entomological preparator, $1,000; 4 entomological preparators, at $840 each; 8 entomological preparators, at $720 each; 7 entomological preparators, at $600 each; one laborer, $1,080; 2 messengers or laborers, at $900 each; 1 messenger or laborer, $840; 3 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 6 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 laborer, $540; 1 laborer, $480; 2 charwomen, at $480 each; 3 charwomen, at $240 each; in all $124,010.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Is the entomologist, whose salary you propose to increase, the same person recommended for an increase last year?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; he has been in the Government service many, many years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I concede it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The committee made the recommendation to increase the salary $500, took testimony on it, and considered it very carefully. In our judgment the increase in salary ought to be made for an official who has been in the department, as the chairman says, for a long time at the head of this bureau. He has performed able and faithful services. The salary is less than the salary paid to the heads of other bureaus. We felt, after listening to all that was said, and with a knowledge of the work he has been doing and has done, the salary proposed is not too large. We realize that it is subject to a point of order, but it was not put in carelessly and was not arrived at without due deliberation, and it was the unanimous vote of the committee that the salary should be increased.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long has he been there?

Mr. LEVER. He has been there 42 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is his age?

Mr. LEVER. Over 60, perhaps nearer 70, but he is still vigorous and able to do good work. He is one of the greatest entomologists in the world.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 23, after the colon, insert "one entomologist, who shall be chief of the bureau, $4,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting cereal and forage crops, including a special investigation of the Hessian fly and the chinch bug, $147,060, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question with reference to this item. My understanding is that this lump sum of $147,000 includes an estimate of $25,000 for investigation of and the eradication of the European corn borer. Will the gentleman confirm that?

Mr. LEVER. That is true, and we propose making $10,000 available for that purpose.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I understand $10,000 is made immediately available for the work in that connection.

Mr. LEVER. It is.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting truck crops, including insects affecting the potato, sugar beet, cabbage, onion, tomato, beans, peas, etc., and insects affecting stored products, $84,960.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the chairman of the committee explain the reason for the large increase in this item of investigational work?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will recall that last year the Senate put in this bill in the miscellaneous items an appropriation of $20,000 for certain sweet-potato work. We have transferred that $20,000 from the miscellaneous funds to this item, where it properly belongs. In other words, we have corrected an error in respect to the proper place it should appear in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preventing spread of moths, Bureau of Entomology: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths by conducting such experiments as may be necessary to determine the best methods of controlling these insects; by introducing and establishing the parasites and natural enemies of these insects and colonizing them within the infested territory; by establishing and maintaining a quarantine against further spread in such manner as is provided by the general nursery-stock law, approved August 20, 1912, as amended, entitled "An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests, to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes," in cooperation with the authorities of the different States concerned and with the several State experiment stations, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $304,050.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. At the top of page 58 there is an item providing for investigational work under the direction of the Federal Horticultural Board. Early in the afternoon the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] directed attention to the ban placed by this board upon the importation into this country of certain flowers and plants which are generally used, most of them coming from Belgium. I rise to inquire whether this appropriation of $304,000 is the item from which the activities of this Federal Horticultural Board are paid?

Mr. LEVER. No; that item is carried further on in the bill, under the heading "Horticultural Board." It is on page 86.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF BIOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Salaries, Bureau of Biological Survey: One biologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $4,000; 1 chief clerk and executive assistant, $1,800; 1 administrative assistant, $2,250; 1 executive assistant, $1,800; 1 financial clerk, $1,600; 3 clerks, class 3; 6 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,260; 10 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk, $1,100; 1 clerk, $1,080; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each; 4 clerks, at $900 each; 1 clerk, $840; 1 clerk, $720; 1 preparator, $1,200; 1 preparator, $900; 1 messenger, $720; 1 photographer, $1,300; 1 game warden, $1,200; 2 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 messenger boy, $360; 1 laborer, $600; 2 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $55,970.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. Will the chairman of the committee inform the House as to how long this biologist has been in the service of the Government, and how long he has been receiving the present salary of $3,500, on which you recommend an increase of $500?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this gentleman, whose name is Nelson, has been in the service of the department since November, 1890, a period of 28 years. He has served as chief field naturalist from 1907 to 1912, and was assistant in charge of the biological investigation from 1913 to 1914. On August 6, 1914, he was appointed assistant chief of the bureau, and on December 1, 1916, was made chief of the bureau. He took the place of Dr. Henshaw.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the salary has been $3,500 since 1916?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is his age?

Mr. LEVER. I should think that Dr. Nelson is around 50 years of age.

Mr. STAFFORD. He is not superannuated?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no; he is a very vigorous man.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that I may print in the RECORD for the information of members of the committee an amendment which at the proper place I propose to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

For establishing and operating a farm produce exchange, the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be required, and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to establish, at as early a date as practicable, a farm produce exchange, with such branches thereto as may be necessary, in order to afford a medium through which the economic and systematic sale and distribution of farm products may be effected.

Such exchange shall be divided into four sections, designated, respectively, as the grain, cotton, fruit and vegetable, and miscellaneous sections, and such additional sections as Congress may from time to time provide for by specific appropriation.

The commissioners of agriculture of the several States may select, and are requested to select, an advisory committee for each of said sections, other than the miscellaneous section, composed of three of their number, to act with the Secretary of Agriculture in connection with the sale of the farm products to be sold through the section for which they may be respectively selected, provided, however, the members of said committees shall have been selected by a majority vote by such commissioners based upon the average value, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, of the production of their respective States during the five years preceding such selection of the product or products to be dealt in through the section for which they may be selected. Nothing herein shall prevent an individual commissioner from being selected for the advisory committee of more than one section.

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the time the first selection of advisory committees shall be made, and to notify the commissioners of agriculture of the several States of his action with regard thereto; and upon request by a majority vote, based upon production as herein provided, of the commissioners of agriculture shall designate the place where the selection of the several committees shall be made: Provided, however, That upon request of such majority vote the Secretary of Agriculture may provide for such selection otherwise than by a meeting of the several commissioners entitled to make such selection.

In the operation of such exchange the Secretary of Agriculture, as far as practicable, shall cooperate with the several States and the various agencies therein which may be utilized and may formulate plans and regulations for exchange of service between them and such exchange.

It shall be the duty of each of the departments of the Government to furnish the Secretary of Agriculture with such statistics and data as may be acquired which would be useful in the operation of such exchange and to render such other service in the sale and distribution of farm products through such exchange as it would be practicable to render.

The Secretary of Agriculture, as rapidly as possible, shall provide standards as to quality, and, where practicable, as to containers of agricultural products not heretofore standardized and subject to subsequent standardization by Congress.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall keep advised as nearly as practicable of the details of the quantity, quality, location, and price at which held of agricultural products and the volume and location or demand in the United States and abroad and the price at which such products may be sold, and shall make such information available to producers and purchasers of such products and to the general public and shall endeavor to bring about such system in the sale and distribution of farm products as shall eliminate the waste and extremes in prices resulting from the present lack of system therein and from the undue influence of price manipulation in relation thereto.

Those desiring to offer products for sale through such exchange may do so by grade or by sample, delivered to such exchange under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe. Those desiring to purchase farm products may in like manner submit offers to purchase, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to endeavor to establish trading relationship between those desiring to purchase and those desiring to sell and to procure the transfer of title and possession under such sales as may be effected at points along the natural line of movement of farm products moving to points of consumption and to direct such movement so that such products shall move as nearly as practicable from the first point of concentration to the point of ultimate need by the shortest and most economical route and in quantity and quality in accord therewith. And to this end may designate points for inspection and of delivery, and shall exercise such intermediary inspection and supervision of delivery as shall inspire general confidence in the integrity of transactions consummated through such exchanges.

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to require such deposits in money, such bonds, or other guaranties of compliance with the obligation to deliver according to tender, or to receive and pay according to offer, as in his judgment may be necessary to insure compliance with the contracts made through such exchange.

All information furnished by such exchange shall not be at a higher cost than that necessary to pay the expenses of transmission.

No charges shall be made to individual producers or to producers' organizations for services rendered in effecting sales of products grown by them or by their members, as the case may be.

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish such additional rules and regulations governing transactions through such exchange and the service rendered by such exchange as in his discretion may be deemed necessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all necessary expenses for enforcing the provisions of the migratory-bird treaty act of July 3, 1918 (Public, No. 186, 65th Cong.), and for cooperation with local authorities in the connection of migratory birds, and for necessary investigations connected therewith, $147,000: Provided, That of this sum not more than $22,000 may be used for the enforcement of sections 241, 242, 243, and 244 of the act approved March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," and for the enforcement of section 1 of the act approved May 25, 1900, entitled "An act to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture, prohibit the transportation by interstate commerce of game killed in violation of local laws, and for other purposes," including all necessary investigations in connection therewith.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to this paragraph which carries an appropriation of $147,000 for the purpose of enforcing the migratory game law, whether anyone has ever been convicted under the provisions of that law?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know about that. Of course the Supreme Court has dismissed the case which came to it from one of the lower courts on the migratory game law itself. This is the first time that we have appropriated anything for the purpose of enforcing the migratory game treaty provision. I did not make any inquiry about it. There have been convictions, because these cases have come to the Supreme Court.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The statement of the gentleman leads to another inquiry. I have not followed the recent decisions of the Supreme Court on this subject. The gentleman's statement that an appeal from the Supreme Court was dismissed does not tell me whether the court held the law valid or invalid.

Mr. LEVER. The Supreme Court did not pass on that, as the law had been superseded by another.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As far as I know, the lower courts have uniformly held the law to be invalid.

Mr. LEVER. I think there was a conflict there. One court held it valid and another invalid. I think there has been a conflict as to that, but not on this proposition. Of course that was the migratory game law, and not the migratory game treaty for which this item provides.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, this is for the purpose of enforcing the law, as I understand, which was passed for the purpose of carrying out this treaty?

Mr. LEVER. That is true. The enforcement of this act will not begin until the next fiscal yeor.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very true; but they have been trying to enforce this same law—well, not the same law but a similar law?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. They have been enforcing the law which Congress passed and which one of the lower courts held to be unconstitutional and another court to be constitutional. One case finally came to the Supreme Court, but the migratory bird treaty was entered into, so the Supreme Court dismissed the case.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All I care to say in this connection is it is an utter waste of money, because nothing is accomplished by it.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the gentleman what is purposed in the expenditure of this large appropriation of $147,000 for the enforcement of the provisions of the migratory bird treaty with Great Britain?

Mr. LEVER. Seventy-five thousand dollars of that will be used for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is purposed in the minutia of the enforcement of that treaty? Is it intended to employ game wardens throughout the entire country?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. And under the guise of this treaty try to enforce the migratory bird law?

Mr. LEVER. Exactly. This will enable them to employ more game wardens than they have had under the old law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the former law we only appropriated something like $50,000.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; we increase it $25,000.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will yield to the gentleman for further information.

Mr. RUBEY. The department have always asked a larger sum than we have allowed. A year ago they asked for $100,000 for the enforcement of the law, and the committee or the House, I forget which, cut it down to $50,000. They have always asked for a larger appropriation than we have allowed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give any information as to what is planned by the department in the enforcement of the law under the guise of this treaty?

Mr. LEVER. As I understand it, they intend simply to increase their force of game wardens and pursue the same policy of enforcing this act as they have been doing in reference to the act under which a case was dismissed by the Supreme Court.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Missouri says that the department has heretofore requested a much larger amount than was granted.

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the department requested a larger amount this year for the enforcement of the treaty?

Mr. LEVER. The department asked for an appropriation of $125,000 for that purpose, and we gave $75,000. We cut it $50,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the section; it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, it is not subject to the point of order; it is existing law.

Mr. CURRY of California. It is existing law?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. CURRY of California. Then, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. LEVER. And upon that I ask that all debate close in six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in six minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, make it 10 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will make it 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 12 minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, I do not care about taking up the time of the committee so late this afternoon on a matter of this kind. Every person understands the section, what it refers to, why it is there, and why it ought not to be there. They are opposed to it or else they are in favor of it. I think a mistake was made in approving the treaty between Great Britain and the United States in reference to birds that migrate betweeen Canada and this country. It has not resulted in any good, but it has resulted in bad local conditions.

Birds do the farmer some good, or at least the insectivorous birds do; but most of them are not migratory or do not migrate between Canada and the United States. Birds also do the farmer much harm. They carry and spread wheat smut, citrus canker and scale, pear blight, and domestic animal diseases.

In the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys in California wild ducks and geese destroy millions of dollars worth of grain, particularly wheat and rice. The Secretary of Agriculture, on application, may issue licenses to farmers injured by wild birds to shoot them on his farm or ranch, but the farmer is prohibited from selling, giving away, or transporting the birds they shoot. The result is that millions of ducks and geese rot on the ground of the ranches where they are shot.

The States themselves are in a better position to legislate on migratory birds and as to the time of the open and closed season than this Congress is. The California game laws protect all wild birds, except game birds, during the open season; that is, the killing of all birds except game birds named in the act is prohibited all the time and game birds can only be shot during the open season. Giving Congress the right to enact game laws is a centralization of power that is unwarranted and that a few years ago would not have been attempted. This treaty never should have been ratified in the first place. It has been adopted, and it was done for two purposes only—one to protect the game for the gentlemen sportsmen from the cities and the other was a surrender to the theorists and idealists of the Audubon Society. They both worked together and they worked this proposition through Congress. It is not in the interest of the people at all. It is only in the interest of a theory and idea and in the interest of the rich man in large cities who can afford to own preserves and employ men to go out there and stock the preserves with feed for the game. It is not in the interest of the public. Therefore I have made the motion to strike out the section.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I disagree entirely with the gentleman from California. The States are absolutely not in a position to legislate in regard to migratory birds, and neither is one country alone. The great migratory game birds, like the ducks and the geese, as I have said before on several occasions, do not belong to this country. If a person lives where his home is, then the ducks, most of them, live really in Canada. That is where they raise their young. They come down into the United States and spend the winter, just like our rich people go to Florida or to California.

Mr. CURRY of California. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. PLATT. But the ducks and geese are a comparatively small part of the birds which are protected by the treaty. There are hundreds of varieties, or at least something over 100 species, of migratory birds that are small and that are of great economic use in destroying insects. And many of those birds nest in Canada. Many simply pass through the United States and go way down to South America in winter, some as far as Brazil and the Argentine.

I have already spoken several times on the subject of migratory birds, and I do not want to take up too much of the time of the House on that subject. Migratory birds rest sometimes only over a day or a night in a State, or they fly to it and perhaps spend a few weeks there. I have amused myself every spring by going out into the woods and fields with members of the Audubon Society and others in order to see how many birds I could identify. There are some that pass through rapidly. If you do not happen to see them in a certain week in April or May, you are not likely to see them during the whole year, unless you catch them on their return in the fall, when they are silent and do not sing and are generally harder to identify.

Mr. CURRY of California. Does not the gentleman know that more ducks and geese nest in California and Oregon than in Canada, and that the ducks and geese destroy millions of dollars' worth of cereals—wheat and rye—in that State, and that while the farmers are permitted to kill the ducks, if possible, to keep them off their ranches, they are not permitted to sell or give away or transport them? And there are millions upon millions of ducks and geese in the State of California that are killed and allowed to lie right on the ground simply on account of this law.

Mr. PLATT. If they are allowed to kill them they should be allowed to dispose of them. There are ducks and geese that nest in this country. But the great bulk of migratory ducks and geese to-day nest in Canada and along the northern border of the United States. A few species are nearly entirely resident in the United States. But the mallards and the canvasbacks and the most of the ducks that we see down here on the Potomac nest in Canada.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has made a study of this subject and is much better informed than I am; but I had supposed that every State in the Union forbade the killing of song and insectivorous birds, and that there was not any necessity of further legislation on that subject. I do not understand that the national game wardens pay any attention to that part of the law.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman is mistaken. For instance, take the bobolink. The bird we call the bobolink in the North, where he nests, is a rather famous song bird. After the nesting season he migrates down here into Maryland and Virginia and changes his plumage, and in the fall of the year is called a "reed bird." Then he looks entirely different, and before the Lacey Act was passed thousands of reed birds used to be shot by pot hunters to be served on our tables here in Washington and elsewhere. "Reed birds on toast" were to be found in every high-priced restaurant. The States did not generally prohibit the destruction of these birds, but as a rule their protection was made effective through the enforcement of the national law, at first by the Lacey Act, which has recently been superseded by the migratory bird act. There used to be also thousands of little birds of brilliant plumage, little warblers, killed to ornament women's hats.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Speaking of birds being destructive of farm crops, the gentleman knows, I presume, that the authorities on that subject say that there is only one bird, the English sparrow, that does more harm than good?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know that even the English sparrow does more harm than good, though we have more of them than we need in most cities; but I understand there are certain species of hawks that do more harm than good. It has been conclusively shown, however, that most hawks do more good than harm. You will find down in the Biological Survey of the Department of Agriculture there are experts who spend all their time examining through microscopes the contents of the stomachs of birds. These men can determine what kind of a caterpillar a bird has been eating; and they can make a pretty close estimate of how many worms or bugs in a day or in a year a certain kind of bird eats, and how many seeds of a certain kind a bird has been eating, and so can determine pretty clearly whether it does good and how much good it does.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Referring to the destructiveness on the part of birds of agricultural products, has the gentleman any knowledge of how much the birds save by their destruction of insects and other pests which afflict vegetation?

Mr. PLATT. I have seen various estimates. They certainly save millions and millions of dollars' worth.

Mr. FESS. More than they destroy?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; vastly more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. The next paragraph will provoke some discussion, and I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that, having covered two-thirds of the bill, it might be an opportune place for the committee to rise.

Mr. LEVER. I will be very glad to make the motion to rise. The committee has been very kind, and there is a prospect that we can get through to-morrow. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15018) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW—11 O'CLOCK A. M.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WINGO, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the day on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order made, until to-morrow, Friday, January 31, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

JACKSON, TENN.

Whereas the extraordinary problems produced by the war and the coming reconstruction period render it extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the owners of the great wire systems now under Federal control to successfully resume the operation of the same without remedial legislation and the provision of some reasonable period in which to allow for the necessary preparation and readjustment; and

Whereas to properly consider these problems will require more time than is available during the present short session of Congress; and

Whereas unless some action is taken at this time the properties will be returned to the owners upon proclamation by the President of the ratification of peace treaties, without any advance notice and without any period for readjustment; and

Whereas this would clearly be a manifest injustice to the owners thereof and a menace to the business interests of the country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this organization, the Jackson Association of Commerce, go on record as favoring the enactment by Congress of some law which will continue the control and operation of such utilities by the Government until Congress shall have studied the question and determined upon a proper and safe procedure to be thereafter followed.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators of this State and to the Representative of this district.

COMMUNITY CLUB,
Gallatin, Tenn.

Whereas the great wire systems now under Federal control will be returned to the owners upon the proclamation of the President of the ratification of the peace treaties; and

Whereas sufficient time is not available during the present short session of Congress for the proper consideration and solution of this great question as to what is the best course to take; and

Whereas it would clearly be a manifest injustice to the public, the employees, and to the owners, as well as a menace to the business interests of the country, without some remedial legislation and the provision of some reasonable period in which to allow the study and careful consideration by Congress of a matter of such great importance and to make necessary arrangements and preparation for the readjustments that are sure to come in the proper settlement of this question: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the board of directors of the Community Club, of Gallatin, Tenn., go on record as favoring the enactment of some law by the present Congress which will continue the control and operation of such utilities by the Government until Congress shall have studied the question thoroughly and determined upon some proper and safe procedure to be thereafter followed; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators of this State and to the Representative of this district.

Mr. THOMAS. I present two joint memorials of the Senate and House of the Legislature of Colorado on the subject of the drainage of the San Luis Valley in southern Colorado and for the adoption of reclamation projects for the benefit of returning soldiers and sailors, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The memorials were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
STATE OF COLORADO,
Denver, January 27, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am transmitting herewith one certified copy each of house joint memorials Nos. 2 and 3, in accordance with the terms thereof.

Respectfully,

HARRY P. MASON, Chief Clerk.

House joint memorial 2.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, respectfully represent that—

Whereas in the San Luis Valley, in southern Colorado, are 600,000 acres of excellent agricultural land that has become so water-logged for the want of drainage that one-half of it has become entirely unproductive and the other one-half largely so; and

Whereas prior to the time that these lands become water-logged they were occupied, cultivated, had an established record of great production, and have decreed water rights already available under constructed systems of distribution; and

Whereas the drainage of this land would release a very large amount of water, greatly enhancing the supply in the Rio Grande River for repeated use below; and

Whereas the situation in this area is such that little, if any, of the added supply of water gained from such drainage could be used in Colorado, but would be of vast benefit to the lands in New Mexico and Texas; and

Whereas surveys and sufficient drainage work has been accomplished in this locality to show that the project is not only feasible but that the supply of water returned would be so great as to make its value to the Government, cost considered, greater than any reclamation project so far constructed by it: Now, therefore,

Your memorialists, believing this to be a truly interstate enterprise of as much benefit to lands beyond our borders as it is to those within our State, most urgently recommend that the Reclamation Service be authorized and directed to proceed with the drainage of the San Luis Valley without delay.

It is directed that this memorial be enrolled and one copy sent to the President of the United States, one copy to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, one copy to the House chairman of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, one copy to the Senate chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, and one copy to the Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Colorado.

This is to certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint memorial 2, as passed by the Senate and House of Represenatives of the State of Colorado.

HARRY P. MASON,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of Colorado.

House joint memorial 3.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the honorable Secretary of the Interior has requested the immediate passage of a bill appropriating the sum of $100,000,000 to be employed on reclamation projects for the benefit of returning soldiers and sailors; and

Whereas such an undertaking is not only commendable as a practical recognition of a patriotic service rendered, but alike meritorious, in that it would place unproductive land in the productive lists, a distinctly governmental function: Now, therefore

Your memorialists do advise, recommend, and request that the measure herein referred to be passed by your honorable body with the celerity that its merit justifies, and thus meet a situation that has already arisen, the importance of which is being daily emphasized at every American port of debarkation.

It is directed that this memorial be enrolled and one copy sent to the President of the United States, one copy to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, one copy to the House chairman of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, one copy to the Senate chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, one copy to the Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Colorado.

This is to certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of House joint memorial No. 3, as passed by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Colorado.

HARRY P. MASON,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of Colorado.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 7.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there are many wives and families of soldiers and sailors in the State of Oregon who have failed to receive from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance of the Treasury Department of the Federal Government the allotments made unto them by said soldiers and sailors; and

Whereas many policies of insurance have been taken out by soldiers and sailors which have not been delivered by said bureau to the beneficiaries therein provided for; and

Whereas said bureau has in numerous instances either failed to answer inquiries of such beneficiaries with respect to allotments or policies of insurance and in many other instances have been dilatory and unsatisfactory in their responses, notwithstanding the fact that said bureau has a sufficiently large clerical force, reported to be in excess of 14,000 clerks and assistants; and

Whereas such conduct of said bureau would appear to be inexcusable and due to an unjustifiable system of red tape, apparent incapacity, and incompetency: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress and the Congress of the United States of America be, and they are hereby, memorialized and requested to cause an investigation to be made as to the conduct of said bureau with respect to the matters aforesaid and to determine and fix the responsibility therefor, and that thereupon proper legislation be enacted to increase the efficiency of said department and to expedite the business thereof; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be, and he is hereby, directed to forward a copy of this joint memorial to each Senator and Representative from Oregon in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the senate January 23, 1919.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house January 21, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

I hereby certify that the foregoing house joint memorial 7 is a true copy as passed by the house and senate as above indicated.

W. F. DRAGER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I also present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 1.

Whereas in 1894 the United States Government caused to be issued trust patents to the Indians to certain lands in the Siletz Indian Reservation, in Lincoln County, State of Oregon, with the provision and understanding that at the expiration of 25 years fee simple patents would issue to the Indian allottees in lieu of said trust patents; and

Whereas the 25-year period mentioned in the said trust patent has expired; and

Whereas the Indians on said former Siletz Reservation are practically all educated and competent to manage their own affairs, and all Government schools have been abandoned on said Indian reservation, and the Indians are attending the public schools of the county, situated on said reservation, which are kept up by taxes imposed upon the taxpayers of the State and county; and

Whereas said Indians are subject to the civil courts and practically all the criminal business concerning said Indians is had in the civil courts of Lincoln County, Oreg., at the cost of the taxpayers thereof; and

Whereas the said allotted Indian lands are not taxable, and the approximate valuation of said Indian lands is about $2,000,000, and the cost and burden of Government has been transferred from the United States to State and county government; and

Whereas the people are taxed for the purpose of building roads through these lands, and the State and county receive no benefit whatever from said lands: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring), That we respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact a law authorizing and directing that patents in fee simple be issued to all the allottees of Indian lands or their heirs to whom trust patents were issued to lands within the boundaries of the former Siletz Indian Reservation, in Lincoln County, Oreg.

Adopted by the Senate January 23, 1919.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the House January 15, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

I hereby certify that House joint memorial No. 1 is a true copy as passed by the house and senate as above indicated.

W. F. DRAGER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

DEMOBILIZATION OF TROOPS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have received several letters in reference to the demobilization of troops, urging that the troops be sent to their homes before discharge. I received a letter from the secretary of the soldiers' and sailors' placement bureau regarding this matter. I referred it to the War Department. I think the answer of the War Department would be of considerable interest not only to my section of the country but elsewhere. So I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD. It explains the situation quite fully from the standpoint of the War Department.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, January 28, 1919.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Secretary of War directs me to acknowledge receipt of your communication of January 24, 1919, inclosing a telegram from Mr. Frank Gages, secretary soldiers' and sailors' placement bureau, urging discharge of soldiers at their homes rather than near a large city, and to advise you that this matter has been given careful consideration by the War Department.

In order to accomplish what Mr. Gages suggests it would be necessary to establish at or near the homes of the men the necessary facilities for demobilization, including medical and other personnel for the purpose of preparing records, conducting physical examinations, and making final payment, and in addition maintaining facilities for housing and feeding men and furnishing hospital treatment, if necessary, while the soldiers were awaiting discharge.

To discharge men at a camp and send them to their homes for the receipt of their discharge certificate and final payment is unauthorized. The soldier is entitled to his discharge certificate and final payment at place of discharge. To discharge soldiers in camp and deliver their discharge certificates to them at that place and to send them to their homes for payment is equally unauthorized, since it infringes upon the rights of freedom of action of the discharged soldier, who may, as a matter of fact, desire to go to some place other than his home.

The suggestion has been received from time to time that the local draft boards might be utilized for the purpose of demobilization. You can readily understand that if the War Department, after the careful consideration which it has given to this problem, found that by handling demobilization through these instrumentalities the discharge of soldiers would be facilitated and the interests of the men and the Government would be protected, this method would have been utilized. It is believed, however, that the contrary is true. Under this system there would be as many demobilization centers as there are local draft boards, each with a more or less elaborate overhead, depending upon the number of men to be discharged.

The best solution, which was considered not only lawful but practicable, was considered to be arrived at by placing the men in a camp already established in or nearest the State from which they entered the service and there discharging them. This plan places men so near their homes that they may easily return thereto if they so desire.

An officer from the War Department recently visited Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J., which is located a short distance from New York City, and there found that of 1,200 men discharged in one day whose homes were within a radius of 350 miles of Camp Dix, 805 purchased their railroad tickets to place of induction or enlistment immediately after receiving their pay, the ticket office being at one end of the pay room. All men whose payment was witnessed had ample funds remaining after purchasing their tickets to pay all legitimate expenses.

It is appreciated that many men who have had the attractions of a large city unfolded before their eyes for the first time have a natural desire to see them. This is common to all men. It is believed, however, that those whose homes have been attractive to them, or those who have positions awaiting them at their homes, will in most cases return to their homes. On the other hand, it is quite reasonable to suppose that many young men who have been away from home for the first time and have found other places more attractive to them will not return to their former surroundings at all, while some, if they do return to their former homes, will not remain there permanently. It is believed that this condition could not altogether be modified, even though men were sent to their home towns and there discharged.

Thanking you for bringing this matter to the attention of the War Department, and assuring you that the present plan of demobilization was not arrived at until it was viewed from all angles, and with the interests of the Government, the soldier, and the general public in mind, I remain,

Sincerely, yours,

E. D. ANDERSON,
Brigadier General, General Staff.
Acting Director of Operations.

LETTER FROM FREDERICK A. BUSHEE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have received the following letter from one of my constituents in Colorado, and I deem it my duty to read it into the RECORD:

I was much surprised to see my name included in the list of persons holding "radical or pacifist views," which Mr. Stevenson presented to the Senate committee. Permit me to say that there is absolutely no reason for such a charge against me. I consider it a slander, and I want the matter made right. As Mr. Stevenson can not substantiate such a charge with any reasonable evidence, he should publicly retract his statement. I have been strongly proally from the beginning of the war and have been an ardent supporter of the war, and shortly after we entered the contest I offered my services to the Government. As to the question of radical views, I hold just about as radical views as President Wilson does. I voted for President Wilson and have actively supported him throughout his administration; and when Mr. Stevenson puts my name in a list of suspected persons he does not know what he is talking about. The Senate has no business to permit names to be printed as suspicious when they know no more about them than they evidently do about me.

* * * * * * *

I ask that you investigate this matter and if possible have my name taken from the list and set the matter right before the public. The error is likely to do me and the University of Colorado much harm.

The letter is signed by Frederick A. Bushee, who is a professor in the department of economics and sociology in the university of my State. I am not acquainted with Dr. Bushee, but I have a letter from Dr. Willard, of the department of history, whom I know very well and who testifies to the loyalty and political integrity of Dr. Bushee.

I should add that a day or two ago I called this letter to the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee having these investigations in charge, and he will insert it in the record of the investigations.

I do not care to comment further upon the incident, except to say that in view of the attitude taken by the Secretary of War regarding Stevenson, it would seem that that gentleman allowed his enthusiasm to get away with his judgment.

Dak., and providing additional requirements for the bridge to be constructed, and I submit a report (No. 673) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge authorized by section 1 of the act of Congress approved April 28, 1916, are hereby extended two and five years, respectively, from April 28, 1917.

SEC. 2. That if the bridge built under the provisions of said act shall be found, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, to be so construed that it does not reasonably meet the requirements for continuous and uninterrupted railroad traffic, then and in such event, he may order such changes as in his judgment may be necessary to make said bridge meet such requirements. All the privileges herein conferred and the right to maintain the bridge to be built hereunder shall cease and determine unless such changes as the Secretary of War shall direct shall be commenced within six months and completed within two years next following the date of service of such order.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERKS.

Mr. CALDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 432), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate resolution No. 75, agreed to on April 3, 1918, being a resolution authorizing the employment of an additional clerk by each Senator having no more than one clerk, one assistant clerk, and one messenger for himself or for the committee of which he is chairman for the remainder of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, at the rate of $100 per month, said compensation to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, and which said resolution was extended and continued, under authority of Senate resolution No. 328, agreed to on November 15, 1918, until the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, further extended and continued in full force and effect until otherwise provided by law.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if it is at this time in order, two or three days ago I gave notice that at the conclusion of the morning business the first day when the morning hour was observed I would submit some remarks to the Senate upon the subject of the reorganization of the Army.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business, the morning business is closed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the time has come when Congress, the War Department, and the people must give serious thought to the reorganization of our military forces, if not to defining the future military policy of the country. That the War Department realizes the truth of this is evidenced by the fact that it several days ago submitted a plan for reorganization to the House of Representatives. After a brief discussion, which developed marked differences of opinion concerning its merits, the subject was passed over to the next Congress, which is well enough, for it is manifest that insufficient time remains of this session to digest and adopt a plan. Until Congress acts we must retain a considerable portion of our present force. In creating the Army now in the field it was expressly provided that it was for the emergency only, and that the period of service should be limited to a date four months after the signing of the declaration of peace, or as early as transportation home could be supplied the troops overseas. When this proclamation may be issued is of course a matter of doubt. It may be months away or it may come much sooner; events alone can determine that. It now appears that it is not imminent; but, Mr. President, 90 days ago there were few who anticipated the imminence of the armistice. Whenever it comes, the men now under arms have a right to assume that the law will be respected and observed and their Government's contract with them lived up to. If it is not, I fear we shall find ourselves with a dissatisfied and discontented lot of soldiers and, to put it mildly, an indignant and protesting lot of parents and wives in every walk of life from which those soldiers were drawn. Without reference to final proclamations, they all consider the war as over; they want their soldiers sent home, and any alteration of plans which will result in holding the boys in the ranks for a protracted period is not going to be received with favor. It will be well to bear that in mind.

But in the absence of a plan it is proposed, according to announcement, to provide by a paragraph in one of the bills yet to be considered authority for the President to retain indefinitely "as much of the present armed forces as he sees fit." I have not had opportunity to read the bill. The details of this proposition, assuming that there may be details, have not been given out, but if they work to the annulment of the four months' contract I unhesitatingly venture the prediction that they will prove far from popular either with the Army or the folks back home. Whenever the time comes for discharging the conscripted men and those who volunteered for the emergency there will remain in the Army of the United States only those who were in the Regular Army previous to April 6, 1917, and whose terms of enlistment have not then expired, a force utterly inadequate to cope with any real emergency, for the maintenance of a sufficient force in our island possessions and the Canal Zone, to govern our established posts, and to patrol the border.

Obviously, therefore, the adoption of a well-defined scheme to rehabilitate our armed forces is a prime necessity. And this brings me to what must be a very superficial consideration of the plan presented to the House committee. I have already said that I have not been privileged to read the bill, and I shall therefore confine myself to those features of it which have been given to the public through the newspapers and which I assume to have been correctly stated. Initially it provides for an army of more than half a million men—509,909, to be exact. Mr. President, I have always been and am still a believer in and advocate of real military preparedness. The enormous and excessive cost, the loss of time, and the unnecessary hardships to the men encountered in our latest effort, conceding to it the fullest measure of success to which it is entitled, all strengthen my conviction that preparedness is the part of wisdom. I believe with our greatest American tactician, Gen. Upton, who said in effect that "the nation which goes to war unprepared educates its statesmen at greater expense than its soldiers." But, sir, preparedness does not necessarily imply the permanent maintenance of a great standing army. For one, I do not believe an army of anything approaching the size of that contemplated in the War Department bill is either necessary or desirable. Moreover, unless I entirely misconceive the temper of the people of the United States, they will not have it; and, if they would, I do not believe it even remotely possible to obtain anything like a volunteer army of that size unless indeed we are to pay our soldiers a wage that would make the maintenance of such a force too burdensome from the standpoint of operating cost. The cost of maintaining such an army on the basis of the present emergency pay will reach $797,000,000; on the basis of pay before the war $713,000,000, while the total expense of the universal military training plan would be only about $450,000,000 for the training of 700,000 men annually.

But that, after all, is not the most serious objection to it. The chief objection is that it smacks too much of that very militarism which is righteously abhorrent to our national ideals and which we have denounced from every stump and housetop in the country. That is an army approximately as great as that maintained in the permanent establishment of Germany prior to its entrance upon the world war. It may be that the Secretary of War, who presented the bill, does not mean that a force of the size contemplated shall be made permanent; that he thinks the present extraordinary emergency is to endure indefinitely, and that the army to be thus created is to meet this condition only; but if that be the case it is a mere expedient. Even in that event it would partake largely of the character of a professional army.

What is needed is a fixed and permanent policy, something real, something at once definite, effective, sufficient. And, Mr. President, I confidently believe that this is easily attainable. In my opinion it is readily and comparatively inexpensively obtained through the adoption of the policy of universal military training.

Mr. President, the public mind needs to be disabused of whatever impression prevails in it that universal military training presupposes a large standing army. On the contrary, it presupposes the exact opposite. In case of war, it follows as a necessary sequence that the young men of the country must comprise its armies. Universal military training guarantees that the youth who is to be conscripted or who shall volunteer in such a case shall go prepared for the various phases of the ordeal he is to face rather than that he shall be taken unprepared and unfit. It provides the only guaranty against any occasion for the maintenance of a Regular Army of greater proportions than the country needs or is willing to support. Under the operation of this system the soldier is in reality a citizen, free to follow his chosen vocation except for the period required for his proper training. We should have at all times something like 200,000 men capable of being officers. This is about the number we have had in this war. They can be developed under the universal training system, and like the enlisted personnel they may be passed into a reserve force, subject to instant call if occasion requires.

At this moment the country is in condition to develop such a policy at less expense and to better advantage than ever before. The cantonments necessary are already in existence, and at comparatively small expense may be made to answer our needs for several years. To be sure there may be, and doubtless will be, some expense attached, in some instances, for the purchase of lands now under lease; but comparatively speaking, the outlay will not be great. We have great surplus stores of clothing, arms, munitions, much of which will deteriorate and become worthless within a short time and be a total loss if not used, and it might better be employed to a useful purpose than permitted to go to waste.

Far be it from me to detract by a single word from the amazing accomplishments of the American forces on land and sea in the great world war. Every American citizen feels a towering pride in all they did. Neither is it my present purpose to indulge in criticisms of administrations or of individuals for the lamentable state of unpreparedness in which our entrance into the war found us, but it is a matter of common knowledge and infinite regret that we were unprepared. Speaking in this Chamber a few days ago, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania made reference to troops from that State who were sent into battle without having been previously taught the use of the weapons they bore. What is true of them is equally true of the troops from other States. Few of them had ever seen machine guns until they were forced to face them, so few that it was pathetic. It was the inevitable consequence of our smug complacency. It could have been prevented in this instance; it must be in the next, if there is to be a next, and no idealistic dreams of leagues of peace and the brotherhood of man convey guaranties that there will not be, and even if made, no league of nations can be made effective without a force sufficient to enforce its decrees. Unless occasion comes, the citizen army need never be mobilized, but its members will have had the benefits that accrue from judiciously applied physical training, of discipline, and the improved conception of the obligations of citizenship that military training brings.

Mr. President, by the passage of legislation providing for the selective draft we affirmed the military obligation of our citizens. They are under the obligation to fight for our country in its need, but under this obligation they have acquired correlative rights; their fathers, their mothers, their children, and their wives demand that we shall not send them naked and untrained against the foe.

We have proclaimed their obligations. I affirm their right of preparation to fulfill those obligations.

We are now called upon to pass emergency legislation to meet the military conditions abroad. We are called upon to replace emergency legislation by further emergency legislation, but with the expiration of this emergency the provisions of the new legislation must also expire. As matters stand to-day, within four months after the date of the proclamation of peace we shall have no army. Extend the provisions of the existing law, and again there will come a date when the system created by it will cease by legislative limitation. Let us confront the facts. We do not know what obligations are being prepared for us in Paris, but we do know that we have duties toward ourselves and toward posterity. It may be well to make the world safe for democracy. Let us first make it safe for ourselves.

On February 7, 1918, the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Glass, stated in the House of Representatives, of which he was then a Member, that—

> The truth of the matter is that for a century and a half we have emphasized the single warning of Washington against "entangling alliances abroad" and sadly neglected his admonition about a sane preparation against war. Our aversion to a large standing army is traditional and constitutional, bred in the blood and bone of successive generations. The whole policy of the Nation for all these years has been antagonistic to preparation. No one group of men is to blame. No one political party above another is to be censured. Indeed, now in 1918 some of the most frantic protestants against our plight share tremendously the responsibility for our condition.

This is a national issue, and I am firmly convinced that now—not at some nebulous future indeterminate date—is the time to come to a decision concerning our military policy for the future. To-day we can take advantage of the experience which has been gained and continue the application of its lessons. To-day we can come to a decision concerning the employment of the sites and material which during the present emergency has passed into the possession of the United States. Demobilize completely, and it will be too late. We shall have to start all over again, and I, for one, am not willing to permit the loss of what we have gained.

Mr. President, I would again repeat my opposition to a large professional army. Holding these views, I have prepared a bill providing for the adoption of a system of universal military training. I have given the subject much thought, and in the preparation of the bill have taken counsel of military men in whose judgment I place reliance, and yet I wish to frankly state that I regard the bill as the nucleus only for a complete system. If I may have unanimous consent for its introduction at this time, out of order, I will send it to the desk for reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, to which I would add that I shall in turn ask the committee to refer it to the General Staff of the Army, with the request that it make a detailed study of the subject and report it back to the committee as soon as it consistently can, with such amendments, alteration, or substitutions as it may deem necessary and consistent with the country's needs.

In conclusion I want to say that I thoroughly agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who said in his very admirable address of a few days ago that the general staff of the American Expeditionary Forces should be consulted with reference to this matter. They are the men who have commanded this great Army of ours and the only men living who have had the actual experience qualifying them to give dependable, expert opinion as to the real merits of this question. No plan that may be considered will be complete until it has been submitted to them, and I shall ask that they be consulted with reference to this one of mine in conjunction with the General Staff. It may not be necessary to await their return to the United States. Their recommendations may be forwarded here. Representatives of the General Staff may easily go over for conference with them and the courier service be employed for full and frequent exchange of views. It is unlikely that the question can be considered in the limited time remaining to this session, but I shall ask that the report shall in that case be made to the Military Affairs Committee of the next Senate in order that no time may be lost and the day for action thereby much advanced.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to know from the Senator whether in forming his judgment as to the size of the Military Establishment that should be maintained by the United States he has taken into consideration the recent developments at the Paris peace conference, by which it is proposed that the United States shall take over, as a sort of receiver or trustee, all of the German colonies, and, what is even more startling, I see by this morning's New York Tribune, a copy of which is lying here on my desk, that it is the plan of both Great Britain and France that the United States is to become the guarantor of the peace of the world, and that the peace of the world is to be maintained by the forces of the United States?

Mr. NEW. Well, Mr. President, I think if we are to engage in that kind of a program we shall need a system of universal military training to apply to a great many more than the oncoming youth and young manhood of the country.

Mr. President, I send to the desk the bill to which I have referred, and ask that it be printed at the conclusion of my remarks and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 5485) to provide for a system of universal military training and to improve the manhood and citizenship of the youth of the United States was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all male citizens over 18 years of age, or those persons who have declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States, capable of full or modified military service, shall be trained for the land and military forces of the United States for a single period of not to exceed one year, under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, That under no circumstances shall the training period be divided into two or more periods, but that such period as determined upon shall be continuous.

SEC. 2. That liability for training under this act shall not begin before the nineteenth year, and shall not terminate until the end of the twenty-sixth year, for all males liable under section 1 of this act, except for those who have taken their training in some one year of this period or who have been excused as hereinafter provided. Training should be given preferably in the first year in which liability for training becomes effective, i. e., the nineteenth year.

SEC. 3. That no one liable for training under section 1 of this act shall be excused from training unless he is the sole support of parents, wife, or child, and then only in the event that equivalent support to dependents is not provided by the Congress: Provided, That such equivalent shall represent the net contribution made to the support of dependents in the case of each youth liable under this act.

SEC. 4. That the President be, and hereby is, authorized to divide the territory of the United States into such training zones or districts as may be necessary for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized to appoint such boards as may be found to be necessary for the purpose of registering and examining all persons of training age, and that such boards, under regulations to be prescribed by the President, shall pass upon all applications for exemption from training for any particular year: Provided, That any person exempted is not relieved from liability under this act, but must come again at the next registration for examination, and if the disability under which he was first excused has disappeared he shall then be certified for training; but if this disability still obtains he is to be exempted as before, and so on until the end of the twenty-fifth year, when he shall automatically pass into the unorganized militia.

SEC. 6. That all persons trained under this act shall automatically become members of the national reserve, without compensation, upon the completion of training: Provided, That each class so graduated into the national reserve shall be given a number, and that the youngest class, in the event of necessity, be called first.

SEC. 7. That all members of the national reserve shall be liable to service by classes in time of war or other grave emergency, and that these classes be called in rotation, as provided in section 6 of this act.

SEC. 8. That the notice of the time and place of examination and training or service shall be deemed to have been made known to all persons liable under this act when such notice is issued by proclamation by the President, and shall be deemed sufficient to bring within its provisions and penalties all persons liable under this act.

SEC. 9. That training is a duty of citizenship, and no person liable under this act, while in training, shall receive pay, but shall be entitled to subsistence, clothing, transportation, laundry, medical attendance, shelter, and such other allowances as may from time to time be established: Provided, That a gratuity of $5 per month be, and hereby is, granted to each member while in training.

SEC. 10. That 20 per cent of commissioned and other grades necessary for training shall be permanent, but 80 per cent shall be temporary, and for not more than a period of three years: Provided, That all temporary grades for the training period shall be filled by appointment only from men that have had training as prescribed in this act: And provided further, That all persons serving in the land and naval forces since April 6, 1917, shall be considered as having had training as contemplated by this act: And provided further, That no temporary commission shall be to a higher grade than major or lieutenant commander.

SEC. 11. That at the end of all temporary service all commissioned, noncommissioned, and enlisted personnel shall be passed to the national reserve with the grade for which their individual service has demonstrated them to be fitted.

SEC. 12. That all members of the national reserve called to the colors for service shall receive transportation and subsistence to the point of mobilization, and from date of reporting at such mobilization center, and during the period of service, they shall receive the same pay and allowances as established for corresponding grades in the regular land and naval forces.

SEC. 13. That any person or persons, combination of individuals, corporation, firm, partnership, or association evading, aiding, or abetting in the evasion of any provision of this act shall be considered guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction by a competent tribunal therefor shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. NEW. No; I thought the Senator desired to ask me a question.

Mr. LODGE. I was going to ask a question in connection with what the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has said. I have seen these dispatches, and apparently we are going to take a part in managing the German colonies in South Africa and also the Pacific Islands. I wanted to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, as he asked his question in regard to the Army, whether he understands that we are to use American troops to keep order in the Kameruns and in East Africa?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly. Otherwise how could we maintain order? Those people can not be ruled by moral suasion.

Mr. LODGE. Well, the conception is that we are going to rule them by moral suasion, I suppose, is it not?

Mr. KNOX. That perhaps may be the theory; but we all know that in uncivilized countries, such as those that have been mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts, force is the only factor by which peace can be really and permanently secured, and, besides, it is not a question of the number of troops we may have to send to the German colonies in South Africa. It is avowed here in this dispatch, which is signed by Arthur S. Draper and published in the New York Tribune of this morning, that—

The situation is as follows:

1. Great Britain and France, especially the former, are working to get America committed to the policy of expansion and endeavoring to shoulder upon the United States a large measure of the responsibility for preserving world peace.

2. The European great powers are strongly supporting the league-of-nations scheme, because through it they see the possibility of drawing America out of what they term her "splendid isolation."

3. Territorial questions have become of secondary importance to the European great powers. The same is true of indemnities.

4. Russia is the allies' great worry. America their greatest hope, bolshevism and the general unrest of Europe being the predominating influences in the peace congress.

5. The Far Eastern question is hardly less difficult of solution than the remaking of Europe.

One can scarcely read this without reaching the conclusion that if it is true it is the purpose of the allied powers not only to allow us to conduct operations in the German colonies and take them over under a trusteeship or receivership, as I said a moment ago, but that the burden of the maintenance of the peace of the world is to rest upon us. If that is true, of course, there is no army which this country could raise that would be sufficient for such a purpose; and there is no burden of taxation that could be laid upon the people of the United States that would be adequate to maintain such a force.

I hope that these stories are not true; I can not believe, Mr. President, that they can be true; I can not believe that, without consulting the Congress of the United States, without consulting the members of the committees that have charge of these special matters, without consulting the people, the United States can be pledged to any such stupendous and preposterous undertakings.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question just at that point?

Mr. LODGE. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I merely wish to ask, admitting that the stories are true, does the Senator think it is remotely possible that the Senate shall be so neglectful of the interests of the American people as to approve a treaty containing such provisions?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to answer that question, of course, it is the wildest kind of guessing as to what the Senate will do. I have made a futile effort to try to get the Senate to express an opinion on two or three fundamental propositions to which I did not suppose there was any objection, but I can not even get the matter out of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I asked that question of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Of course, if the Senator from Indiana has not concluded, I will withhold what I was about to say.

Mr. NEW. I have concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I was glad that the Senator from Pennsylvania called attention to this matter. I have felt from the beginning that the important thing to do, the one thing to do, was to make the peace with Germany, and I was prepared to have the United States do everything that was necessary to carry out that peace. Instead of that the time has been spent over there in discussing questions not one of which has been essential to the making of peace with Germany, ending the war, getting a proclamation of peace, and enabling us to bring our men home and put an end to all this legislation which hinges on the proclamation of peace. And now, Mr. President, come these reports of the last two or three days, some of which seem to me absolutely unbelievable.

I know that the dispatches are colored, almost all of them colored for a certain defined purpose; and yet it seems incredible that some of the things should be pure invention. We apparently are being involved in some sort of guaranty, either with force or without force, to take care of the German possessions in Africa and in the Pacific Ocean. We seem to have involved ourselves already in serious differences with the Australians and the Boers of South Africa—populations with which we have always been most friendly and sympathetic. Our good relations with Australia are of enormous importance. I do not know exactly what we are doing, but we seem to be annoying them very much; and in some method we are apparently going to guarantee and sustain and watch over republics or States made up of Bantus and Hottentots, and we are to be meddling with it all the time in an indefinite future.

I do not think the safety of the world, or the making of peace, which is our first duty, is concerned very much with what happens in Africa and in New Guinea and in the Marshall Islands and in the Caroline Islands. We must protect our own interests there, which consists of the Island of Guam; that is a different thing; but apparently we are to be invited to take part in the management of all those territories.

I say these things with hesitation, because I do not know what the facts are. The Senate is kept absolutely in the dark. It has nothing to go upon except these casual dispatches; and I merely express this as the feeling of one person who takes a great interest in it, who wants to see peace made with Germany and proclaimed, and thus give us the opportunity to go to work here to readjust the really grave situation which exists in this country in regard to industry and business and bring the war to an end; and yet we are entertained with discussions about the Kamerun and New Guinea and quarrels with the Australians.

I wish we could have some explanation from an authoritative source.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat? I fully agree with the Senator that the primary duty of the conference in Paris is to settle the terms of a treaty of peace with Germany; but I want to ask the Senator whether he does not think that one of the indispensable elements involved in the making of that treaty is the disposition to be made of the German colonies?

Mr. LODGE. I think the German colonies ought to be taken away from Germany. I have said that over and over again.

Mr. THOMAS. I know the Senator has.

Mr. LODGE. And they can turn them over to the people who captured them, who are the Boers of South Africa, if the allies and the United States take the African colonies from Germany, or to the Australians, in the case of the South Sea colonies, under suitable guaranties. But should we hand them over to a league of nations not yet in existence, why should we be involved in guaranteeing them for an indefinite future?

Mr. THOMAS. Aside from that question, which is a debatable one, does the Senator think that these colonies should be arbitrarily disposed of to the particular nationalities which captured them?

Mr. LODGE. Personally, I think that all that concerns us is to see that they do not go back to Germany, and that in that way a barrier is established against German aggression.

Mr. THOMAS. But that is a common duty to every party to this treaty.

Mr. LODGE. But to say that we must see that they are properly disposed of is one thing; to make an agreement that we shall look after them for all the rest of time is another.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I am not entering into that subject at all. I do not know but that I am in sympathy with the Senator in regard to that, but one of the complications which seems to me to be immediately before this conference is the disposition that shall be made of these colonies and possessions, one of the most serious of which is the German principality in China, which was captured, as the Senator knows, very early in the war by Japan. Now, China demands the return of Kiaochow to her, not only upon the proposition that it is part of her territory but also upon the assurance of Japan that her purpose in wresting the colony from Germany was ultimately to restore it to China. Certainly the Senator will not go so far as to say that our commission in Paris is not interested in the disposition ultimately to be made of that important principality.

Mr. LODGE. Far from it, Mr. President. I think the question of China and Japan is one of the most momentous there is and concerns us in the most direct way. I have not mentioned that question at all.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not at all in sympathy, as I am now advised, with the notion that we are to enter into an agreement for administering these colonies, but I do think that the disposition of them is one of the vital elements entering into a treaty with Germany.

Mr. LODGE. I think we might dispose of them, and it seems to me that these wild tribes are to be under somebody's control. I do not believe they can form a government.

Mr. THOMAS. There is no question about that, in my judgment.

Mr. LODGE. My disposition would be to put them under the control of the South African Republic, but what I am objecting to is this launching out on an indefinite guaranty, we do not know exactly what, which involves eternal meddling in the affairs of Africa. There are other questions which concern us very nearly and which are of great moment and which will require all the strength we have and all the intelligence we have to deal with them, but I do not think New Guinea and South Africa are in that list.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we seem to be discussing this matter without sufficient information. I trust that the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Pennsylvania will realize that one of the most necessary things in regard to it is open negotiations, open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, so that we may know before we discuss the matter what the real facts are.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator does not mean to imply that we are not having open covenants?

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator to say that the trouble of it was that we did not know what the facts were.

Mr. LODGE. That is the trouble with me.

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely the trouble with the whole situation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I desire to call to the attention of the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Pennsylvania the very crux of this situation, and that is found in the communique that was yesterday given out by the peace conference in Paris. Permit me to read to you what it has to say, and permit me to call to the attention of my brethren upon the other side of the Chamber the knowledge that is accorded us of what is transpiring abroad. Here is the portion dealing with the German colonies and Turkey, concerning which, the correspondents assert, the most momentous decisions were made yesterday.

In the afternoon—

I am reading now the official communique—

In the afternoon satisfactory provisional arrangements were reached for dealing with the German colonies and the occupied territory in Turkey in Asia.

The Senate of the United States and the people of the United States are singularly fortunate in having the illuminating news sent by the delegation who represent democratic America that satisfactory arrangements yesterday were made by their peace commissioners in Paris. Just think of it, Mr. President, when we emblazon to the world that this democracy speaks with frankness, that it believes in open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, and that we will not tolerate under any circumstances secrecy in arriving at those peace terms, how fortunate we are to know that yesterday "satisfactory arrangements" were made for dealing with the German colonies and with Turkey in Asia. The correspondents tell us—I do not comment upon that, because I do not know whether it be accurate or not—that those satisfactory arrangements were that American troops should take care of these German colonies and should take care of Turkey in Asia.

I amount to little in this body; my voice will not carry far; but there will be one vote in this body when the treaty comes to us that never will vote for American troops to take care of Turkey in Asia or German colonies in Africa.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the discussion to which we have listened was precipitated by an inquiry addressed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] as to what increase we would need in our Military Establishment if the United States should undertake as the mandatory of the league of nations supervision of all the German colonies. I can not conceive that our commissioners at the peace conference will ever undertake to impose upon the Government of this country any such burden, and I apprehend that any alarm concerning any such condition as that will probably be found to be without much foundation.

But, Mr. President, it is not so serious a matter, so far as the Senator's question is concerned, as might seem, namely, the question of what increase in the Military Establishment would be requisite in such an event, because the governments controlling colonies in Africa practically supply only the officers of the military establishment they maintain there; the rank and file are native troops.

I had a very interesting interview with a distinguished English officer, who had fought in the Kamerun, while he was in this country recuperating from malaria which he had contracted in the English service in the war in that section. He tells me that all the English troops as well as all the German troops opposed to them were native blacks.

In "In the Fourth Year," by Mr. Wells, a book which has been repeatedly referred to in the discussion of the general question of a league of nations on the floor here, he adverts to the real peril that there exists to the world in the possible militarization of the natives of the Dark Continent. He says:

> The first most obvious danger of Africa is the militarization of the black. Gen. Smuts has pointed this out plainly. The negro makes a good soldier; he is hardy, he stands the sea, and he stands cold. (There was a negro in the little party which reached the North Pole.) It is absolutely essential to the peace of the world that there should be no arming of the negroes beyond the minimum necessary for the policing of Africa.

Mr. President, I do not advert to this condition of things for the purpose of making more tolerable the idea that we should become the mandatary over the African Provinces. I rather desire to suggest to the Senate that the solution of the troublesome problem of the German colonies in South Africa is nowhere near so simple as one might gather from the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Those colonies are adjacent to territory claimed by four rivals among the allies—Great Britain, Belgium, Portugal, and France. The Senator from Massachusetts would, were he intrusted with the duty of devising a plan for their disposition, solve it by turning them over to the Boer Republic. I apprehend that solution would be entirely unsatisfactory to either France, Belgium, or Portugal. I undertake to say that it would be rather difficult to divide up those territories in such a way as to be entirely satisfactory and quite objectionable to assign them all to any single power.

It may be that the plan of putting them in trusteeship may not work; but, Mr. President, if it should be entered upon I feel entirely confident that the American commissioners will assume no such burden as that for the United States, unless it is absolutely impossible to escape it. Doubtless some power more directly interested will be found ready to assume the responsibility.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, will he tell me on what authority he says France, Belgium, and Portugal would resist it?

Mr. WALSH. I do not say that they do.

Mr. LODGE. I mean resist giving East Africa to the Boer Republic?

Mr. WALSH. I do not say that they are resisting it. I say I apprehend that they would.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator said that they were.

Mr. WALSH. No; but the Germans have the Kameruns, and they have southwest Africa and southeast Africa.

Mr. LODGE. I understand, and the French will take control undoubtedly of some of these western colonies, the Kameruns, probably; but I have not heard that France or Portugal or Belgium were making any resistance at all. The objections that have been published in the papers—and I know how inaccurate dispatches are—state that Australia and South Africa are resenting very much this attempt to take the adjoining territories and put them in control of a league of nations, to be policed by the United States and other powers.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the Senator said so, but——

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that that is correct.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator seems to think that the disposition of the German-African colonies is a very simple matter. It would occur to me as a very troublesome problem.

Mr. LODGE. I do not say that it is a simple matter. I think it is one that should be decided without involving us in more negro problems.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg the Senate to indulge me for a contributive thought not particularly impressive, but which I feel should be stated as most appropriate.

It is very natural that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], indeed the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], however much they may have occasion to doubt the absolute accuracy of the reports, were influenced by them. This because it is natural that any of us would be influenced by first information we have which appears to come from an authoritative source.

Mr. President, I would not like to have the United States impressed with the belief at this time merely from these reports that Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, has really entered into any kind of a final understanding that would take one set of people without a voice from them in any way whatever and hurl them into some community lap as one would throw peas and potatoes in a market basket to be thereafter carted away and distributed to such beneficiaries as may bid for them.

One of the very fundamental doctrines which President Wilson announced to this body in the presence of both Houses as one of the basic things for which he purposed contending for in our name was that there should be no trading of peoples without a voice from them and no sovereign humanity bartered at the dictation of some people and transferred without a voice from them or an expression of their will in their behalf.

It may be as the report comes to us accurate that an arrangement has been made. I assert that if such be true it is one by which these people or these colonies are to be transferred to a form of temporary government spoken of as a league of nations. Mr. President, I will not subscribe at this time to the belief that the United States, through its emissaries, have really violated that fundamental, humane promise and pledge, which was given in behalf of this country time and time again, opposing the transfer of peoples to sovereignties not of their consent or concerning which they did not have a voice.

I rather beg to say that I assume, when we come to investigate this question, it will be found that what the agreement really is is that temporarily the administration of the colonies is transferred to the concentrated order or combination of nations called a league merely for the purpose of a temporary administration of a people now without head, government, or sponsors until there shall come the opportunity to make such disposition as their permanent welfare would disclose as necessary. I am unwilling for myself, Senators, to believe that at this time and up to this moment the United States has pledged itself to any permanent distribution of these colonies and the transfer of these people and of their fates into the hands of other nations without a voice from those who are affected and whose destinies are cast in the balance.

Mr. President, the eminent Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] called attention to a problem which, as he says, is brought about by the inquiry of the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] in respect to what military force would be called into action if we were to assume the administration or domination of these colonies.

Mr. President, I agree with the observation of the Senator from Montana. I do not feel the time will ever come when this Government will be called into the adoption of some military army for the purpose of administering these colonies of Germany or any other foreign territory.

There will come a time, Senators, as I behold it, when if there shall be an arrangement for the policing of nations and the avoiding of war, this for the entrenching and establishment of peace, to this purpose I urge that to each continent there be left the question of controlling its own local or internal affairs. For myself I certainly feel that now is the moment to say that there ought not to be any disposition on the part of America to indicate to the European or the Asiatic Hemispheres that we are ready to have either of those come into this continent and to merely police purely local difficulties and local disturbances on this continent, nor will we inject and intrude ourselves on other continents for similar purposes as against them.

I make bold to offer a suggestion for reflection, for I will not interfere more than a moment with the eminent chairman in control of the Post Office appropriation bill. It is this: Public report tells us that the German Navy is now in the balance as to the disposition of it. Let me suggest, sir, that instead of a military force being proposed as a police agency the German Navy be not given to any one of the victors, but that if the league of nations be constituted and be brought into action upon any permanent basis the German Navy be turned over to it as its police force, to be administered by it and used there in Europe or in a foreign continent wherever necessity would justify that use, and that that be the police agency. We thus neutralize that navy. It becomes no property of any one victor. It awakens none of the rivalry and resentment which will surely follow by attempting to give it to any one victor nation as against another.

By this we do not assume to distribute among ourselves other nations or peoples to control this navy. We leave this navy intact as a police power and avoid the result of difficulties which the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Massachusetts would clearly call up by their suggestions. In this way we avoid the militarism of either blacks in Africa or whites in America or in any other country.

I merely rose to say that which I reassert: That I can not accept in behalf of this country as a verity and an established fact that President Wilson has in behalf of this Nation agreed to any permanent policy of transferring any people, of colonies or elsewhere, into the sovereignty of any other nation without any voice from them or any consideration of their personal welfare, from the consideration of their interests and without an expression of their own will.

I thank the Senate for allowing me to intrude.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I think the occasion warrants a short expression from me that seems to be needed here.

We have fought this war and won it. We have expended over $30,000,000,000 in waging it. We have had 263,000 of our men slain yonder on the battlefields of France or cut to pieces and crippled for life. The war has been won. And for what? Did we fight Germany, I will ask the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, that the South African possessions should be given to England? Did we fight the central powers that Alsace-Lorraine should be given to France? Did we fight the central powers and conquer them for that purpose? For without our going into the war the allies were absolutely powerless to prevent their own subjugation; they were already beaten by the German forces. Did we fight and win the war to give Trieste and Trent back to Italy, or did we fight and win the war to give the Chinese provinces to Japan?

The learned and distinguished Senator from Massachusetts does not know everything; he admits that he has some limitations. He says he does not know what ought to be done with the German South African colonies, but he is unstinted in his criticism of the course of our representatives yonder in the great world conference to-day, and he is joined by other Republicans on that side and by Democrats here, which ought not to be.

The condition exists. Our representatives are on the ground for what? To procure as much benefit to this country and mankind because of our expenditure in blood and treasure as we are entitled to out of the great peace conference yonder, and it seems that ours is the only delegation on the face of the earth that has mankind and humanity's future at heart. All has been forgotten by the others except a disposition to clutch and hold what they have in hand. We have helped to destroy the balance of power of the Old World, and but for our entrance into the war it would have been destroyed by Germany and other lands acquired by her.

If we shall withdraw from this peace conference without establishing some kind of a league of nations that will guarantee in some sort of effective way peace to the world and fair treatment to the weak and small and subject peoples of the earth and protection from exploitation by the strong and powerful, we may have done a disservice to mankind instead of a benefit in helping to vanquish the central powers.

To say the least of it, what have our people been taught to believe caused us to go into the war? That our rights on the seas were infringed, and the freedom of the sea * must be safeguarded yonder. The war was fought for that purpose, and what else? That there might be a league of nations to enforce peace and settle forever the question of armaments and to destroy militarism as it has flourished to now and cursed the world with the greatest war of all time. If we have not fought for those other things and have fought for these two, have conquered the enemy and are now laying down terms of peace, why should we not insist upon these things being regarded and accomplished there, and why should we not insist with a united voice?

I say the President of the United States ought to speak to the peace conference yonder as one having authority, as one who has 110,000,000 people behind him and the most powerful country on the face of the earth, a country that has gone into the war 3,000 miles away for the things that I have just spoken about. Would you have us withdraw quietly without accomplishment of the purpose, with a policy of cringing cowardice that would be a disgrace to the blood our heroic sons shed on the battle fields of France?

Incidentally, just there, I saw in the paper this morning a statement by an admiral of the United States Navy, while the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, the President of the United States of America, the head of the peace delegation, is yonder at the great conference insisting upon a league of nations, and here is this admiral in our Navy, while the negotiations are going on and without knowing what may come of them, saying for publication that the league of nations has descended to the importance and prominence of an old ladies' sewing circle.

What did we spend all this blood and money for? Shall it have been expended in vain? If I were the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy and one of my subordinates should make a statement like that in this country for publication at this time, I might think it was for the good of the service to reduce him to a rank so low that he would forget what the Navy is for.

Why should it be done? It is about time the United States Senate, in my judgment, should have regard for the great sacrifices this country has gone through and the immense burdens it must bear hereafter, and what ought to be gotten for this country and the benefit to the future of mankind out of the great peace conference. It can not be gotten after the conference is ended. We ought not to embarrass and obstruct our representative, who is on the ground and understands the situation. I say let him continue to speak as one having authority, and the United States Government and all the people will be with him in the declaration, notwithstanding this unwarranted criticism by Senators.

Mr. MYERS obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator from California desires to address his remarks to the subject under consideration, I will yield to him.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I thank the Senator from Montana. I wanted just one moment, for I thought it was illustrative of the argument that has proceeded in the days past. I think this morning's interesting debate but emphasizes the force of what has been so eloquently said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] upon the first of the peace terms. I do not think there is any substantial difference between the views of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and those that I possess concerning those peace terms. I doubt, indeed, if the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] differs from either of us; but what we have demonstrated this morning is the unfortunate situation in which we and the country find ourselves to-day during the progress of these negotiations. I want to read to the Senate just a line that to me was most appropriate, and that I kept in mind during the remarks on the President's absence, and which I thought, of course, would be all controlling in the days of this peace conference—a line from the farewell address that was made to us by the President just prior to his departure. He then said:

> I shall be in close touch with you and with affairs on this side the water, and you will know all that I do.

Of course, that is an error, for we know nothing; but that, taken in conjunction with the first of the peace terms concerning "open covenants of peace openly arrived at," led me to believe—and, I am sure, led many other Senators to exactly the same belief—that we would at least substantially understand what was transpiring abroad which touched us so intimately and bore upon our future destiny.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from California if it is his view that the secrecy, of which he complains and which everybody deplores, is attributable to the American commissioners?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have no information upon that subject at all. I should say, were I to express an opinion, that it was not, for I assume, of course, with the announcement that the President made upon that subject, that he endeavored with all his power to prevent that sort of thing. I would not indulge for an instant in any other assumption concerning the President of the United States.

But the situation exists as a fact, nevertheless. It is most unfortunate. We here, a part of the treaty-making power, with the intensity of interest that every one of us has in what is transpiring abroad, with the hope, at least, that we were to know substantially what was transpiring as it transpired, with the words of the President ringing in our ears and before us, the solemn assurance given to the world, accepted by every power on earth, that there should be "open covenants of peace, openly arrived at," are to-day told, when they are dealing with the very blood and bone of this Republic, "that satisfactory arrangements yesterday were made." There ought to be some means by which there would be some information authentically brought to this body. I do not know how it can be accomplished. We are dependent upon the newspaper correspondents, and I hesitate to comment upon much that they say; but, nevertheless, we are left in confusion and in doubt and without the facts. We do not know what is transpiring, when to all the world we have said that not only the world but we ourselves should know just exactly what was occurring from minute to minute and from day to day.

Mr. LEWIS and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has the floor.

Mr. MYERS. I will not claim the floor at this time, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair will recognize the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beseech the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] to regard a situation, and I ask him if he can see from the situation where there has been any violation on the part of that covenant given by the President in his concluding observations, or what has been termed by the Senator from California the President's farewell address to us?

Mr. President, the President of the United States did say that he would be in constant touch with this country and that he would keep us informed as to those matters which transpired. We ought not to leave the country under the impression that these things have really officially transpired merely because the newspaper correspondents, catching the very first rumor that they thought reliable, and in their diligence giving it to the country, as became their office. The report says "it is currently rumored" that it has been agreed upon. But I invite the Senator from California to notice that France does not say such has happened; Britain does not say so; nor do any of the authoritative sources give it out as having transpired or having been officially adopted by any of those Governments.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. But might I submit to the Senator this thought: If really these matters have been concluded, have really been decided upon, have been finally ascertained and settled, will not the Senator assume that, were such to be the circumstance, the President then would have communicated to this country? Will we not assume, sir, that the report we have is based upon the best information that the newspaper representatives have; but may we not also assume that it is a mere statement tentatively of what they understand has transpired, and not until we really know that a thing of this kind or any other thing of this importance has actually been arrived at and accepted, is the President of the United States under any obligation by his word to remit the facts or to transmit the information to us?

I inform the able Senator from California that there are reasons by which a few—indeed, all—of the Senators may rest assured that, as fast as any one thing is done, is in itself in a completed state, that will be communicated promptly by the American commissioners and by the President himself to anybody, whether it be the Senate or the other House or any agency of this Government, that has, in the nature of our administration, the right to have it, and to the American public, at the very first moment that it is convenient and appropriate.

I wish to press upon the Senator from California this thought as I now yield to him: Is it just to assume that there has been any violation on the part of the President or of the American commissioners in the promise to transmit information here merely because we have a general information of the presumption that things have been done of which we have no official statement from any official source anywhere at any time that they have officially been concluded?

I now yield to the Senator from California for reply.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, in response to the Senator from Illinois I will say just a word. The vice of the able Senator's argument is that he would have us have no knowledge, in any event, until the entire transaction has been concluded. Then, of course, discussion would be futile and useless. But that is apart from what I was speaking of a moment ago.

The Senator from Illinois is in error when he says that we have assumed that certain things have occurred. I read the official communique yesterday issued, and the official communique says that "satisfactory provisional arrangements were reached" as to Turkey and as to the German colonies. If the arrangements were yesterday made, under what was said to us by the President, that we should know all that he knows, ought we not or—eliminating ourselves because of the position into which the supposedly popular branch of the Government has fallen—ought not the people of the United States know, the event having transpired, just exactly what has been done?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I reply to say that the mere expression on the part of diligent correspondents announcing that a satisfactory arrangement or some temporary administration has been made is a mere conclusion on the part of those gentlemen.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield again.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I am not speaking of correspondents, if the Senator will pardon me; I am speaking of the official communique issued by the Governments participating in the peace conference—not about what the correspondents are saying at all.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. NEW. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; at this juncture I yield.

Mr. NEW. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if, to his knowledge, there has yet been any communication of any character from the President of the United States to either House of the Congress? Negotiations have been in progress for some time, and I should like to ask if there has been a single word from the President to either House of Congress concerning those negotiations?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I answer both Senators. In the first place, the communique to which the Senator from California refers is, I repeat, sir, a statement of the newspaper correspondents giving the best information they had at hand, and in announcing the communique they state their conclusions that some satisfactory arrangements have been reached as to the matters referred to; but I appeal to the Senator from California again to notice that there is no statement anywhere that there has been any arrangement made by the President of the United States concluding any subject, and I must assume again that if anything has been entered upon by him and concluded it would be reported promptly to that particular agency of our Government where under our laws and customs the report should be made.

Now, says the Senator, there are proceedings daily transpiring. That I concede, and I have stood on this floor, as did the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber, deploring that any rule should be adopted by the convention that would prevent the daily proceedings from being heard; but, Mr. President, it appears that these daily proceedings are reported in so far as whatever transpires day by day is concerned. What A or B may say and what response C or D may make may not come to us each moment by telegraph any more than what we are saying here each moment is being reported each moment back there.

But, answering the Senator from Indiana, who asked if there had been any report from the President to either House of Congress, let this be the answer: The only thing that has transpired has been a mere convention, a gathering, that has been as open as the proceedings transpiring here. Every agency of the world has reported it. There was not a thing the President could communicate that was not known to the various citizens of our land. Since then nothing has transpired of a completed character affecting our Government, that I can see, which called upon the President to report it. It is not yet in a shape or condition when upon a point of honor or a point of duty it would be expected that he would pause to communicate it fully to us. The reason clearly, I may say, is that until he has full information to impart, information in mere fragments would be misleading and most unsatisfactory. I think there has not yet arisen a time when it can be said that it was his duty by any form of obligation or undertaking to have communicated to us anything that we do not now know.

I think what we need is a little patience; I think also what we need is some confidence in those who represent us, and not to assume that they are employing every opportunity to trick and betray us; but to place some hope in mankind, some trust in the solemn oath of officials, some belief that in the honor of the men the same obligations will be complied with at a distance that we know were ever complied with at home. As we have had no real reason for ever lodging any complaint, we are not justified now in this honorable place in expressing a suspicion.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but because of his repeated statement, which leads me to believe that the Senator from Illinois has misapprehended what I have said, I read:

COMMUNIQUE TELLS DECISIONS OF COUNCIL.

[By the Associated Press.]

PARIS, January 30.

The official communication on the peace proceedings to-day reads:

"The President of the United States, the prime ministers, and ministers of foreign affairs of the allied and associated powers, as well as the Japanese representatives, to-day held two meetings at the Quai d'Orsay, the first from 11 a. m. until 1 p. m. and the second from 3.30 to 6 p. m.

"The exchange of views continued on the German colonies in the Pacific and in Africa, in the presence of the representatives of the dominions and of M. Simon, French minister of the colonies, and of the Marquis Salvago Raggi (Italy).

"In the afternoon satisfactory provisional arrangements were reached for dealing with the German colonies and the occupied territory of Turkey in Asia."

I am reading the official declaration.

Mr. LEWIS. I think, Mr. President, the Senator will see the United States was not mentioned as having taken any part whatever, and therefore could not have been under any obligation to make report to us.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho has been recognized.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator from Idaho will yield to me for just a moment. I have no wish, Mr. President, to administer any kindergarten instruction in diplomatic practice to the eminent and able Senator from Illinois, but, speaking from my own personal experience, having assisted, in the French sense, at one peace conference, I wish to say that the communique which the Senator from California has read is an official document emanating from an officer of the conference who is known as the chef du protocol, who puts out a statement each day in skeleton form of the doings of the conference. In this instance the chef du protocol, who issued the communique which the Senator from California has read, is, as I understand, M. André Tardieu, who is well known to many people in this country because of his presence here as the French high commissioner a year ago.

Mr. LEWIS. Still that merely verifies the assertions I have made and the conclusions I have heretofore drawn.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is impossible for Senators to feel other than a deep interest in everything which is transpiring at Versailles. The nature of the questions which are there being considered and the consequences which may follow from a decision this way or the other are such that no one can be indifferent to what is transpiring, and it must be understood that Senators here will continue to discuss these matters from day to day, either upon insufficient information, if we can have no other, or upon sufficient information to enable us to discuss them correctly, if it can be had. In other words, Mr. President, no Member of this body would think of remaining silent while these matters are transpiring. He would be unfit to occupy a place in this Chamber if he did.

Mr. President, it is not a question of confidence in the President. Those of us who may have views contrary to the views which the President entertains with reference to these things ought not to be charged with having a lack of confidence in the man or anything of that nature. The President has said that he is in favor of the league of nations. I am uncompromisingly opposed to it. That is my position. It is not a question of personality at all; it is a question of policy for my Government, and that I decide regardless of individuals or persons.

When the President of the United States declared in favor of "open covenants of peace, openly arrived at," if I may be permitted to make the statement, he simply announced a doctrine that some of us here had been advocating in the Senate Chamber for eight years. I did not modify my position because a Democratic President had announced his position to be in harmony with that view. I continued to support it because I believe in it as a principle, aside from the fact that this or that individual may be in favor of it, or this or that individual may be opposed to it. In fact, it amounts to but very little in this world, through the sweep of the ages, what this or that particular individual believes, but it is of tremendous importance as to what particular principle or policy of government is to obtain. And so, sir, we are dealing with policies and principles, and not with individuals; and I suspect that some of us here have supported the President as earnestly in critical times in his administration as others who have been of the same party. So it is not a question, sir, of confidence or lack of confidence in the President. It is a question of whether or not certain policies should obtain. It is a profound disagreement upon a far-reaching policy of the Government.

Mr. President, the difficulty of the situation arises out of this condition of affairs, in my humble judgment, expressing myself as I must in my own way, that we have entered upon a boundless sea, without chart or compass to indicate where we are going. When we declared that we would take part in readjusting the territorial boundaries and the governmental conditions of Europe, we broke away from the fundamental principle upon which the foreign policy of this Government was established a century ago, and we have had neither chart nor compass for our sea since that hour. Let us get back to our safe and ancient moorings. Let us recur to those great policies which enabled Washington to direct our course in safety in times just as turbulent and dark as these.

I do not care what kind of a league of nations you form. It may, as Admiral Mayo said, be nothing more than an old ladies' quilting society; but it will finally lead us into all kinds of entangling obligations and conditions with European affairs. If we sit in the council chamber with nothing more than our moral influence and our moral suasion and exercising our intellectual powers, we are still dealing with European affairs and creating corresponding obligations upon our part, against which the Father of his Country declared. If we take possession of the German colonies and undertake to administer them and become mandatory for them, we have in that very hour—I do not care whether there is any declaration to that effect or not—abandoned the Monroe doctrine. Is human nature so constituted that Europe would permit us to interfere with the Monroe doctrines of Europe and Europe never have anything to say with reference to the Monroe doctrine of the United States? Certainly not.

So, Mr. President, it is against the fundamental principle of a league of nations that I inveigh, and not a challenge of the confidence or the integrity or the intellectual power of the President of the United States. He is perfectly entitled to his views, and I do not criticize him for urging them—not at all. I simply want to present the question to the only tribunal upon the face of the earth that shall decide it; and that is, to the tribunal of public opinion in the United States. If the public opinion of the United States shall finally ratify that course after it is thoroughly presented to the people, then I must, as an American, bow to the majority opinion of my countrymen and abide by it and watch, as I shall with deepest anxiety, for its consequences. But until the final decision is taken, I propose to present to that tribunal in my humble way, at every opportunity I have, my firm, even my religious, belief that such a policy is the end of the Republic as the fathers made it.

So believing, I shall not remain silent out of fear of being called a carping critic. Therefore, when the news came across the water that in all probability we were to take charge of the German colonies, I raised my voice against it, because I was against the policy. I know of no higher duty devolving upon a Senator than, with courtesy, with proper consideration for the personal feelings of others, and for the due respect belonging to the man who occupies the position of Commander in Chief, to advocate his own beliefs and his own views, regardless of the awe which surrounds that high office. These are not the times for intellectual timidity or spineless opposition.

HOMESTEADS FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5071) extending the benefits of sections 2304, 2305, and 2309, Revised Statutes of the United States, to those who rendered military or naval service during the Mexican border troubles and the war with Germany and its allies, and I submit a report (No. 678) thereon. I desire to say a few words concerning the bill.

It was prepared by the Secretary of the Interior and introduced by me at his request. It relates to a matter of considerable urgency. There is now a law which provides that the veterans of the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and the Philippine insurrection, when they enter land as homesteaders, may have counted in their favor, as part of the period of residence on those homesteads, the time they served in the armed forces of the United States. That applies to veterans of the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and the Philippine insurrection. But there is no such law applicable to soldiers who served on the border during the Mexican trouble, nor to soldiers or sailors in the forces of the United States during the present war. This bill is simply to extend to soldiers and sailors of the present war the same privilege that has been granted to the veterans of the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, and the Philippine insurrection, to put them on the same footing.

I will read briefly from the communication of the Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, November 27, 1918.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to submit, with the request that you introduce the same, draft of a bill extending the benefits of sections 2304, 2305, and 2309, Revised Statutes of the United States, to those who rendered military or naval service during the Mexican border troubles and the war with Germany and its allies.

The three sections named grant credit, in lieu of actual residence and cultivation, in connection with homestead entries initiated after such service has terminated, for military or naval service rendered during the Civil War, the Spanish War, and the insurrection in the Philippines, and authorize the soldier or sailor to file a declaratory statement, in person or by agent, in advance of entry and settlement.

Public resolution No. 32 and the act of July 28, 1917, referred to in the draft, are protective measures affecting claims initiated prior to entering the service, and reference is made to them as defining the character of service for which credit is to be given.

There is no existing law under which credit may be given for military service rendered during the Mexican border troubles or the war with Germany in connection with homestead entries made after the service has been rendered, and the Land Department is receiving many letters on the subject from persons who have so served or are now serving.

I am submitting a like draft to Hon. SCOTT FERRIS and earnestly hope that the legislation may be pushed to early enactment.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

The Secretary of the Interior is taking a great interest in directing the settlement of returned soldiers and sailors on the public lands of the country, and this measure is in line with that idea. It simply puts the soldiers and sailors of the present war on the same footing with soldiers of past wars.

I ask that the bill may be read, and then I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Sutherland
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Swanson
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Thompson
Curtis	Kellogg	Page	Trammell
Fletcher	Kenyon	Penrose	Underwood
France	Kirby	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Gay	La Follette	Shafroth	Walsh
Gronna	Lewis	Sheppard	Warren
Hale	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Henderson	McNary	Smoot	Wolcott
Hollis	Myers	Spencer

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is detained by illness.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN] is necessarily detained on official business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] are detained on official business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained by illness.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on account of official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. I announce the absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] on official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators have responded to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. VARDAMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. KIRBY. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who are necessarily absent on official business.

Mr. THOMAS, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. REED, Mr. GORE, and Mr. BECKHAM entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the Senate spent an hour and three-quarters this morning in talking when nothing was before the Senate and accomplished nothing. There was one hour and three-quarters of time spent in absolutely idle talk. At a few moments before 2 o'clock I rose and explained that I wished to ask the immediate consideration of a bill which would do something for the soldiers and sailors of this country who had exposed their lives, that in a sense would confer some benefit upon them. It would have taken only a minute to consider the bill. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] very kindly interfered, and suggested the absence of a quorum, which took all the time up to 2 o'clock, when the unfinished business comes on. The Senator from Maryland has had the distinction of interfering with doing something in this body for our soldiers and sailors.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I rise to give notice of a motion for the suspension of the rules with reference to permitting legislation upon an appropriation bill. I give the notice now, although I desire to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that it is not my purpose to utilize this notice to delay the Post Office appropriation bill. If the appropriation bill should go over until to-morrow, one day being necessary, I shall avail myself of the virtue of the notice. If the Senator from Alabama can conclude the consideration of his bill to-day, I will not take advantage of this notice to delay it.

I should have given the notice sooner, but I did not anticipate that this bill would go through so rapidly as it apparently is going through at this time, so I give this notice now, and I will avail myself of it, if I can, later.

I ask that the notice may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the notice.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday, February 1, 1919, or as soon thereafter as possible, I shall move to suspend that provision of paragraph 3 of Senate Rule XVI, prohibiting any amendment proposing general legislation to any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering the following amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill, H. R. 13308, now pending, by adding a new section to the bill, as follows:

SEC. —. That sections 1, 2, and 3, title 12, of an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," passed and approved June 15, 1917, which sections read as follows:

"SECTION 1. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind, in violation of any of the provisions of this act is hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employee of the Dead Letter Office, duly authorized thereto, or other person upon a search warrant authorized by law, to open any letter not addressed to himself.

"SEC. 2. Every letter, writing, circular, postal card, picture, print, engraving, photograph, newspaper, pamphlet, book, or other publication, matter, or thing of any kind containing any matter advocating or urging treason, insurrection, or forcible resistance to any law of the United States is hereby declared to be nonmailable.

"SEC. 3. Whoever shall use or attempt to use the mails or Postal Service of the United States for the transmission of any matter declared by this title to be nonmailable shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both. Any person violating any provision of this title may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed," be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That section 4 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled 'An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 15, 1917, and for other purposes," passed and approved May 16, 1918, which section reads as follows:

"'SEC. 4. When the United States is at war the Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or concern is using the mails in violation of any of the provisions of this act, instruct the postmaster at any post office at which mail is received addressed to such person or concern to return to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed all letters or other matter so addressed, with the words, 'Mail to this address undeliverable under espionage act,' plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof, and all such letters or other matter so returned to such postmasters shall be by them returned to the senders thereof under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. NUGENT. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho in favor of Federal aid for post roads, a subject embraced in the pending bill, and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Without objection, the memorial will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Robert O. Jones, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house joint memorial No. 2, by McDonald, which was filed in this office on the 21st day of January, A. D. 1919, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 22d day of January, A. D. 1919, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third.

[SEAL.]

ROBERT O. JONES,
Secretary of State.

House joint memorial 2.

A joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of an amendment to the bill introduced by Senator BANKHEAD in the United States Senate on December 4, 1918, known as S. 5088; also the same amendment to a bill introduced in the United States Senate by Senator SWANSON on December 5, 1918, known as S. 5098; also the same amendment to a bill introduced by Mr. SHACKLEFORD in the House of Representatives of the United States on December 12, 1918, known as H. R. 13354; and also to any other similar bills introduced in Congress, in order to provide a more equitable application of Federal aid for post roads in the sparsely settled States, and to provide a more reasonable time limit for the availability of such Federal aid.

We, your memorialists, the house of representatives and senate of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there are pending in the Congress of the United States bills known as S. 5088, S. 5098, and H. R. 13354, all of which provide for additional Federal aid for post roads under the terms of the act of Congress approved July 11, 1916, and commonly known as the Federal-aid road act; and

Whereas section 6 of said Federal-aid road act provides that the United States shall not cooperate in any road project in an amount greater than 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof; and

Whereas although additional Federal aid for road building at the present time is highly desirable, nevertheless those States having large areas and relatively small populations will be unable to avail themselves of the benefits of this act as amended to provide additional Federal aid without a disproportionate burden of taxation: Now, therefore,

Your memorialists urgently request that the said bills, and other similar bills which may be introduced in the Congress of the United States, be so amended that section 6 of the said Federal-aid road act will provide that in those States where the average population per square mile of area is 100 persons or more, based upon the census of 1910, the United States shall not cooperate in any road project in an amount greater than 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof; and that in those States where the average population per square mile of area, based on the census of 1910, is less than 100 persons the share of the United States shall be increased one-fourth of 1 per cent for each person or major fraction thereof less than 100 per square mile; and, furthermore,

Whereas section 3 of said Federal-aid road act provides that so much of the appropriation apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available to such State only until the close of the succeeding fiscal year; and

Whereas on account of the said provision of section 3 of said act, local conditions existing in some States render it practically impossible to comply with the terms of the act: Now, therefore,

Your memorialists also request that said bills now pending in Congress, and any other similar bills which may be introduced, be amended so that section 3 of the said Federal-aid road act will provide that so much of the appropriation to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available to such State until the close of the second succeeding year: And be it

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to each of the Members of the congressional delegation from the State of Idaho, to the Congress of the United States, and to each body of said Congress.

This memorial passed the house on the 15th day of January, 1919.

M. A. KIGER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This memorial passed the senate on the 16th day of January, 1919.

C. C. MOORE,
President of the Senate.

This memorial received by the governor on the 21st day of January, 1919, at 10.55 o'clock a. m., and approved on the 21st day of January, 1919.

D. W. DAVIS, Governor.

I hereby certify that the within house joint memorial No. 2 originated in the house during the fifteenth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

DAVID BURRELL,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

(Indorsed: Received and filed January 21, 1919. Robert O. Jones, secretary of state.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the committee to insert a new section, to be known as section 5.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, after line 16, the committee report to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 5. That the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, is hereby amended to provide that the term "rural post roads," as used in section 2 of said act, shall be construed to mean any public road which is now used or may be made suitable for the transportation of the United States mails, excluding every street and road in a place having a population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, of 2,500 or more, except that portion of any such street or road along which the houses average more than 200 feet apart.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment, at line 3, page 37, strike out the period and insert a colon and add:

Provided, That section 6 of said act be further amended so that the limitation of payment not to exceed $10,000 per mile, exclusive of cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span, which the Secretary of Agriculture may make, be, and the same is, increased to $20,000 per mile.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will yield just a moment, I will make a brief explanation and give the reason why it is thought necessary to offer this amendment to the amendment.

Under the existing law the Secretary of Agriculture can not expend more than $10,000 out of the present appropriation to aid in the construction of roads. There are quite a number of States that desire to build roads that cost more than $20,000 per mile, and the Secretary of Agriculture thought this amendment to the amendment would be very advisable, because it would authorize him, in each State where they desire to build better roads than they can for $20,000, to expend more money in their construction.

In other words, if the State of New York or the State of Massachusetts or any other State desires to build a road or improve or reconstruct a road that costs more than $20,000 a mile, it can only receive from the Federal appropriation $10,000. I think, and the committee thought, that States which desire to build roads more expensive than $20,000 per mile should be permitted to spend $30,000 or $40,000 a mile and get their pro rata share from the Federal appropriation. That is the purpose of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I rose to ask the Senator a question. I am not opposed whatever to the amendment the Senator has just offered. I think it is a very wise amendment. What I wanted the Senator to do was to explain the difference between the existing law and the law as amended by section 5 of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no difference, except that section 5 increases the appropriation heretofore made.

Mr. SMOOT. No; there is no increase of appropriation in section 5.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator mean with reference to construction?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I mean all the amendments. Section 5 provides:

That the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, is hereby amended to provide that the term "rural post roads," as used in section 2 of said act, shall be construed to mean any public road which is now used, or may be made suitable, for the transportation of the United States mails.

Mr. THOMAS. It adds the words "may be made suitable."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; "may be made suitable." That is a definition or an explanation of the words in the original act, which were "may or can be used." The Secretary of Agriculture, in discussing this matter with me, regards this as a very important amendment because it relates to roads over which rural mail goes on the major part of the road. It may go over both ends of a road, but there may be a short link in the middle where the conditions up to this time had not made it possible or desirable to carry the rural service.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the object is to make any road in the United States fall under this law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; wherever mails go.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to ask, in view of the suggestion that that phrase be inserted—to wit, any road which "may be made suitable"—why not wipe out all reference to post roads, because, from the explanation which the Senator made just a moment ago, it is intended to cover and include roads which are not to be used for carrying the mail?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is a construction which might be put on it by the Senator from New York, but I do not think the department meant that. I am sure I would not put that construction on it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If I know the meaning of the English language, it seems very clear to me. I am convinced that any road that can be made suitable for carrying mail includes any and every road in the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It might.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have suspected that would be the outcome of the legislation, anyway. I am glad that it comes so quickly, so that we may know what we are confronting. We might just as well strike from the statute enacted two years ago all reference to post roads and say "any road in the United States," and let the American people understand it frankly.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is a fair construction of the amendment, and I really believe that is what will be done.

Mr. SWANSON. Under the existing law you have to get an affirmative opinion from the Post Office Department that it is practical to be used for carrying the mail before certain parts of the road can be improved, and unless that affirmative action of approval is given by the Post Office Department it is impossible to use any of this money for that purpose. The reason why it is desired to retain that language is to let it be known that the general purpose is to include post roads. As the Senator from Alabama well says, sometimes there are 4 or 5 miles which the Post Office Department are not willing to say they contemplate using for a post road. Then the entire system would fail. I have not read the opinion, but my information is that the solicitor decided that unless that was done it was impossible to use the money for that purpose. There were cases in which connecting links were left out because they did not get their certificate from the Post Office Department that the department contemplated using them for a post road.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Could not the community build the connecting link? Must the Federal Government do all this?

Mr. SWANSON. The Federal Government is to contribute one-half. We think it is wise and proper.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We legislated on the theory that the Federal Government has a direct interest in the carrying of mail.

Mr. SWANSON. The word "may" was thought to cover the case, but on account of the solicitor's opinion and that of the Comptroller of the Treasury, the word "may" would mean that any time in the future it might be done. It was on account of the narrow construction given the word "may" under existing law that we thought there ought to be substituted "can" or "suitable." That was the condition. It was because of the narrow construction given to the word "may." I understand it is the law that mail may be carried, and it was construed that that must indicate the purpose on the part of the Post Office to do it, and unless that purpose was stated these short links could not be connected up. It proved to be an embarrassment in the administration of the law. Everybody thought the word "may" would be construed as "can" or "suitable." It was the narrow interpretation given to it that necessitated this amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator will concede that there is no intention to carry mail on the so-called short links.

Mr. SWANSON. The department said at the time it may be three or four years or five years before they do it, but under the amendment they would have the right to do it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator will concede that when the time came they would improve the roads?

Mr. SWANSON. If there were any such necessity it would require an investigation by the Post Office Department to determine years ahead what its policy would be as connected with our rural-route delivery.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to make an inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield for that purpose?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Leaving out the words "may be suitable," the law would be that it would include only roads which are now used, but when the roads come to be improved, in a couple of years from now, the fund would be available for that purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator is not entirely familiar with the existing law. The existing law is found on page 3 of the committee report:

> Any public road over which the United States mails are now or may hereafter be transported—

The phrase "may hereafter be transported" is to be stricken out, and in its place is put "or may be made suitable," which is a very different story.

Mr. THOMAS. The act to which the proposed act is amendatory is entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes." Under that designation Congress passed an act appropriating $75,000,000 under certain circumstances for the construction of rural post roads. This is a Post Office appropriation bill, and in a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department, and for other purposes, it is proposed to add $200,000,000 to the appropriation of two years ago, and by the amendment of section 2 of that act to make the $200,000,000, plus the unexpended previous appropriation of $75,000,000, available for the construction of all roads of every kind, nature, and description.

It may be that the department gave to the committee the reason which has been set forth here, and of course the phraseology of the proposed amendment will permit the department to act in the instances cited, but it does not stop there. It is a radical and fundamental departure from the policy entered upon two years ago. As the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] says, if it is enacted it commits the General Government and the Treasury of the General Government to the policy of universal highway construction. Of course, the time is coming when the States are going to be relieved of their proportion of this burden. Indeed, some people in my State sometime ago requested me to initiate proceedings whereby the State could be relieved of its 50 per cent burden under the act of 1916, the idea being that inasmuch as these roads were post roads, and inasmuch as the Government has exclusive jurisdiction of the post offices and post roads, ergo, the State treasury should be relieved from the incubus placed upon it by the act of 1916.

It may be perfectly proper, indeed necessary, for the United States at this time to assume the new burden of highway construction, unlimited in its character and extent, and to place the expense of this construction upon the shoulders of the taxpayers of the United States. If so, then let us do it with our eyes open, and labor under no misconception as to the real purpose sought to be obtained in this apparently unimportant amendment of section 2 of the existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no doubt that the construction placed upon those words by the Senator is correct. I construe them exactly as he does. I was going to ask the Senator, if it is desirable to accomplish even what the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] said it was the intention of the department to accomplish, would it not be better to strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and," so that it would read:

> Shall be construed to mean any public road which is now used and may be made suitable for the transportation of the United States mails.

Mr. THOMAS. That would improve the phraseology of the section.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly it would.

Mr. THOMAS. But it would not relieve it from the operation which I contend must necessarily result and which by the department, at least, is designed to result from this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that, but I do believe that it would be a limitation.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would greatly improve the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I am willing to take chances on it, but under the suggestion made by the Senator from New York, or another Senator, the State itself surely ought to be willing, or the community should be willing, when these little spaces or stop gaps, so to speak, exist in a general system, which are not suitable for rural postal purposes, to make the improvement itself.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator entirely, and I am perfectly willing to vote against section 5 of the bill; but as we are now considering it, I simply wanted to suggest at this time, if the Senator has no objection, that the word "or" be stricken out and the word "and" be inserted, which I am quite sure will improve the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Alabama has charge of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that on line 22, page 36, the word "or" be stricken out and the word "and" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 22, page 36, after the comma, strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. As section 5 is now amended, this aid can only be extended to a road which is now used for this purpose. The provision to which the Senator from New York calls attention, which was in the original bill, is cut out, and no road, however important, which should be hereafter, during these three years or any other time, used for post roads could be aided under this clause.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that is a proper construction, I do not so understand it. Personally I do not care anything about this amendment, so far as I am concerned. It is offered here at the urgent request of the Secretary of Agriculture, who has charge of the work. He said the construction put upon the language of the original act by the solicitor was very embarrassing to the department. It was, he thought, very narrow, and he said the language ought to be changed so that he might apply his pro rata share to a link of a road over which the mails may hereafter go. I think every Senator on the floor knows that there will be a rural route over every good road in this country, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. KELLOGG. The amendment as it is now amended amends the act of 1916, and the aid can only be granted to a rural post road, which shall be construed to mean any public road which is now used and made suitable, while the original act——

Mr. BANKHEAD. That being true, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was adopted. I do not understand it, and I do not think that any other Senator does.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that I had no ulterior motive in offering the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I appreciate that.

Mr. SMOOT. I listened to the statement made by the Senator from Virginia that there are roads now where there might be a part of the road used at each end only, and a gap between those two used roads upon which, under the construction of the department, no money could be expended, and therefore I simply wished to limit it to cover such roads.

Mr. SWANSON. Could it not be very easily covered by inserting the words "or forming a connecting link"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was adopted? The Chair hears none. It is reconsidered, and the question is on the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want to take the Senator from Colorado off the floor, but——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. As it has been reconsidered, I ask that it may go over until the Senator concludes his remarks. I want a yea-and-nay vote upon it, and I do not wish to call for a quorum now.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in discussing a provision of a bill or an amendment which may be subject to a point of order, and consequently before I proceed further I want to raise a point of order against section 5, in that it is the inclusion of general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator on the point of order, if he desires.

Mr. THOMAS. It is too clear to my mind to require any elucidation. It is general legislation. The precedents are abundant upon it. There is no exception to it. It is clearly within the prohibition of Rule XVI, subdivision 3.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I thought the Senator had concluded; but I hope he will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall not only insist upon it as to this section, but I am going to make a point of order as to the next section when that comes up.

Mr. STERLING. I think Federal aid to the post roads of the country is a beneficent thing, a beneficent activity upon the part of the Government, and my thought is that the Senator's main objection to the amendment and to section 5 was because of the words "or may be made suitable."

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, no; that is merely a trivial incident.

Mr. STERLING. It is an extension of a system which is already established; and I may say to the Senator that I think the country has been benefited by it; that it approves of the legislation, and that there is a demand for this Federal good-roads legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. THOMAS. Who has the floor, Mr. President?

Mr. STERLING. I am speaking, I know, in the time of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. KING. The Senator will pardon me. I had forgotten the Senator from Colorado had the floor.

Mr. STERLING. I have finished all I care to say. I simply hope that the Senator from Colorado will not insist upon his objection to this amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I may say, Mr. President, that all of the appropriations of public moneys since I have been here have been for beneficent purposes, and the more beneficent the purpose the greater the appropriation. I shall address myself to the beneficence of this appropriation after the point of order shall have been disposed of.

Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator from Alabama on the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I can not quite understand why this provision of the bill is subject to a point of order. It is an amendment, it is true, to an appropriation bill, but it is amending a general law as to which the appropriation is made. It is estimated for by the Department of Agriculture, it was regularly introduced, it went to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and it is reported as an amendment to the bill. It seems to me that clearly takes it out of the category of being subject to a point of order.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in addition to what the Senator from Alabama has said, I desire to say that the margin between general and special legislation is sometimes very narrow. Take the view which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has presented. This is not general legislation, because it is a special limitation of a special appropriation for good roads. It has been held repeatedly that limitations and conditions upon which expenditures are made for special purposes are not general legislation. The margin is so narrow as between what is considered general and what is considered special legislation that frequently when legislation applied to a special appropriation, such as good roads, or a special thing, such as a building—something that is special and not general in all of its characteristics—it has been held special legislation, especially if it came from a committee that had charge of the subject.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the claim that this is a special appropriation——

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, the Senator's objection does not go to the appropriation, but simply to section 5 as an amendment to the existing law.

Mr. THOMAS. I can not very well make the point of order as to the succeeding sections until they are reached.

Mr. SMOOT. It is true that if this amendment were applied only to one road in the United States it would be special legislation; but it does not apply to one road; it applies to every post road in the United States, and so it is an amendment embodying general legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think there is any question about it.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. General legislation, as I understand, would be legislation controlling all kinds of appropriations. For instance, if it were provided that no appropriation should be made for anything until the money is provided, that would be general in its character, whether it applied to roads, colleges, or what not; but this is something that applies especially to certain roads; it is especially road legislation. The only way to make it general is to say that it applies to all roads.

Mr. THOMAS. That would make an appropriation for the Navy Department special legislation for the Navy Department.

Mr. SWANSON. It has been so held in some cases. We have had cases here where it has been held that certain legislation in reference to the Navy Department was not general. It is a difficult question to determine, but such has repeatedly been the decision. There have been no consistent decisions about it. If legislation applied to everything in the Navy Department it was considered as general, but if it applied to a special thing in the Navy Department or to a special employee in the Navy Department or to a special class of employees, it was held to be special legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the illustration which has been given by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is so complete that I can not add to it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs pardon of the Senator from Colorado. The Chair overlooked the fact that that Senator had the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. That is not necessary, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. I also ask pardon of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. That is not necessary.

Mr. WALSH. This thought has occurred to me in connection with the point of order now raised: I do not believe that the point of order can be successfully controverted, that the appropriation provided for in the succeeding sections—sections 6, 7, and 8——

Mr. SMOOT. That is another question.

Mr. WALSH. Well, we shall reach that directly.

Mr. THOMAS. I will say to the Senator from Montana that we are only considering one section.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the Senate is considering section 5, and the point of order is directed against and lodged at section 5. However, I was going to say to the Chair that I do not believe a point of order could be successfully made against the appropriations provided for in the succeeding sections. I have no doubt that an appropriation for the purpose of improving post roads is entirely appropriate in a general appropriation bill; that is, in the general Post Office appropriation bill. Appropriations have frequently been made for the construction and maintenance, for instance, of pneumatic-tube routes for the transmission of mails; they have been made for the railway transmission of mails; and I do not doubt that in a general Post Office appropriation bill appropriations may properly be made for those purposes.

These appropriations follow, as provided for in sections 6, 7, and 8; and section 5, it occurs to me, is intended simply as a limitation upon the use of the money provided for in the succeeding sections. That, Mr. President, it has frequently been held is entirely proper—that an appropriation may be made and a limitation may be put upon the use of that appropriation.

Mr. THOMAS. In this instance the limitation is an extension. Let me ask the Senator from Montana right there, if he will permit me, this question: Suppose section 5 shall go out upon a point of order, will not the appropriation provided for in section 6 be equally effective? Is it in any way dependent upon section 5?

Mr. WALSH. It will be equally effective; but, Mr. President, the appropriations then provided for in the succeeding sections will not be expended in the way that they would if section 5 remained in the bill. In making appropriation for one of these purposes Congress has power to direct how that appropriation shall be used. In other words, if section 5 goes out, then the appropriations provided for in sections 6, 7, and 8 can be used only upon rural post roads as defined in the existing law. If section 5 remains in, then these appropriations will be used in another way and upon an extended class of roads. Therefore, Mr. President, to my mind section 5 operates as a limitation upon or a direction concerning the manner of the expenditure of the appropriations provided for in the succeeding sections.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, section 5 is either a distinct amendment or it is not. We are treating it as a distinct amendment. Section 6, of course, is germane to the subject matter, as is also section 7, and perhaps the succeeding sections providing another appropriation for roads in the forest reserves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair ask the Senator a question? If sections 6 and 7 are germane why is section 5 not germane?

Mr. THOMAS. It is germane, but it is not a necessary part of either. These sections each stand by themselves. The Senate is now considering section 5. Section 5 assumes to amend a specific section of a preexisting act. Let us suppose there were no sections 6, 7, and 8 at all, would not this point of order be good? The amendment would be general legislation.

Mr. WALSH. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Montana says he has no doubt about it. Now, we are considering the section as a distinct section. I do not think there can be any question about it, whether it be considered in connection with section 6 or not.

Mr. WALSH. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I do not think we are permitted to consider it as a separate and distinct thing, as if there were nothing else in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that.

Mr. WALSH. That would violate every rule of statutory construction, which requires us to take the whole thing into consideration in construing it.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that that is the Senator's position; but, unfortunately for him, we are doing it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say that, if the contention of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is correct, then all of these sections will go out on a point of order; but I doubt whether he is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. The Senator is a parliamentarian. This is something which bothers the Chair; and the Chair would like to have the Senator from Utah address himself to it. Why should not sections 5, 6, 7, and 8 all be considered as a whole?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no necessity for considering them as a whole. Section 5 simply proposes to amend the existing law so that certain moneys which are appropriated may be spread over roads that are now not entitled to any appropriation made by Congress. Therefore it is changing a general law.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to ask the Senator a question right there. Do not the appropriations provided for in section 6 depend upon the limitations in section 5?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President. Every cent of those appropriations can be expended whether section 5 remains as it is or whether it is amended.

Mr. STERLING. That may have been the moving consideration for the adoption and reporting of section 6.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be, but it is not the controlling feature of the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. The only question——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to ask the Senator from Utah, who is well versed in parliamentary law, a question. Suppose all of this question were embodied in one section—that is, that sections 5, 6, 7, and 8 were a whole instead of being divided up into four sections—would the amendment be germane or would it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Any Senator could then ask for a division of the question; I have no doubt about that. This is the subject, and I invite the attention of the Chair to the volume containing the precedents in the Senate of the United States. On page 60 it reads:

> No subject is more widely discussed in the Senate during the consideration of appropriation bills and amendments thereto than the question, "What is general legislation on a general appropriation bill?"

Then it goes on to define "general legislation."

> General legislation, that legislation which is applicable throughout the State generally, as distinguished from special legislation, which affects only particular persons or localities.

Mr. President, this amendment affects all of the States of the Union. It is therefore general legislation. There are no specific items to take into consideration. It is amending general law, and to-day that law is general legislation. I can not see but that the point of order to section 5 is well taken.

Then, further down on the same page of this volume, it is stated:

> "General," with reference to the subject matter of the statute, is synonymous with "public" and opposed to "private," but with reference to the extent of territory over which it is to operate is opposed to "local" * * * and means that the statute to which it applies operates throughout the whole of the territory subject to the legislative jurisdiction.

That is exactly what this amendment does. It operates in every State of the Union, not as to one State or one road, but it operates on every road in every State of the Union.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator from Montana proceeds the Chair would like to ask a further question of the Senator from Utah. The Senator says that the other three sections are not dependent upon section 5. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator to lines 4 and 5, on page 37, which read:

> That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act, as herein amended—

That would indicate that these sections are interdependent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not said that the appropriation is not for the purpose of building roads, as provided in the amendment to section 2 of the existing law; there is no doubt about that; but if section 5 went out and this appropriation were made, by striking out the words "That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act, as herein amended"—that is, section 2 of the act of July 11, 1916—it would be used the same as similar appropriations have heretofore been used and only upon the class of roads that are now being improved.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me for just a moment, it has been conceded that a limitation upon an appropriation as to its expenditure is not general legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. Who has conceded that?

Mr. SWANSON. The Vice President has so ruled repeatedly. If this is a limitation upon the expenditure of money, it is not general legislation, even from the Senator's standpoint. Now, let us see whether it is a limitation upon the expenditure. We have $75,000,000 to be expended, whether section 5 prevails or not. This limitation upon the expenditure applies also to section 5, which stipulates that the appropriation can be expended only on a certain kind of road. It is a limitation as to the nature of the expenditure, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has well said. It simply limits the conditions under which this money is to be spent.

Mr. THOMAS. In other words, in the Senator's vocabulary "a limitation" and "an extension" are synonymous terms.

Mr. SWANSON. This amendment simply limits the character of roads on which the money can be expended.

Mr. THOMAS. It limits it to all the roads in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. All that is necessary to answer that is to call attention to the fact that the amendment in section 5 is an amendment not by way of limitation, but to extend the number of roads on which this money can be expended.

Mr. SWANSON. A limitation may either extend or contract. The amendment provides certain channels where this money shall be spent. It defines the conditions under which this money must be expended. The department will have no right to spend it for every purpose or for every kind of road. This section provides a limitation upon the expenditure. There is a limitation provided in the present statute, if the Senator will permit me, and the amendment we propose now is likewise a limitation. Is not that true?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, what class of roads in the United States, if this section is adopted, will be excluded from this appropriation?

Mr. SWANSON. Those that are not suitable for carrying the mails.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the very amendment that you have offered.

Mr. SWANSON. No; the provision says, "roads which are suitable." So the appropriation is limited to roads suitable for the carriage of the mail. If a road is not suitable for that purpose, the money can not be expended upon it.

Mr. THOMAS. It reads, "any public road which is now used, or may be made suitable, for the transportation of the United States mails."

Mr. SWANSON. If it is made suitable some of the appropriation may be expended upon it, but if it can not be made suitable to carry the mails, the department can not spend any money on it. It is perfectly plain.

Mr. THOMAS. It is as plain as mud.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield the floor to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to follow the suggestion made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] for the information of the Chair. Section 6, as the Chair has said, reads:

> That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act as herein amended, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums—

If section 5 goes out and sections 6, 7, and 8 are adopted, then the bill provides that the appropriations made by sections 6 and 8 are to be expended in accordance with the act "as hereby amended." Those appropriations can not be expended under the act as it was before; a limitation is put upon the use of the money appropriated by sections 6 and 7; and I insist that sections 6 and 7 would be utterly inoperative, even if adopted in this bill, if section 5 were taken out, unless, of course, they were amended so as to eliminate the words "as herein amended." That is to say, Mr. President, in construing the act the court would be obliged to say, "You can not spend this money in accordance with the act as it was passed a year or two ago, because it must be expended only under the provisions of that act as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. In just a moment. Therefore, I insist that we can not dissociate these three sections; we must construe them together in order to arrive at a just conclusion upon this matter.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. In the event the point of order is sustained, could not the Senator from Montana or some other Senator very easily move to strike out the words "as herein amended" in the second line of section 6?

Mr. WALSH. Quite so.

Mr. THOMAS. And would not the appropriation which it carries then be applicable under the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly. It would be then expended under the law as it now stands; but, Mr. President, I desire the Senator from Colorado to assume that the subsequent section is not amended and that those words are left there.

Mr. THOMAS. Before that, let me ask the Senator another question. Let us assume, for the sake of the argument, that there were no sections dividing the subjects matter, would not that part of it now included in section 5 then be subject to a demand for a separate vote or to a point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I dare say it would; but then the question would be squarely put up to the Senate as to whether they desired to make this appropriation expendable under the provisions of the law as it stands or to make it expendable only under the amended act.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, Mr. President, if I understand the position of the Senator, it leads to this necessary result, that a point of order that a certain proposed amendment is general legislation depends upon whether it is accompanied by an appropriation the expenditure of which depends upon whether or not that point of order is sustained. If it carries an appropriation, even in another section, the appropriation and the purpose of it must necessarily be considered in connection with the point of order for the purpose of determining whether it was within or without the rule of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is quite right in the general idea expressed in his language, although I do not approve of the language; but it has been repeatedly determined in this body that when an appropriation is made with a provision accompanying it limiting or directing the manner in which that appropriation is to be used, it is immaterial that it amends a general law; in other words—I have not expressed it quite right—it is immaterial that it directs the expenditure of that money in a way that is different from the general law.

Mr. THOMAS. I will say to the Senator that if he can find a precedent which sustains that proposition I will concede the point. It does not exist; it is incredible, Mr. President—and I am sorry that I am unable to express myself in appropriate language; I try to—it is incredible to me that the question of whether a proposed amendment is or is not general legislation shall depend upon whether it is or is not accompanied by an appropriation. Certainly there is nothing in the rule to justify that contention; and if it were so, then by the simple device of adding an appropriation to the proposed change we might put anything on a general appropriation bill in the way of general legislation, notwithstanding the inhibition of the rule.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word. I think I have heard it ruled in the Senate again and again that words which limit an appropriation, the uses and application of that appropriation, are not words of general legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator find a precedent to that effect?

Mr. STERLING. The tendency is to construe the word "limitation" as meaning "to cut down." The word "limitation" as we use it here bears no such construction. The word "limitation" means to prescribe, to fix limits. They may be broad or they may be narrow, so far as that is concerned; but words which define to what the appropriation shall go are words of limitation, be they never so broad or be they limited or narrow. I think the word "limitation" is often used in that sense when we come to construe a statute. I call attention to the definition of the word, as follows:

> Limitation: To bound; the act of bounding; circumscribing; the fixing of a limit or restriction.

The language in section 5 does fix a limit or a restriction. It provides that the appropriation shall be expended on those roads which are now post roads or on those roads which may be made suitable for post roads. That limits the appropriation, and I think nothing can be clearer. It is my clear recollection, without being able to refer to specific cases now, that the Chair has ruled again and again that language in the bill by way of an amendment which limits the expenditure of an appropriation provided for in the bill is not general legislation.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the word "limitation" does not imply something outside of—something beyond—the particular thing limited?

Mr. STERLING. I think it does; certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. If you include post roads and any road "that may be made suitable," what remains outside of that definition?

Mr. STERLING. I am taking the language now as it is. It is limited to those roads that are post roads and those that may be made suitable for post roads. That is a limitation, whatever you may say about the extent of the limitation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senate will indulge me for just a moment, the Senator from Colorado asked for a precedent.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I refer the Chair to pages 22 and 23 of the second volume of Precedents, in which the views of former President pro tempore Clarke, of Arkansas, are found. I read from the Precedents as follows:

[Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

MAY 2, 1914.

On motion, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13679) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

On an amendment increasing the salary of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture to $6,000, as follows:

"Provided, That if the position is held by any other than the present incumbent the salary shall be reduced to $5,000."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I make the point of order against the proviso that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. GORE. I think the proviso is subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Clarke of Arkansas). The Chair is not disposed to take the view that this limitation or direction as to the manner in which a specific sum of money is to be expended is general legislation in the sense of our rule on the subject. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark], however, spoke to the contrary with such confidence that he has raised a doubt in the mind of the Chair.

The Chair will state that his ruling is in line with a precedent made when we had under consideration an item in an appropriation bill providing that certain officers should be exempt from the operation of the civil-service law. The appropriation was designed to make a certain investigation in connection with this class of officers, and the Senator from North Carolina made the point, and the Vice President sustained it, that any legislation which sought to give direction for the expenditure of, or place a limitation upon, a particular item of appropriation was not subject to that point of order; that it was not general legislation. If Congress has power to appropriate the money, it has an incidental right to say how it shall be actually expended. The Chair holds that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I remember the case very well. That was no general legislation, and Senator Clarke was perfectly correct in deciding the way he did. That was an appropriation of $6,000 for one individual. It was special legislation and not general legislation; and therefore the President pro tempore ruled exactly right.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, if the Senator will kindly yield——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. It is necessary for me to attend a meeting of the Committee on Appropriations. I desire to offer an amendment to the next section, and have it lie on the table and be noted. I desire to ask the Chair to have me notified before the next section is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word in relation to a statement that was made by the Senator from South Dakota, and that was that whenever there was an appropriation made it was held that it was not general legislation.

Mr. STERLING. No.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that to be the Senator's statement. What did the Senator say?

Mr. STERLING. No; I said the words of limitation prescribing the extent or the manner in which the appropriation should be used are not general legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, general legislation, as it has been held in this body ever since I have been a Member of it, is legislation that is general in character, which does not apply to any one section of the country, or to any one class of employees of the Government, or to one person employed by the Government, but legislation general in its scope, applying to all parts of the United States and to every State in the Union alike. That is general legislation.

As far as I am concerned, I will say that I can not for the life of me see why this is not general legislation. It is claimed that the amendment is a limitation. The present law limits the expenditure of money to certain routes. The object of the amendment is that that limitation shall not be further limited or restricted, but that it shall be expanded so as to take in all of the roads of the United States. As far as that is concerned, Mr. President, the wording as it is in this section is unlimited, and therefore the question of limitation does not apply in the least.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if there is any road in the United States that may not be made suitable as a post road, this will not apply. It is to that extent a limitation.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if there is a road in the United States that can not be made suitable for a post road?

Mr. STERLING. I do not know whether there is not, but there easily might be.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not conceive of one.

Mr. STERLING. I think perhaps this would be taken into consideration, as to whether the postal business will warrant the construction of a post road.

Mr. SMOOT. But it does not say so. It is unlimited.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. To my mind there is no doubt that this $200,000,000 is absolutely in order. It seems to me that there can be no question about that. First, it is estimated for, which makes it in order under the rule; second, it is reported by a standing committee of the Senate. Consequently you agree that section 6 is in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not.

Mr. SWANSON. I am addressing myself to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. THOMAS. But the Senator said it was agreed.

Mr. SWANSON. I mean by the Senator from Utah. I suppose the Senator from Utah will agree that under the rules the $200,000,000 appropriation is in order, being estimated for, and being reported by a standing committee of the Senate, as a new item.

Mr. SMOOT. I think myself that if it has been estimated for and reported by a standing committee of the Senate on an appropriation bill, it is in order, and the point of order will not lie against it.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, that is plain. It has been reported by a standing committee of the Senate, and is included in this bill, and therefore it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In other words, as the Chair understands the Senator from Utah, the point of order would not lie as to sections 6, 7, and 8.

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is my opinion only; but I wish to say that it does not necessarily follow that no amendment could be made to those sections.

Mr. SWANSON. Of course; but it is in order for discussion, and the point of order can not be made against it, because it has two things that put it in order: It has been estimated for and it is reported by a standing committee of the Senate under the rules. Now, if that is in order, section 5 simply limits the conditions under which the money appropriated in sections 6 and 7 can be expended.

Under the rules, whether it is a general limitation or a special limitation makes no difference. Limitations can be either broadening or they can be narrowing. The Senator has an idea that it is not a limitation unless it is narrowing. A limitation is something that fixes the method in which money is spent.

Sections 6 and 7 are clearly in order. There can not be any dispute about that, it seems to me, for two reasons. Now, then, all that section 5 does is to limit the conditions under which the money appropriated under sections 6 and 7 can be used. To my mind it is clearly a limitation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is an amendment of a law on the statute books to-day, and that law limits any appropriation that has been made for the purpose of building roads.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SMOOT. And now it is proposed to amend section 2, and the amendment is not a limitation, but it is a broadening provision, and there is no limit on it. There is not a road in the United States that can not be made suitable for a post road.

Mr. SWANSON. Let us see what would be the result of the contention made by the Senator from Utah. He concedes that you can appropriate money, but he contends that you can not change the limitations under which it has to be spent; that when an appropriation of money is made by a new item, for all time in the future it must be subject to the old limitation of expenditure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is wrong. There is a way of changing general legislation; but our rules have said that it shall not be upon an appropriation bill. There is no question but that a bill could be introduced into Congress amending section 2 of the act of July 11, 1916, in any way—limiting it, or extending it, or making any change even to the repeal of it—but the rules say that you shall not do it upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. SWANSON. No; the rules forbid general legislation on an appropriation bill, which would mean that you could not put an entire road law on this.

Mr. SMOOT. Why so?

Mr. SWANSON. But if we come here and simply change the limitation in the old law, and this same limitation is applied with an amendment to this expenditure, the Senator admits that that is in order. To decide otherwise would be to say that Congress has the power to increase an appropriation and make it larger, but that it can not alter the limitation under which it is spent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR). A point of order is raised by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to section 5 of the bill because he states it comes within the prohibition of subsection 3 of Rule XVI. That subsection reads as follows:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

That rule has come up very frequently for a ruling by the Chair, as it seems from the precedents, and apparently there is a good deal of confusion as to the rulings of previous presiding officers; and very naturally so, because the rule itself is neither clear nor accurate, and it does seem to the Chair that the rule itself needs amendment and clarification. The Chair calls attention of the Senate to pages 60 and 61 of the Precedents of the Senate, which apparently forms a good rule by which this matter should be determined:

In deciding whether or not a given law is general, the purpose of the act and the objects on which it operates must be looked to. If these objects possess sufficient characteristics peculiar to themselves and the purpose of the legislation is germane thereto, they will be considered as a separate class, and legislation affecting them will be general; but if the distinctive characteristic of the class have no relation to that purpose of the legislation, or if objects which would appropriately belong to the same class have been excluded, the classification is faulty, and the law not "general." The effect, not the form of the law, determines its character.

Upon an examination of the four sections which constitute this amendment, it is virtually conceded by Senator SMOOT, who is an able parliamentarian, that sections 6, 7, and 8 are not subject to points of order. If sections 6, 7, and 8 are not subject to points of order—and the Chair does not think that they are subject to points of order—then it seems to the Chair to be beyond controversy that section 5 is a limitation upon the other sections named, and therefore——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the decision is announced, in view of what the Chair has said——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator just wait one moment until the Chair makes one other observation?

Mr. THOMAS. I simply wished to interpose a suggestion before the final decision was announced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will permit the Senator to do that.

The Chair is also of opinion that the ruling referred to by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is in point. In that ruling there was an amendment increasing the salary of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture to $6,000, which amendment read as follows:

Provided, That if the position is held by any other than the present incumbent the salary shall be reduced to $5,000.

After careful consideration, the President pro tempore of the Senate, Mr. Clarke of Arkansas—whom we all know to have been a great parliamentarian—decided that the point of order was not well taken. Later on, in connection with the same bill, a little lower down on the page, there was another amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], as follows:

Provided, That no part of this sum of $628,240 shall be used in connection with any money contributed or tendered by the General Education Board or any like organization.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] raised a point of order against that language, and that point of order was overruled. Surely, if those two matters were not general legislation, it seems to the Chair that section 5 is not general legislation.

The Chair also calls the attention of the Senate to a ruling made on May 15, 1914, where the provision was as follows:

Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $100,000 shall be used for furnishing the primary markets in the cotton-growing States with a set of the samples as standardized by the Government and a sample of the bleached and unbleached yarns made from the different grades, showing the waste, tensile strength, and bleaching quality thereof.

And a point of order was overruled to that provision on the ground that it was not general legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. And that was right, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will now hear the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Chair stated at the commencement of his opinion that, inasmuch as no point of order had been presented to the succeeding sections, the Chair would regard section 5 as a limitation upon the appropriation, and therefore not general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator misunderstood the Chair. The Chair said that, it being virtually conceded, because of the fact that those sections were reported from a standing committee, and because they were estimated for, that sections 6, 7, and 8 were not subject to a point of order, the Chair thought that section 5 was a limitation upon those sections.

Mr. THOMAS. That is a statement of the same thing in different language. I have a point of order, Mr. President, to section 6, which is founded upon section 2 of Rule XVI, which provides that—

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations—

And the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill informs me that no such reference was made. Hence I think it is subject to a point of order, on the ground that the amendment has been reported without compliance with that section of the rule. So if that be a substantial point of order, and should be sustained, then the reasoning of the Chair, or, at least, the preliminary reasoning of the Chair, with regard to the subject matter of the first point of order falls to the ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Subsection 3 of Rule XVI provides that this matter may be settled by the Senate without debate. The Chair first thought that that was the proper way to settle this matter, but the doubt the Chair had it no longer has. Therefore the point of order is overruled, and the Senator from Colorado may appeal from the decision of the Chair if he is not satisfied with it. The Chair trusts he may appeal, because the matter is doubtful and the Senate should decide it.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I shall not appeal. I know that the Senate is hungry for this $200,000,000. The position taken by the Chair will be sustained, and I shall not waste time upon it. But inasmuch as the Chair has virtually decided that these three sections are practically the same thing, I wish to submit, in the discharge of what I conceive to be my duty, the point of order to section 6 which I have just stated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am compelled to go to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee desires to report out the legislative appropriation bill and is in session now. I wanted to offer a substitute for section 6, and I am going to ask the chairman of the committee if he will not let section 6 go over until to-morrow, and take up the other questions that were passed over in the bill for the balance of the day.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I make the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that the Senator from Utah desires to offer a substitute for section 6.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that he has an amendment pending to section 5.

Mr. SMOOT. I have already had my amendment printed, but, of course, I did not want to offer it until section 6 is finally decided upon, so that there are to be no further amendments to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator from Utah want the point of order which I have suggested to section 6 also to go over?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; I do not want the point of order to go over. The Senator can make that; but, as I have to leave the Chamber, I do want section 6 to go over to-night, and I want to offer a substitute for it when it is in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If section 6 is going over to-night, I want the point of order to go over, too.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be all right; and I think it will be just as well to let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that the Senator has an amendment pending to section 5.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to strike out "or" and insert "and" in line 22.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator having the bill in charge has asked that that be reconsidered; and the whole matter can be settled in a very little while.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I understand that the Senator having the bill in charge objected to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I objected to that, and it was reconsidered, and it is now open, before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. And I want it all passed over until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, do I understand that section 5 is passed over, as well as the following sections relating to roads?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; it has all been passed over. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was, on page 39, line 3, to change the number of section from 5 to 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I think is acceptable to the chairman and which has the approval of the department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryalnd offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 22, where it reads:

For street-car collection service, $9,000.

It is proposed to strike out the numerals "$9,000" and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

$19,000: Provided, Of this amount the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may expend not to exceed $10,000 in experimenting and testing a method of rapid collection of letter mail in suburban territory.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the amendment is strongly urged by the Post Office Department, and I see no objection to it; and as far as I am concerned I will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I have the amendment stated again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the Senator from Maryland give us some idea as to the nature of these experiments—what is had in mind by the department? I have noticed that when a sum is appropriated for carrying on an experiment it is the beginning of a large list of appropriations, which generally extend for many years in the future. What is this?

Mr. FRANCE. This will not involve any large expenditures in the future. It is merely to provide for experimentation with a device by which the mail may be easily collected by suburban trolley cars. I do not feel that it will involve any large expenditure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to speak a little louder.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator states that it is a device by which mail may be collected by suburban trolley cars?

Mr. FRANCE. A device by which suburban trolley cars easily collect the mail, bringing it in to a central point.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume that some one must alight from the car and take the mail out of the mail box.

Mr. FRANCE. Not at all. This is a device which can be placed upon either the front or the rear of the car, entirely uncovered and accessible to all, so that a letter can be dropped into the box without any difficulty; but the nature of the device is such that while it is entirely open and without top, the rain can not get to the mail. I shall be very glad to submit, in this connection, the letter from the Postmaster General.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not wish to criticize the device or any effort made to expedite the collection of mail; but it seems very strange that it should require $10,000 to put those things upon the front or rear of a trolley car.

Mr. FRANCE. The Senator will note from the language of the amendment that the whole of the sum of $10,000 need not be expended.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, but it will be; the Senator from Maryland need not have any doubt about that.

Mr. FRANCE. It is within the discretion of the Postmaster General to determine how much of this sum will be required for this experiment. I hope the Senator will not object, as I have had the matter up with the department, and I feel that the department is quite in favor of this appropriation for this experimentation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no doubt the department is, Mr. President. Did the Senator ask that a letter might be read?

Mr. FRANCE. I ask that the letter may be read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It may explain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1919.

Hon. J. H. BANKHEAD,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BANKHEAD: In answer to your inquiry relative to an amendment proposed by Senator FRANCE to the Post Office appropriation bill, appropriating $10,000 for experimental street-car collection service, I wish to state that it is the judgment of the First Assistant Postmaster General that this appropriation should be made, as it is believed that a service of this character can be used to advantage in certain cities where the street cars all diverge from one center or point. An appropriation of the amount mentioned above would be sufficient to determine the feasibility of such service. Instead of making this a separate item, it is believed that it should be included in item 19, page 30, of the committee print of the bill, which can be done by increasing the amount for street-car collection service from $9,000 to $19,000.

The amendment, therefore, has my approval.

Respectfully,

A. S. BURLESON, Postmaster General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I simply desire to remark that after hearing the letter read, I know nothing more about it than I did before.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee or the Senator from Maryland if there is not a general fund provided which authorizes the Postmaster General and the various heads of departments to conduct legitimate and proper experiments with a view to improving the service? I understand there is a contingent fund at the disposal of the Postmaster General which would permit reasonable experimentation with respect to devices, and so forth, necessary for the improvement of the service.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is such a fund, but it does not apply to experiments like this.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Can the Senator state something as to the nature of this experiment? What is so mysterious about this matter of collecting letters in mail boxes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is nothing mysterious about it. I do not care anything about it. I do not care whether it goes in the bill or not. The Postmaster General thought it ought to go in.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know $10,000 amounts to nothing at all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Postmaster General explained it in the letter which has been read. He explains that you can not use this device on all the street railways of the country, but there are a great many places in the country where the cars congregate at one place and bring in mail from the country. The purpose of this device, I understand, is to attach it on the side of a street car which goes through the country and wherever it stops, wherever a passenger gets off or on, even when it goes by, if it is not going too fast, anybody can drop a letter into the box and it is delivered at the place where the cars congregate in the city. It is believed that it will be a very convenient and appropriate thing to experiment and try out. That is the view of the Post Office Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For the life of me I can not understand why there is anything original in the idea. It is simply tacking a mail box to a trolley car and letting people drop letters in it, so far as I can see, and now we are asked to appropriate, it is true, an infinitesimal sum. Ten thousand dollars means nothing, I suppose. I shall ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to inquire if it is to be placed on the street cars of Washington?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; the Postmaster General will not attempt to use it on the street cars of Washington. The Senator very well knows that, too.

Mr. KENYON. There might be more space for people to ride on. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE].

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask the Senate to return to page 16, line 22.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that only committee amendments are now in order. The Chair will recognize the Senator from New Hampshire a little later. The amendment of the committee which was passed over will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 22, after the words "Provided further," the committee report to strike out:

That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $300,000 for the purchase of aeroplanes and the operation and maintenance of aeroplane service between such points as may be determined. That the Postmaster General in expending the appropriation herein for aeroplane service shall purchase, so far as possible, the aeroplanes, motors, equipment, and supplies from the War Department and Navy Department when no longer required because of the cessation of war activities. It shall be the duty of the Postmaster General before purchasing any of such articles to ascertain whether the War or Navy Department has articles of the character described that are serviceable. And articles purchased from either of said departments, if the same have not been used, shall be paid for at a reasonable price, not to exceed actual cost, and if the same have been used, at a reasonable price based upon length of usage. Said departments are authorized to sell such articles to the Post Office Department under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to deliver immediately to the Postmaster General 100 De Haviland four aeroplanes, 100 Handley-Pages, 10 Glen Martin day bombers, all planes completely assembled and with the necessary spare parts; also 100 extra Liberty engines with spare parts, 50 Hispano-Suiza engines with 300-horsepower motors, and 20 Hispano-Suiza engines with 150-horsepower motors, the same to be out of any equipment that the War Department has on hand or under construction, the War Department appropriation to be credited with the equipment turned over to the Post Office Department: And provided further, That separate accounts be kept of the amount expended for aeroplane service, and that no part of said sums shall be expended for the maintenance or operation of the aeroplanes above directed to be delivered to the Postmaster General by the Secretary of War, but such machines shall be operated and maintained by the personnel of the Air Service of the Army, under the control and direction of the Postmaster General.

And to insert:

That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $850,500 for the purchase of aeroplanes and the operation and maintenance of aeroplane mail service between such points as he may determine. The Postmaster General in expending this appropriation shall purchase, as far as practicable, such available and suitable equipment and supplies for the aeroplane mail service as may be owned by or under construction for the War Department or the Navy Department when no longer required because of the cessation of war activities, and it shall be his duty to first ascertain if such articles of the character described may be secured from the War Department or the Navy Department before purchasing such equipment or supplies elsewhere. If such equipment or supplies are purchased elsewhere than from the War Department or the Navy Department, the Postmaster General shall report such action to Congress, together with the reasons for such purchases. All articles purchased from either of said departments, if the same have not been used, shall be paid for at a reasonable price not to exceed actual cost, and if the same have been used, a reasonable price shall be paid therefor, considering wear and tear and general condition. Said departments are authorized to sell such equipment and supplies to the Post Office Department under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed to deliver immediately to the Postmaster General, as he may request, and as hereinbefore provided, such aeroplane machines, supplies, equipment, and parts as may be serviceable and available for the aeroplane mail service, the same to be out of any equipment that the War Department or the Navy Department has on hand or under construction, the War Department and the Navy Department appropriations to be credited with the equipment turned over to the Post Office Department: And provided further, That separate accounts be kept of the amount expended for aeroplane mail service.

So as to make the clause read:

For inland transportation by railroad routes and aeroplanes, $59,625,000: Provided, That not to exceed $1,000,000 may be expended for payment of freight and incidental charges for the transportation of mails conveyed under special arrangement in freight trains or otherwise: Provided further, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $850,500 for the purchase of aeroplanes, etc.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is interested in this amendment and I do not see him in the Chamber. It went over at his request. I ask the Senator from Alabama if he will not consent that the amendment may be passed over until the Senator from Washington is in the Chamber?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Can the Senator tell me when the Senator from Washington will be in the Chamber? He may not be here before next week.

Mr. KING. I will make inquiry and ascertain. I am sure he has not left the city.

Mr. NEW. I know the Senator from Washington is interested in this committee amendment. So am I on another matter. I will offer an amendment to the amendment. I move to strike out "$850,500," where it appears in line 12, on page 18, and insert the figures "$300,000."

Mr. KING. Will the Senator accept an amendment to make it $100,000? If not, I shall offer an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. NEW. I hesitate to accept the amendment. I shall not fight the Senator's amendment to my amendment very vigorously, however, if it is offered; but I offer the amendment to make the figure "$300,000" in place of "$850,500," in line 12 on page 18.

Mr. JONES of Washington entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NEW. On this subject I should like to say just a few words. I am offering this amendment not because I do not believe the airplane is going to come into pretty general use in the transportation of mail—at least much more general use than is found for it now—but I am offering it because I believe, and, in fact, I am absolutely confident, that the Post Office Department is not equipped at present to carry on any extended operations of that character. I believe $300,000 is fully as much money as should be given for the kind of experimentation it has in mind at this time.

I have no doubt whatever that if $850,500, which is provided in the committee amendment, is given, the money will be spent, and it will be added to what has already been spent without compensating results in the field of airplane experimentation. I do not believe the service is at all constituted to spend $850,500 intelligently or to advantage at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to say one word with reference to this item.

In the last Congress $300,000 was appropriated for this experiment. The Postmaster General organized a route from here to New York and he has been experimenting with it. He came before the committee and insisted that he could not make a fair experiment on one short route, and he wanted to get an appropriation sufficient to enable him to experiment on two routes, suggesting that one should start at Boston and end at Norfolk and the other from New York and end in Chicago or some point in that vicinity. If he had money enough to make these two experiments and put on these two routes, he felt that he would be able to report to the next Congress whether it would be advisable to continue this service or whether it would be advisable to further experiment with it.

Now, that is the reason why the appropriation was increased from the $300,000 given last year to the amount contained in the bill as reported by the committee. With the appropriation provided in the last act he can establish only one route. With the increased appropriation that the committee reports he can establish two experimental routes of considerable length, his contention being that he can not make a fair experimental test on a short route and that he ought to be permitted to cover more territory and more extensively experiment as to whether the project is feasible and one that it would be desirable to continue.

That is the whole question, as I understand it. If the Senate of the United States thinks we ought not to enter upon these experiments on the subject of airplane mail the Senate can vote the amendment out or reduce the amount. My own judgment is that the Postmaster General ought to be permitted to make the experiment or the experimentation ought to be stopped entirely. He came before the committee and stated that he can not experiment on one short route; that he can not reach a conclusion that is satisfactory to himself or to the Post Office Department with the experiments that he is permitted to make with an appropriation of $300,000. It is perfectly evident from his statement that he can not put on any other route with an appropriation of $300,000, and he will have to continue with the one that he has established from here to New York. That route, he says, is too short to make a fair experiment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to ask the Senator whether it is necessary to build special airplanes for this service. Have we not airplanes already constructed sufficient to supply the service?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will read the provision in the bill he will ascertain how these airplanes must be obtained and from where. We provide in the amendment that the Postmaster General shall get airplanes from the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War.

Mr. FLETCHER. What I am particularly interested in is whether it is necessary to build special planes for this service.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then, another question occurs to me. The Senator seems to have based his contention that the item ought to be retained on the theory that it is necessary in order to make a full and complete experiment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is my contention.

Mr. FLETCHER. But the item says that it is for the purchase of airplanes, and the operation and maintenance of airplanes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask the Senator to go on and read the balance of the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the whole sentence. Then it proceeds:

That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $850,500 for the purchase of aeroplanes and the operation and maintenance of aeroplane mail service between such points as he may determine.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The next part of the amendment shows how the Postmaster General may obtain planes.

Mr. FLETCHER. It does speak about how he shall obtain them, but the point I make is that it does not specify that the appropriation of $850,500 is for experimental purposes, but rather for the purchase of airplanes and the operation and maintenance of airplanes. That seems to be the language of the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the language of the last clause.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator inform us what the result of the experiment has been between Washington and New York, as to the amount of mail carried and as to the financial returns, because I suppose everybody knows——

Mr. BANKHEAD. The testimony before the committee and the report of the Postmaster General, which is found on pages 16 and 17 of the hearings, would indicate that the experiment as made was somewhat of a failure as to the revenues derived. Nobody claims that it is self-sustaining on the short route from here to New York. The Postmaster General does not make such a claim.

Mr. KING. Were we not assured by Mr. Praeger—I think he is the Second Assistant Postmaster General——

Mr. BANKHEAD. He is.

Mr. KING. Or at least by some one who assumed to speak for the Post Office Department, that there would be a revenue in the airplane mail service? As I recall the debate when the last appropriation bill was before the Senate, some statement was made which indicated that it would be profitable, that the people would avail themselves to a very large extent of the airplane service in the transmission of mail.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that was the original idea of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, but to be perfectly frank, the department has not had a fair opportunity to make the experiment and determine whether the service should be permanent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to direct the attention of the Senator from Utah to the testimony of Mr. Praeger, who has this matter in charge. It is found on page 88 of the Senate committee hearings:

Senator HARDWICK. As I understand it, we only have one route actually established and in operation, and that is between Washington and New York.

Mr. PRAEGER. Yes, sir; only one route, and it carried seven thousand four hundred and odd pounds of aeroplane mail at the aeroplane rate of postage; and the receipts from that were $60,653.28.

Senator HARDWICK. You get that much in actual money from the mail you carried?

Mr. PRAEGER. Yes, sir.

Senator HARDWICK. And how much did it cost you to carry it?

Mr. PRAEGER. The cost of operation was $75,165.94, which includes a bookkeeping charge of 6 per cent interest on the investment, and 33⅓ per cent depreciation.

I call the Senate's attention to the fact that this route, which is confessedly an inadequate route in so far as the cost and the efficiency of it are concerned, lacked less than $15,000 of paying for itself last year. I think under the circumstances it is a splendid showing.

The Second Assistant Postmaster General goes on further to say in his examination that if he were permitted to extend the route from Boston to New York and to Washington and Norfolk, he believes that it could be made fully self-sustaining another year.

It seems to me, in the light of those figures, we should give him this extra amount for the purpose of extending the route. It appears to me that it is a splendid showing. No one expected it to pay, and the fact that there was a loss of less than $15,000 in one year shows the wisdom of Congress in undertaking it. The time will come when probably most of our mail will be carried by airplanes. I hope to see the day when we shall have airplane service all over this continent.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Indiana will be voted down. It ought to be voted down. It is an amendment against progress. We discussed this question here a year ago. It was discussed fully by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and others who were not in favor of the appropriation at that time. The wisdom of Congress in making the appropriation has, in my judgment, been fully established by the experiments that we have already made and the very small loss involved. We should always go forward in this work and not backward.

I trust the amendment of the Senator from Indiana will not be agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. May I seek some information? I wish to ask members of the committee, the chairman, and the Senator from Tennessee if it is not a fact that foreign Governments have inaugurated this service, particularly in Great Britain and portions of France, and have they not developed a great deal of success with it, notwithstanding their first failure? Have we any evidence before the committee of the extent to which foreign Governments have proceeded? Is it not true that our program is, as it were, one in conjunction generally with the international carriage of mail by airplane?

Mr. NEW obtained the floor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has the floor. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NEW. Yes; to answer that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I rose to say that I have a statement of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, which gives the complete history of this service in all foreign countries that have it in operation as well as in this country, and I am going to ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest that the paper be read.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the paper be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the insertion in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. LEWIS. The only reason, I may say to the able Senator from Pennsylvania, why I would not ask to have it read is that I do not want to intrude upon the time of the Senator from Indiana, unless the Senator from Indiana desires to have it read.

Mr. KING. I should like to have it read.

Mr. NEW. I would like to have it read.

Mr. LEWIS. Then, of course, I shall be glad to have it read.

Mr. NEW. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. I hope it will be read. It is a very important matter, and some of us are not fully informed about it. It is the general impression that the service between here and New York has been a total failure, owing to the uncertainty of the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reading the paper? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

JANUARY 30, 1919.

MEMORANDUM ON AERIAL MAIL SERVICE.

The Aerial Mail Service was inaugurated May 15, 1918, and during the first six months of its existence its operations covered 68,892 miles, at a cost of $75,165.94, including 6 per cent on investment and 33⅓ per cent for depreciation. In that period it carried between Washington and New York 7,452½ pounds of aeroplane mail. The revenue derived was $60,653.28. The net deficit, not taking into account the 6 per cent interest on investment, was $8,969.08. In addition to the aeroplane mail carried there was dispatched between Washington, Philadelphia, and New York in the six months' period a total of 91,926½ pounds of first-class mail, aggregating 3,667,040 letters. This mail was advanced in dispatch from 6 to 16 hours, which many times made up for the small deficit in the operation of this service. This ordinary mail was letter mail from distant States, which was carried in addition to the aeroplane mail. Thus the ordinary mail put on the planes at Washington was usually mail from the South Atlantic Coast States and the Gulf States, distributed to carriers by the Railway Mail Service before reaching Washington, and by reason of aeroplane dispatch was delivered in New York on the same afternoon instead of the following morning.

The Washington-New York route was established not as a typical commercial line, but to solve the problems that had to be met to establish a daily dependable schedule. The flying record made on the New York-Washington line has never been equaled in the history of aviation, and its operation by civilian fliers of the Post Office Department has far exceeded its operation while under military control, the civilian fliers having a record of but 7 forced landings in 100 consecutive flights and only 2 failures in that time on account of fog or storm conditions. The mail has been carried in blinding rain and hail, on fog-bound days with visibility of not over half a mile, and in the face of gales. Only two winter gales were strong enough to prevent the aeroplanes from completing their journey. On Thursday, January 23, the mail was brought south as far as Silverside, Del., in the face of a 65-mile gale at an altitude of a few thousand feet.

The fastest time of flight carrying the mail from College Park to Belmont Park, N. Y., a distance of 218 miles, was 1 hour and 30 minutes, and the slowest time for a continuous flight was 4 hours and 56 minutes. The average time is 2 hours and 40 minutes. The common experience of the users of aeroplane mail is that a letter posted in the down-town stations in Washington as late as 10.50 a. m., and leaving the aviation field at 11.30 a. m., is usually delivered between 4 and 4.30 in the afternoon, which is in ample time before close of business.

EXTENSION OF SERVICE.

The greater the distance between the points on an aerial mail route the greater is the service rendered to commerce and the greater is the patronage of the line. A mail service leaving New York at 6 in the morning and arriving in Chicago before 3 o'clock in the afternoon, in time to connect with carrier deliveries, will advance the mail between the two cities by 16 hours over any train dispatch that can be made after the departure of the Twentieth Century Limited from New York at 2.45 p. m. The department desires to establish this line immediately and extend it west to the foot of the Rockies during the coming fiscal year, with the view of reaching the seaports of Seattle and San Francisco, if Congress authorizes the appropriation necessary. The air mail time between New York and San Francisco will be less than 40 hours. It is desired that this transcontinental trunk line shall be tapped by lines from Minneapolis, St. Paul, St. Louis, Kansas City, and other points, and ultimately by a line from Boston, via Albany, Buffalo, and Detroit, to Chicago.

A north and south trunk line from Boston to Atlanta should likewise be established, with an ultimate extension from Boston to Montreal, Canada, and from Atlanta, via Key West, to Habana. Based on the accurate cost accounting kept in the operation of the Washington-New York air mail line, the cost of an east and west trunk line from New York as far west as Omaha and a north and south trunk line from Boston to Atlanta has been carefully estimated at $1,600,000. To this should be added $400,000 for several essential feeders that would connect up Detroit, Minneapolis and St. Paul, St. Louis, Kansas City, and other points, and would admit of an extension as far west as Salt Lake City, this extension, however, dependent upon the extent to which the Government equipment can be transformed into strong and safe mail-carrying machines.

For this reason it would be very desirable to obtain an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the ensuing fiscal year.

AERIAL PROGRAM OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Such an appropriation and such a program will be found to be modest compared with the plans of the English, Italian, Canadian, French, and other Governments for the development and extension of aerial mail service during the present calendar year. The Italian Government is already operating commercial air lines three times as extensive as the single line now in operation in this country, in addition to the operation of several military air mail lines from Rome to the front. The Canadian Government is preparing to go extensively into the aerial mail service and has advised the postal administration of the United States that it will send a representative to Washington to work out a plan of cooperation with this country. The following is a summary prepared by the publishers of Aviation on the aerial mail and passenger services in various foreign countries gathered from the latest information obtainable:

EQUIPMENT.

The Post Office Department has made a sincere effort to comply with the general and natural sentiment that the war planes left over at the conclusion of hostilities should be utilized in carrying the mails. The attempt at once developed that the DH–4's, of which more than 1,000 are said to be available, are too lightly built for commercial work. They were produced in immense haste for light war purposes, to rise from a prepared field, drop a certain number of bombs, fire machine-gun ammunition, and return to a prepared aerodrome empty. When required to make forced landings because of engine trouble they crumple up in a majority of the cases, frequently crippling or killing the pilot. The single casualty and the single case of serious physical injury sustained in the operation of the aerial mail service in this country, covering 93,463 miles of operation, were sustained in the persistent and conscientious effort made by the Post Office Department to utilize the DH–4 for cross-country commercial work. Single-motor planes must be expected to occasionally develop engine trouble, which necessitates a forced landing for readjustments. These forced landings must be frequently made over fields that are soft from rain or with holes, gulleys, or small obstructions that will turn a plane upon its back while coming to a stop on the ground. Whenever this occurs to a strong commercial machine, such as is used on the New York-Washington run, the damage is usually slight and the delay not serious.

However, when a DH turns turtle in such landings it generally sustains more serious injury. In a majority of the cases it fairly crumples up, resulting in bad spills or injury for the pilots. This is the result of the light construction of the planes, which makes them unavailable except possibly for the special war purposes for which they were designed.

There are also in this country, which might be available for mail service, a number of twin-motor Handley-Paiges. These planes are of a slow type, with an average speed loaded of from 70 to 90 miles according to the characteristics of the individual plane. It requires the two engines to keep it in the air with a load, the result being that with one engine getting out of order the twin-motored Handley-Paige of the type that were built in this country will come to the ground, although the other engine is intact and operating under full power.

Just as the war was coming to a close certain American manufacturers created twin-motor planes which surpassed anything in that line on the battle front. These planes have sufficient speed to make better than fast railroad time against the severest windstorms; also they can continue on their course in the air with a load against head winds with one engine operating. They can be built strong enough for commercial purposes and will prove satisfactory mail machines.

In the expenditure of any appropriation made by Congress it would be the policy of the Post Office Department first to use such of the De Havilland machines as can be rebuilt and strengthened with reasonable cost. A rebuilt plane of this character has been completed and is undergoing tests to ascertain whether it will be a dependable and safe machine. The services of some of the best aeronautical engineers of the country generously have been placed at the command of the Post Office Department to assist in solving the problem of making the surplus war planes suitable for commercial cross-country work. Should all these efforts fail to develop out of the war material a practical mail-carrying machine, it would be the purpose of the Post Office Department to call upon manufacturers for designs and bids for a commercial twin-motor machine of reasonable cost for carrying the mails. It is believed that with readjusted conditions in the aircraft industry with the cessation of war orders it will be possible to obtain such machines for considerably less than $20,000 by utilizing surplus parts and engines which the War Department has put at the disposal of the Post Office Department.

ARMY COOPERATION.

It has always been the policy of the Post Office Department to seek the fullest cooperation with the Army and Navy Departments in their training programs, so that the military personnel and equipment used in military training might incidentally render a civic function in carrying the mails. The Post Office Department has offered to take details of Army fliers and Army mechanics and to utilize war equipment in carrying the mails to such an extent as the military authorities may deem the practice gained by its personnel in the mail service of training value. In this cooperation the Post Office Department has pointed out that the maintenance of mail schedules must be the prime consideration, and that this can be obtained only through placing the men detailed to the Post Office Department under the direction and control of the Postmaster General during the period of such detail. The service can be operated from the standpoint of maintaining mail schedules more efficiently by the Post Office Department. Likewise the service can be operated at a much less cost to the Government by the Post Office Department than it can be operated by a military branch, notwithstanding the higher wages paid to civilian aviators and mechanics, for the reason that it is the policy in the military branches to be more lavish with men and materials than obtains in civilian operations.

The extent of the expansion of the aerial mail program in this country will naturally depend upon the amount of cooperation that the military authorities may finally determine would be of value in their air training program. This factor, however, is a matter of uncertainty, and it is therefore desirable that Congress should make an appropriation of at least $2,000,000 that a substantial aerial mail service may be inaugurated, independent of the final determination of the military authorities as to the value and the extent of utilizing the aerial mail service as an adjunct to their training program. If this is not done it is probable that this country at the end of a year will find itself as far behind in the commercial development of aviation as it found itself in military aviation upon entry into the recent war.

OTTO PRAEGER,
Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I have previously seen the report which has just been read, and I have listened to its reading now with renewed interest. Certainly no Senator on this floor has greater faith in the future of aerial navigation than have I. I may be a dreamer on the subject, but, Mr. President, I think I foresee the day when the airplane will not only be used for the very general transmission of the mails but when Senators who live on the western coast will be taken to and from their homes by airplanes, if they will stand for it, before we see the end of the development of aerial navigation.

However, Mr. President, I do not believe that this is the time or the place to indulge in what I think is an extravagant experiment. I believe we should have a central and separate department of the Government devoted to aeronautics. Not only that, but I believe we shall have it before we get through with this thing. I think it is inevitable; and at another time—I do not mind revealing my intentions to press for the passage of the bill which I introduced here last August, and which has been on the calendar of the Senate since the 17th day of September last, calling for the institution of a separate and distinct department of aeronautics. I believe in that. Other nations of the world are making very extensive experiments, and with separate aircraft departments.

As I have said, I have read this report and have again listened to it here to-day. I know what those foreign nations are doing, but they are pursuing those experiments in an intelligent and a systematic way. Nearly every one of them has a separate and distinct department of aeronautics, which has the direction of everything pertaining to the subject.

Here we have the War Department, that is making many experiments; the Navy Department, that is making experiments; the Marine Corps, that is making experiments; and the Post Office Department—four departments of the Government, at least, who are now each conducting their own lines of experiment in aeronautical navigation. Neither one of them to this hour is equipped to do it, not even the War Department.

The whole matter of aerial navigation as it has been worked out in this country in the last two years has been the one conspicuous failure that we have made, and I do not want to see that failure continued and enlarged, as it is to be if we are going to permit each one of four or more departments of the Government to be making separate and distinct experiments of their own, each at very great cost.

The Assistant Postmaster General, in this report, speaks of the establishment of lines between Chicago and San Francisco. That is all right. I believe that that is all possible and probable at some day; but, Mr. President, we have to-day not a single airplane field between Chicago and San Francisco. They can not inaugurate anything of that kind and maintain it without such fields. The whole matter as it is proposed by the Post Office Department here is so nebulous and so indefinite that, to my mind, it is perfectly apparent that the $850,500 which is asked for in this appropriation will be added to the money which we have already poured into that same hole, and the product of it will be to have added that much to what we have not got.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield to me?

Mr. NEW. I will yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. KING. That is all I desire. I want to ask the Senator, who is a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and who has given a great deal of attention to the subject of aeronautics, if it is not a fact that, as a result of the war out of which we have just emerged, there has been somewhat of a change of opinion with regard to certain airplanes, and if the countries which have been using airplanes are not now attempting to revalue—if I may be permitted the expression—the uses of airplanes, and to determine those which would be the most serviceable for bombing purposes, for mail purposes, and for freight purposes, if freight may be carried? In other words, would it not be unwise to inaugurate this as a permanent system or to engage in experimentation so long as we have not yet made a true ascertainment of the virtues and the failure of aerial service up to the present time?

Mr. NEW. Oh, Mr. President, that is a pretty broad question and covers a great deal of ground. By way of a general answer to it I will say that I do not believe that I want the United States to refrain from any further investigation or experimentation, for that matter, along the line of the development of the science of aeronautics until some other nation shall have demonstrated what a great thing, I think, it is going to be. I am, however, talking to this one particular point—the appropriation here at this time and in this bill of $850,500 for the Post Office Department to play with.

The department speaks of the establishment of a route from Chicago to New York; they have undertaken that. Why, it is considerably more than a month—it is nearly two months ago—that they announced definitely that they were ready to proceed with the carrying of mails over that route; but up to this very minute, Mr. President, not one single letter has ever been delivered in either New York or Chicago from either end of that airplane route.

Mr. McKELLAR. Naturally, they could not, because they have not the appropriation with which to do the work.

Mr. NEW. Because they are not equipped to manage the route; that is the fact of it.

It is true the War Department has in this country now—well, I do not wish to be held to a strict accounting for what I am about to say—but I think it is something like 1,400 or 1,500 De Haviland four planes on hand. I do not know why they can not be used for these experimental purposes which are spoken of here. I am aware of the fact that some of them were delivered to the Post Office Department and were turned back. I know that, but the fact that they were turned back does not convince me that they were not serviceable.

Mr. President, we have something more than 6,000 trained pilots in the War Department and we have nearly 5,000 cadets who have been graduated for flying purposes. I do not see why the War Department can not be called upon to furnish such fliers and such machines as the Post Office Department needs for carrying on their experiments.

At this point, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama why it is necessary for us to make a large appropriation here for one department of the Government to purchase planes and equipment from another department of the Government?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to answer that question, I should like to quote for him what Mr. Praeger, the Second Assistant Postmaster General, has to say about that very matter. I had the same idea which the Senator from Indiana seems to have when I asked this question:

Senator McKELLAR. Don't you think that after this war is over you are going to be able to get those planes at a greatly reduced cost?

Mr. PRAEGER. We had figured on being able to utilize the Army's aeroplanes without asking for an appropriation to buy any machines at all.

Now, the status of the Army planes is this: You have to rebuild each one for commercial purposes. Take your Handley-Paige plane. That will cost between $10,000 and $15,000 to set up, because they are not set up; you simply have the machinery, woodwork, fuselage, and engines; you have to really build them up.

Senator HITCHCOCK. Then your conclusion on that point is that the Post Office Department will have to buy or build its own planes for mail service?

Mr. PRAEGER. We have got to modify all of the machines which were built primarily for the Army's use.

Senator HARDWICK. Is it more economical to take these War Department machines over and modify them or buy new ones?

Mr. PRAEGER. There are some War Department machines that we will probably be able to utilize with a less expense than it would cost us to buy a new machine. The war planes were all built under war conditions at a very high rate for labor, a very high rate for materials, and——

Senator HARDWICK (interposing). Under rush order.

Mr. PRAEGER (continuing). On the cost-plus basis; and these machines will all sell for a great deal less, possibly 40 per cent more off for depreciation.

Senator McKELLAR. Let me ask you, Mr. Praeger, if we can not utilize these Liberty motors? I am afraid to say the number we have on hand, but it strikes me it is somewhere in the neighborhood of 20,000 or more. Now, can not they be utilized? They are in storage in Europe and in this country; and it seems to me they ought to be utilized in this service.

Mr. PRAEGER. Yes. We have asked the Secretary of War to remit to us 100 of their engines, besides the 100 engines in the 100 De Havilands which they gave us. We are dealing right now with the Navy Department, which is going to sell us machines that we can change for about three-quarters of their values at 60 per cent off for depreciation for this purpose. Ordinarily they would have to sell them to the junkman, because they are obsolete as fighting machines; they are heavier than any of the Army machines that have gone across.

There the Senator will see just the situation. These Army machines have to be changed in order to carry the mail, and it requires money to change them. All of that is taken into consideration in the proposal mentioned in this bill.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I do not subscribe to the theory that there must be such numerous and expensive changes in machines which we have just finished building. It is true that they may not be entirely adapted to the purpose of carrying the mail, but they are adapted to the purpose of carrying on experiments and ascertaining whether or not the carriage of mail by airplane can be made successful.

Mr. President, getting back to the main subject again, I wish to renew my protest against this appropriation, on the ground that the Post Office Department is not equipped to carry on these experiments; there is no one connected with the department who knows enough about the subject of aviation to conduct these experiments intelligently and with a view to determining whether or not the service is a success.

This matter was discussed in the other House, and the House made an appropriation of $300,000, unless I am mistaken, and I do not think I am—and if I am I ask to be corrected——

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NEW. The House made an appropriation of $300,000 for this service, and I think that is fully as large an appropriation as the Senate is justified in making at this time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I wish to state to the Senate what controlled the committee in making this recommendation. As the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has already stated, $300,000 was appropriated last year for experimental purposes. The experiment was conducted on a route from Washington to New York, and the Senate has heard the result of that experiment. While it was not as satisfactory as was expected and a loss was occasioned by it, yet the department has stated that the reason why it was not a success was because the route was not long enough and did not afford an opportunity to make a favorable test.

When the bill came to the Senate the department recommended the establishment of two routes, which it said would give a fair test as to whether this service would or would not be successful. It recommended one route from New York to Omaha, which would cost $843,320, and it recommended another route from Boston to Atlanta, which would cost $757,460. The department was satisfied that if the experiment were made on these two routes it could come here next year having determined whether aircraft could be successfully used as a means for carrying the mail.

The committee did not determine on either route. The committee thought that the experiment had not been sufficient to justify establishing two routes, but the committee thought no progress would be made unless we gave the department money enough to make the experiments on at least one route which they thought would test the service. We thought it was wise to let them select their own route, the route on which they could make the best showing, taking into consideration distance, population, the amount of mail, and conditions generally that would enable mail to be carried by aircraft. Unless we give them enough to establish a route upon which they can further experiment, we will be no further advanced next year than we are now.

The committee was unwilling to make an appropriation for two routes, but they were willing to let the experiment be extended on one route. Now, it is for the Senate to decide whether they are willing to allow the department to make the experiment on a route which will afford a satisfactory test according to the department or whether they will restrict the department to the short route on which the mail is now being carried by airplane under an appropriation of $300,000. The committee made this recommendation to the Senate with the idea that it was better to let this matter be determined by increasing the appropriation and letting the department select the route, so that they might come in next year and state whether the service was a success or a failure. If it is a failure and it is demonstrated that aircraft can not successfully be used as a means of carrying the mail, then Congress will have afforded the opportunity of determining by experiments actual, full, and complete, and no excuses can then be made; but by making simply a small appropriation now for a route, which it is confessed can not be made a success, we get no further next year than we are this year. So we have simply recommended the one route, appropriating about half of the amount asked for, allowing the department to select a route anywhere in the United States which they think will afford a complete test and be successful.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have just come into the Chamber. When the Senator speaks of routes, what length routes are contemplated?

Mr. SWANSON. There were two routes contemplated, one from New York to Omaha, which is 1,225 miles, and the other from Boston to Atlanta, which is 1,100 miles. The department asked for an appropriation to make an experiment on these two routes, to determine whether mail could be carried successfully and profitably by aircraft.

Mr. WARREN. The intention being, having gone as far as Omaha and the middle section of the country, to go across and make it an ocean to ocean service?

Mr. SWANSON. Not at this time. The department did not recommend that.

Mr. WARREN. I am not speaking of this time, but of what it is the ultimate intention to do.

Mr. SWANSON. I am not acquainted with any ultimate intention; I have no information on that subject; but they thought that the test on these two routes, on account of business conditions and population, would afford the best opportunity to make a determination and decide whether it would be profitable or not for the Government to continue in the business of carrying the mail by aircraft.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not been able to be present during very much of this discussion, and have been so busy with other matters that I have not had time to read the testimony and the reports as much as I should like. Is it the understanding of the committee that this eight hundred and fifty and odd thousand dollars is to be used to establish the two routes the Senator has described?

Mr. SWANSON. No, it is going to be used to establish one. The department wanted one million six hundred and some odd thousand dollars to establish two routes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is in addition to the route between Washington and New York?

Mr. SWANSON. The route between Washington and New York would be included in the route from Boston to Atlanta. The route to New York would be extended to Boston, and the route from Washington would be extended to Atlanta. The department was satisfied that if the experiment was made on the two routes the service would prove profitable, and that Congress would be satisfied that airplanes ought to be used as a part of the mail service.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator on what basis do they expect a route, for instance, between New York and Atlanta to be profitable?

Mr. SWANSON. From the amount of mail they have already been carrying on the present route between Washington and New York they are satisfied that that route, if extended to Boston on the north and to Atlanta on the south, would cover a sufficient distance to make a fair test and demonstrate whether or not the service could be made profitable.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood the Senator to say that, so far as the reports are concerned, they indicate that the route between Washington and New York is a failure?

Mr. SWANSON. I think there was a loss of about $15,000 in six months on that route, after charging 6 per cent for everything bought and 33⅓ per cent depreciation. Now, they have an idea that the route is too short to make a fair test, and that, if it is extended to Boston on the north and to Atlanta on the south, covering a sufficient distance and passing through proper sections of the country, a sufficient demand for such service will be created to make it profitable.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is the cause of the loss between New York and Washington?

Mr. SWANSON. The expense of operation, and not having enough mail, I presume.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Do they expect to have more mail from Washington City to Boston than they do from Washington City to New York?

Mr. SWANSON. They have an idea that when the mail is brought through in that way, and then they have some collateral connections on the main line, it will prove very profitable. I could not reach a conclusion as to whether this would be true or not; but the consideration that controlled me was that until this is done, and an opportunity is given to try what is proposed, no progress will be made in determining as to whether aircraft can be used as a successful part of the Post Office Department or not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to enable me to answer the question propounded by the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course, the necessity for rapid mail facilities between New York and Boston is greater than between New York and Washington. Washington is not a commercial city and Boston is, and they can yoke up these routes by making them longer, so that it will cause the quick mail service to be very much more greatly utilized.

Mr. SWANSON. They have an idea that by stopping at these cities, carrying the mail quickly, and assembling mail at the points where these airplanes will stop enough mail will be engendered to make it profitable.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, does the Senator think there is anywhere near as much mail on the route from Boston to Atlanta as there is on the other routes to the West?

Mr. SWANSON. We did not know which was the better route. We refused to put in any terms. The department said, "We can make a test of one route for $850,000, complete and absolute, and you can let the collateral lines come in." We said, "Now, it is useless to waste $100,000 or $200,000 on routes which it is confessed can not be a success. In order to test this matter, we will give you money enough for one route, and you can select it—from Boston to Chicago, from Chicago to San Francisco, or from Boston to Atlanta—but select your one route and make your test and have no excuse of not sufficient money for that one route."

Mr. WARREN. The matter is left entirely to the Postmaster General, is it?

Mr. SWANSON. Absolutely. We do not wish to select a route. When we come back here next year we do not want to have the department coming in here and saying, "We did not have money enough to show whether or not this route was a success." These two routes that they ask for are disconnected. They can select which of the two is better to make the test. Under this provision they will have their money; and if there ever was a time when the test could be made, and could be made cheaply, it is now. We have aircraft in our Army and Navy that can be used. We have men who are already expert in the management of aircraft who can be utilized.

In making this recommendation the committee is satisfied that if there ever was a time when the experiment could be made cheaply and under the best conditions it is now. It is for the Senate to decide whether they want to make the experiment or not. That is all we know about it. After considering the reports that have been submitted, the experiments made, and the recommendations of the department, we simply gave them half what they wanted, because they wanted two routes. We let them select any route they wished and gave them enough money to conduct it successfully, if it can be done.

Mr. KING addressed the Senate. After having spoken, with interruptions, for 25 minutes he said:

May I ask the Senator having the bill in charge how long he desires to continue in session?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That depends upon how long the Senator from Utah desires to speak.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Utah has not exhausted his subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is a very interesting speech, and we might go on for an hour longer. I will leave it to the Senator's convenience.

Mr. KING. I think some Senators have exhibited impatience at the speech, notably the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Quite the contrary. I have enjoyed it very much.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sure everyone is enjoying the speech of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I am quite sure that most Senators would be glad to take a recess at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the Senator had better go on and finish his speech. The Senate would be delighted to hear the Senator further.

Mr. KING. The distinguished Senator from Alabama is very considerate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us go on.

Mr. KING. Upon this item I shall conclude in 15 minutes in the morning.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Could not the Senator go on and conclude now?

Mr. KING. I can stop now if the Senator desires.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator is through with his speech on this item I am willing to take a recess right now, but rather than that he should proceed to-morrow, I would prefer that he should conclude to-night.

Mr. KING. I would not want to promise that I shall say nothing on this item to-morrow. There may be some additional light that might be satisfactory to the Senator from Alabama, and I would be derelict in my duty if I did not bring it to his attention.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me suggest to the Senator from Alabama that if he gets the promise of the Senator from Utah that he will conclude in 15 minutes to-morrow morning, he will save time by taking a recess now.

Mr. KING. On this item I shall not take more than 15 minutes further.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have a very great desire to oblige the Senator from Colorado. The Senator from Utah, I am sure, is a little wearied from his effort.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; let us take a recess.

RECESS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 1, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 31, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, take us into Thine everlasting arms and hold us close to Thee, that we may feel the pulsations of Thy loving heart, be uplifted, strengthened, purified, ennobled; that in the onward march of time we may satisfy our better self, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and with the accompanying report (No. 1019) ordered to be printed.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the bill.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12001. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

RELIEF FROM INFORMAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. Recently we had before the Committee on Mines and Mining a bill relating to the settlement of mining claims, growing out of the bill we passed, which I think became a law on October 5 last. I have not had time to examine the bill as passed by the Senate carefully, but I understand that there was added to the bill in the Senate an amendment known, perhaps, as the Henderson amendment, covering the very thing that is covered in a bill that has been considered somewhat by the Committee on Mines and Mining of this House, but upon which our committee has taken no action. I think this is a very important matter. It has never been considered by the House for a moment, and no conclusion has been reached by the Committee on Mines and Mining; but we did go into the matter far enough to discover that it involved the expenditure, perhaps, of millions of dollars. Will the gentleman agree that in case the Senate does not recede from that amendment the House shall have an opportunity to consider it and vote upon it before an agreement is reached?

Mr. DENT. I hope the gentleman will not ask me to make an absolute promise in regard to that. My attention has recently been called to that amendment known as section 7 of the bill. I will state to the gentleman that so far as I am personally concerned I am not inclined to have an extraneous proposition like that incorporated in this bill. It does not come under the jurisdiction of the War Department. It is entirely foreign to the original purpose of the bill; but I would not like to make a hard and fast promise on the subject.

Mr. HAMLIN. In all the time I have served here I have never made this request before, and I am not now saying that I would not favor some plan to adjust these so-called mining claims; but I have gone into the matter just far enough to convince me that it involves a great amount of money, and I am not at all certain that there is a great deal of merit in these claims. I feel that under these circumstances we ought not to send this bill to conference, with the possibility that it will come back in such form that we will have to vote up or vote down the whole conference report in order to obtain consideration of this particular amendment. I think the House ought to have some opportunity to consider it before there is a possibility of agreement upon it.

Mr. DENT. I agree with the gentleman's general statement, but I hope he will not ask me to make any absolute assurance as to what the conferees will or will not do. I have had a conference with the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Stettinius, who has been representing the War Department in France for some time, and I can state that the contractual situation that we have entered into in England and in France is getting to be quite embarrassing. Unless some legislation is passed on this subject, and passed quickly, this Government is going to suffer some embarrassment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I appreciate all of that, and so far as the part of the bill that the gentleman is specially interested in, the House did consider that. I raise no question at all about that, and I am more than willing to trust to the gentleman's judgment. But upon this matter, which is largely extraneous and I think hardly germane——

Mr. DENT. I do not think it is at all germane——

Mr. HAMLIN. I want the House to have a chance to consider it.

Mr. GARNER. This mining proposition is a very important matter. I do not see any reason why the gentleman can not tell the House that on a matter of this importance if the Senate is not willing to recede from that amendment he will bring it back to the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is what I ask.

Mr. GARNER. I do not like to encumber the gentleman, but this is a big proposition, and the Senate may say to the gentleman, "Very well, now, if you are not willing to take this amendment you can not have any bill"; and if they do that, I for one am willing that we shall not have any bill. I think the gentleman ought to come back to the House before agreeing to a legislative proposition.

Mr. MANN. Why may we not have a vote on this proposition this morning?

Mr. GARNER. I am perfectly willing, as far as that is concerned. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I do not believe in making these requests of the conferees except on matters of tremendous importance, but this is a matter of tremendous importance, and the pressure that will be brought to bear upon the gentleman and upon the other conferees, owing to the desire to get this contract law on the statute books quickly, will be very great, and I do not know how far he would be inclined to yield on that proposition.

Mr. MANN. Why not take the sentiment of the House this morning upon it?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the trouble about that is that the House has not the information that it ought to have about it this morning. If the House will bear with me a minute, recently the miners of the country—the fellows who are going to present these claims—had a convention at Washington and prepared a bill which was introduced by request by the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining in this House. Our committee had taken it up and had one preliminary meeting. I as a member of the committee was present, and we tried to get all the information we could. I confess that I am not prepared to vote on it this morning.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may not be prepared to vote on the proposition that is before the committee, but he may be prepared to vote whether it should go in as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, I would vote against it this morning; against its going into this bill in the light that I have.

Mr. MANN. Everybody knows that on new propositions there will not be given great consideration in the remaining days of this Congress, because time renders that impossible. We have to do things offhand more or less, and why not take the sentiment of the House this morning on this proposition, not merely on a formal rejection, but have the House vote on it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am willing to have the House vote on it.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, in order to facilitate the passage of the bill and get it to conference, I will promise the House that if the Senate does not recede on this proposition I will bring it back to the House for a vote.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be better to take the vote now.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think perhaps it is better this way, because the Senate may recede.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SCHALL, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for one week on account of delivering an address at McKinley Memorial at Niles, Ohio.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15018, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio withhold his amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I rise to make an inquiry as to the two new positions provided for in this paragraph, one a "chief editor at $3,000" and a "superintendent of distribution at $2,500." The chief editor and the superintendent of distribution are new positions. Can the gentleman inform me whether they have heretofore been carried on a lump-sum roll?

Mr. LEVER. No; they are new places. The one for superintendent of distribution has been carried heretofore under another fund. The chief editor is a new place. The Assistant Secretary urged upon us the necessity for the chief editor. Heretofore the work of editing has been done by a committee sitting around the table. The Assistant Secretary says that the plan of editing the publications by a committee is not at all satisfactory; that there ought to be somebody who has the final word on the proposition. They will retain the committee, which will make its recommendations, and then the chief editor, who should be a practical newspaper man with agricultural training, shall have the final decision on any proposition before it goes into print.

Mr. STAFFORD. You pay him a pretty high salary for this work.

Mr. LEVER. It is a high salary.

Mr. STAFFORD. You give him a salary that for many years was paid to the chief of a division. Does this relieve the chief of the division of some work so that it makes his position a sinecure?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no; the chief of the division is not an editor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Des he not pretend to exercise that function?

Mr. LEVER. No; not the functions of chief editor. Let me tell about the salary. The first recommendation by the department was for $2,750. The Assistant Secretary came before the committee and said it was absolutely impossible to get the type of man desired for this work at that salary.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Assistant Secretary has not had a long connection with the Government, has he?

Mr. LEVER. About 12 months.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think he realizes the tenacity with which persons connected with the Federal service retain their hold, and the desire of persons outside to get into the service; otherwise I think he would have a different viewpoint as to whether $2,750 would get a desirable man for this position. We are paying editors in other bureaus $2,000.

Mr. LEVER. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not want to put my judgment up against others. I am informed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] that the chief of the bureau was only paid $2,500 for a great number of years.

Mr. LEVER. That information is true. Mr. Hill was paid $2,500 a year when the total appropriations for the Agricultural Department were only a few million dollars as against thirty millions now.

Mr. HAUGEN. He was an editor, and became recognized for his ability by the people in all sections of the world.

Mr. LEVER. He was a great man; no question about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri as to the necessity of the superintendent of distribution.

Mr. RUBEY. A year ago, when we passed the emergency appropriation act, or food-production act, they rearranged the work in this division and selected a man and gave him the title of superintendent of distribution. This man has held the position for 27 years; he entered the service in 1892 and had gone through every stage of promotion, and a year ago, when they wanted the best man they could find, they selected him and gave him the title of superintendent of distribution, at $2,500.

Now, the department is asking—and in their estimates they say that this employee's salary is now paid from the emergency fund—that since his duties undoubtedly will be permanent, a place be provided for him on the statutory roll.

Mr. STAFFORD. What salary was this gentleman receiving before he became the beneficiary of the general fund?

Mr. RUBEY. Two thousand dollars. He was receiving $2,000 up to last year, when they gave him this work, and the gentleman knows the importance of this work. He is in charge of all the distributions and has under him 120 men, and you get letters from him every day. He is in entire charge of the congressional distribution and all other distributions in the Department of Agriculture. It is absolutely necessary to carry on this work; and if we do not do this, we are virtually dropping from the service a man who has been in the department for 27 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am very much inclined to press the point of order on the chief editor.

Mr. LEVER. I have given the gentleman all I know about the situation. The committee thought, in view of the Secretary's very urgent request for it, that it was wise in giving it. If the gentleman wants to make the salary $2,750, I have no objection to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order on the position of chief editor.

Mr. LEVER. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RUBEY. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve it for the time being, if the gentleman from Iowa wants to make some inquiry.

Mr. HAUGEN. The item of $2,500, my understanding is——

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair understand the situation. The Chair sustained the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserved the point of order on the entire paragraph and made a point of order as to one position, still reserving the point of order on the other.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if I may be recognized, I desire to call attention to the item of $2,500. My understanding is that the committee agreed to an increase of salary of $500; that this particular employee has been receiving $2,000——

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Let me finish my statement—and it is now proposed to increase the salary to $2,500. Gentlemen, here we have an illustration of what is being done under lump-sum appropriations and emergency appropriations in lump sums. Here we had an employee drawing $2,000 a year transferred to the lump sum under the emergency bill, with an increase of salary of $500. Now, it is recommended that he shall be transferred to the statutory roll at $2,500, with an increase of $500.

It has generally been understood that Congress exercised its right of fixing salaries, but that is not the practice under lump-sum appropriations; furthermore, we find that the salaries fixed in the statutory roll are not always the salaries fixed for certain employees. We find that whenever it is desired to do so, transfers are made from the statutory roll to the lump-sum roll with an increase of salary and then back from the lump-sum roll to the statutory roll with the increase; the increased salaries are made permanent. I simply desire to call the attention of the committee here to the practice that has grown up in the department not with the view of criticizing, but to point out that Congress does not exercise its power in the fixing of salaries. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the $500 increase ought to be made; but, as before stated, my understanding was not that a new position should be provided for, but that the $500 increase should be made.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. RUBEY. I would like to proceed, Mr. Chairman, and explain the whole matter. Now, I feel that the gentleman from Iowa, while he is usually right about these things, is simply in error in regard to this position. The committee created this position. I have called the attention of the committee to the language of the Department of Agriculture, which was read to the committee a moment ago, in which they say that this employee is now paid from the emergency fund, and, since his duties undoubtedly will become permanent, a place should be provided for him on the statutory roll.

Mr. HAUGEN. Exactly.

Mr. RUBEY. Wait a moment. I presented that matter to the committee and asked them to follow the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture in his estimates made to the committee. The committee, so far as I know, agreed to make this recommendation for the superintendent of distribution $2,500. This man now has been in the service for 27 years. He has been for the last year not on the lump sum of this appropriation, but he was paid out of the emergency fund and placed in charge as superintendent of distribution and has held that position. Previous to that time he had held a number of positions in the Department of Agriculture lasting over a series of years. For a long time he received $1,400. Then he received $1,500 a year, and was receiving $2,000 a year until they selected him for this particular position.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no controversy as to the salary to be paid this official.

Mr. RUBEY. I do not care whether you call him superintendent of documents or call him a clerk, or what you call him, but he is there in the department; he is doing an important work that has to be done by somebody, and he is qualified to do it better than anybody else.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am perfectly willing that the agreement entered into in the committee should be carried out.

Mr. RUBEY. So am I.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is that this man should receive a salary of $2,500?

Mr. RUBEY. That is all I am asking.

Mr. HAUGEN. But I also remember the gentleman's statement in the committee to the effect that the salary should be increased $500, making it $2,500.

Mr. RUBEY. If he is increased $500, then he would get $3,000, because he is getting $2,500 now.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am talking about positions and salaries carried on the statutory roll.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman permit? I am perfectly willing now for you to say just what he shall be called and what title shall be given him and let him be placed in that at $2,500 a year.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am perfectly willing he shall have the title suggested, but I submit it is unfair to add a new place and suggest that if a new place is added at $2,500, then drop the place at $2,000, which he was holding. This is simply providing a new place at $2,500.

Mr. RUBEY. The position was probably dropped two years ago.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is in the bill. You have it at $2,000.

Mr. RUBEY. I will be glad to have you point it out to me.

Mr. HAUGEN. I take it that this assistant at $2,000 is the position he held before, and you should drop that assistant.

Mr. RUBEY. I do not know that. I doubt it very much. Now——

Mr. HAUGEN. Then it is up to the gentleman to ascertain what position should be dropped, because my understanding was that the salary should be an increase of $500.

Mr. RUBEY. The department asks that this new man be put on here in this new position.

Mr. HAUGEN. The department asked it, but when the gentleman made the motion the suggestion was that the salary be increased to $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUBEY. The Division of Publications submits the items here. These are all provided for in the bill. In addition to these items, they asked for this additional place at $2,500, so that evidently none of these places corresponds to that. This man is not the first assistant now.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman is referring to the estimates and I am referring to what took place in the committee, and what took place in the committee was that there should be an increase of salary of $500, which does not mean that there should be an additional place at $2,500. And if the gentleman cares to ascertain which one of these $2,000 positions should be dropped, it is an easy matter to call up the department and ascertain what position this gentleman has been holding. And I take it he has been filling this position at $2,000—the one mentioned in the bill.

Mr. RUBEY. In the document section. I do not know what the title is or was. But evidently when he was placed in the present position somebody else was put in that position.

Mr. HAUGEN. My understanding is that his present position is exactly what it has been for years, that this emergency fund was drawn upon to the extent of $500, and it is now proposed to put him on the statutory roll at that $500 increase. The committee has agreed to that, and I am not taking exception to it. To the contrary, I am contending for the increase, but I sumbit that we should carry out the understanding of the committee.

Mr. RUBEY. I do not want the gentleman to come in here and say I am not trying to carry out the agreement.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is simply a misunderstanding about it.

Mr. RUBEY. I think I am carrying it out. It is a difference of opinion as to what the gentleman thought and what I thought.

Mr. HAUGEN. I have given my understanding of it. I remember exactly the statement of the gentleman before the committee, and if it is the purpose to increase the salary $500, very well. We can easily ascertain which one of the $2,000 items should be dropped.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest we have important matters here. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], if he is not going to press the point of order, will withdraw it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. I make the point of order for the present. I would like to confer with the chairman.

Mr. LEVER. I suggest that this item be passed over.

Mr. HAUGEN. That is satisfactory.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the privilege of revising and extending my remarks in the RECORD that I made two days ago in connection with the deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the deficiency bill, which he made a few days ago. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH] is recognized. Does the gentleman desire to enter a motion?

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make a motion to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph has been passed temporarily by unanimous consent, the Chair would suggest.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Then I move to strike out the last word.

I do this, Mr. Chairman, to obtain information from the chairman of the committee as to why it is necessary to increase this item by $16,700 this year, when economy is supposed to be the watchword more than when prices were soaring skyward last year, when it only amounted to $178,820.

The stupendous aggregate of the bill, $31,691,562, is startling to the plain farming classes. Farmers do not object to reasonable expenses on the part of the Government. They seldom complain, but occasionally one of an inquiring turn of mind asks troublesome questions. I represent a district of high-class, up-to-date, intelligent farmers, the master of the State grange being a resident. But so far I have received but one letter complaining of any item in the bill. This one is so unique and pointed that I ask leave to read it and also to read my reply in the time allotted to me.

I have been sending the writer department publications, but it seems he does not appreciate the activities of the Department of Agriculture nor the fact that this bill only carries for the whole of next year $31,691,562. I can certify, however, that he is a real farmer, an intelligent, capable man, a molder of public opinion among his associates, who once honored him by making him the Democratic candidate against me for Congress. I read:

CADIZ, OHIO, January 28, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. HOLLINGSWORTH: I have to thank you for documents sent me. The last is the Weekly News Letter of United States Department of Agriculture. It is an infernal fraud, but is there any convenient way you could get for me the number of employees and salaries paid in that department of the Government? I don't mean for you to go to any great trouble, but I would like the facts concerning this.

I am inclined to think there is enough money paid barnacles in the Federal and State agricultural departments annually to buy the corn crop of our country in any one year. Not one practical farmer in a thousand pays any regard to them, but they go on from year to year arrogating to themselves credit for all that the farmer accomplishes by long hours and persistent toil.

The accursed system should be aired.

Yours, etc.,

A. N. MCCOMBS.

I promptly mailed to Mr. McCombs a copy of the pending bill and the report of the committee, with the following letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1919.

HON. A. N. MCCOMBS,
Cadiz, Ohio.

DEAR MR. MCCOMBS: In response to your favor of 28th, I am herewith inclosing copy of bill and report from the Committee on Agriculture, which we are now considering in the House, and which will fully, or probably substantially would be the better word, inform you as to the current expenses of the Department of Agriculture for the year ending June 30, 1920. Of course, it is liable to be changed before it is passed, but changes are more likely to increase than decrease it.

I have an open mind on many of the items, and if there be any of them specially objectionable from your standpoint I should be glad to hear from you.

Very truly, yours,

D. A. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Mr. McCombs served for a number of years as State inspector of high explosives, under appointment of Gov. Harmon, of Ohio; but I am inclined to think the explosion in the quiet rural home where he now resides in sweet contentment liable to occur when he receives this bill and reads of the million-dollar items and hundreds of employees will excel any explosion he ever inspected. [Laughter.]

I ask that it be put in the RECORD if it arrives before the bill is completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. I thank the gentleman. I am through. I simply ask that it be put in the RECORD if it arrives before the bill is passed. Meanwhile, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Library: For books of reference, technical and scientific books, papers and periodicals, and for expenses incurred in completing imperfect series; for the employment of additional assistants in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for official traveling expenses, and for library fixtures, library cards, supplies, and for all other necessary expenses, $18,000.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 66, line 17, after the words "For books of reference," insert the words "law books."

Mr. LEVER. That is to take care of the situation I explained yesterday afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of answering the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], propounded during my temporary absence from the Hall yesterday.

Mr. LEVER. Before the gentleman does that, I think we had better return to the item.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that we return to that item, on page 45, at the end of the list of the forest reserves.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the committee now return to the paragraph on page 45, relating to the Forest Service. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The proviso relates to $200 for the purchase of land used as a forest-nursery site for the Michigan National Forest. This land is, and has been, used for a nursery for the growth of forest trees, particularly pine and cedar.

This site the department wishes to buy is a small piece of land, with buildings and improvements, that for two years has been rented by the Forest Service at $20 per year. The owner refuses to renew or continue the lease, and has offered to sell the place for $175.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. My inquiry was not directed to the purchase of the nursery site; it was to obtain information as to the location of this Michigan National Forest. I never heard of it, although I live in a State adjoining the State of Michigan. I wish to be informed where it is located and its extent.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. This piece of land adjoins a parcel that is being used as a forest reserve in Iosco County, Mich. The particular piece of land is block 14 of the Newman addition to the city of East Tawas. It has a tool shed and a small house and a small building for the necessary use and comfort of those who use and occupy the property.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am quite interested in the extent of the forest reserve.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not know the exact area of the forest reserve itself, but the particular piece of property is small. As I say, it is one block of an addition to the city near which the forest reserve is located.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice that in the bill we provide one of the smallest amounts carried in the bill for the maintenance of the Michigan National Forest, $1,981—a tremendous amount for the maintenance of a large forest reserve. Can the gentleman give us any information as to the extent of the national forest bearing the name of the State of Michigan?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not know the exact area of the land devoted to forestry in Michigan, but there are considerable areas that are owned by the State and are under the direction of State authorities, and the Federal Forest Service is cooperating in the work which is done at this particular place. The area of it I do not know, but it is owned and operated by the Federal Forest Service. I supposed the gentleman wished information particularly as to the parcel of land proposed to be purchased by the Forest Service by this $200 item in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. No. If the gentleman will examine the RECORD he will notice that I directed my inquiry particularly as to the extent of the great Michigan National Forest. Now, I am not surprised that the State of Michigan is providing for having its cut-over lands developed by State forest reserves, just as the State of Wisconsin has; but I was quite interested as to what the policy of the National Government was, and whether it was pursuing a policy similar to that of the State of Wisconsin. We have no national forest in the State of Wisconsin, but we are doing good work and expending large sums of money for the reforestation of our State forest lands.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. As I stated, a large part of the forestry work in Michigan is done under the direction of the State authorities on State land. I believe the parcels of land are not contiguous, but are reserves covering about 10 townships of 6 miles square each. The Government still has the title to small areas of land within or adjoining the larger area owned by the State. And while the work is largely done by State authority, because a large part of the land is owned by the State, the Federal Government is assisting and cooperating and working particularly the small areas owned by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more, if necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order, because the gentleman has given me so much information about the Michigan forest reserve.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his reservation of a point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I believe it is not subject to a point of order, but I am glad to give the gentleman the information he wishes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am still waiting for information about the Michigan forest reserve.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What more can I tell the gentleman than that the State is carrying on forestry work on an area practically 10 townships in extent; that the Federal Government's activities are by way of cooperation with the entire work, but particularly as to the small areas included within the limits of the large areas largely owned by the State; and that this particular piece of land mentioned here to be purchased by the Government is a nursery contiguous to a part of the area being operated by the Federal Government; and that it is to be purchased because the lease can not be continued?

Mr. McKENZIE. The trees grown in this nursery are furnished to the State, as well as to the United States, are they not?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. They have been furnished largely to lighthouse reservations, 250,000 of them having been furnished each year for the last two years, and the service expects to be able to furnish at least 400,000 of them this year. It seemed inadvisable to get another location and, perhaps, lose the benefit altogether of the nursery work that has been done up to this time on this particular location. Therefore the department wishes to buy it.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose and the Speaker resumed the chair.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On January 12, 1919:

H. R. 12916. An act to provide for the temporary promotion of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps serving with the Army; and

H. R. 12945. An act providing for the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment by officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard and midshipmen at the Naval Academy from the Government at cost.

On January 13, 1919:

H. R. 11709. An act granting the consent of Congress to Norman County, Minn., and Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

RENT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Rent of buildings, Department of Agriculture: For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, for use of the various bureaus, divisions, and offices of the Department of Agriculture, $158,689.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

When this item for rent in the District of Columbia was reached, and when the bill was being considered by the Committee on Agriculture, the entire committee was of the opinion that this item should be materially reduced. In response to that suggestion a committee composed of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. YOUNG], and myself were appointed to inquire into this particular item and to report back to the full committee. The first witness whom we called was Mr. Dorr, who is the assistant director of munitions and who is fully advised, and his testimony reflects the fact that there are enough buildings that have been constructed during the war emergency to house the various and sundry activities of the Government, so that in a great measure rented buildings can be given up and housed in Government-owned buildings on Government-owned land. That statement was concurred in in a manner by Mr. Reese, of the Department of Agriculture, who states that the following activities of the Agricultural Department which are now renting quarters can be housed in Government-owned buildings, and for the benefit of the committee I read from a letter written by Mr. Reese, chief clerk, which in concise form presents this matter in a way that will shed great light upon the matter. Appended to his letter is a detailed statement of those particular units of the Department of Agriculture which in his opinion may be removed into Government-owned buildings. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1919.

Hon. H. M. JACOWAY,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. JACOWAY: I inclose herewith a statement of the buildings or parts of buildings now under rental by this department, which, in my opinion, may be vacated by the Department of Agriculture if it obtains the amount of space in Government-owned buildings which Mr. Dorr said this morning he thought we could depend upon getting by July 1, 1919. My recollection is that Mr. Dorr thought we could depend upon 100,000 square feet.

Is there not an impression in the minds of some of the committee that the department, in estimating for $158,000 for rent in the District of Columbia in the Agricultural appropriation bill for 1920, is asking for an increase? If so, permit me to point out that the amount estimated for is exactly the amount allowed for the fiscal year 1919.

I still venture to deprecate any cut in this appropriation for rent, not only because there is no increase asked over the current appropriation but because there is, to my mind, some uncertainty still as to what space we may get in Government-owned buildings. Mr. Dorr, for reasons which he set forth quite clearly, is apparently not able to guarantee any definite allotment of space. If, however, the committee in its wisdom decides that there must be a cut, I am of the opinion that the work now being performed in the buildings which I have listed in the attached statement can be done as well in a Government-owned building as in the present locations.

You will note that I show a total floor space in the attached statement of 52,708 square feet. Mr. Young's tabulation, as I recall it, showed something over 90,000 square feet. The difference, I think, is accounted for by Mr. Young including in his estimate the forty thousand-odd square feet which we are certain to get through Mr. Dorr, and of which we have actually in possession about 13,000 square feet. We had no intention of renting this amount of space; we expected to get it in Government-owned buildings. No question of expenditure for rent is involved in this forty thousand-odd square feet.

In the statement attached hereto I show a total amount paid for rent of $28,440. Please note that of this total $14,100 is paid from the current appropriation for rent in the bill for "Stimulating agriculture" and $1,800 from the fund "Administration of the United States warehouse act." The appropriation "Rent in the District of Columbia" in the Agricultural appropriation act pays the balance, $12,540. If the committee decides that a cut in this item "Rent in the District of Columbia" is necessary in the bill now under consideration, I venture to express the hope that such reduction will not exceed this $12,540.

Permit me to express my appreciation of the courteous and patient hearing which your subcommittee gave me. I fully understand the desirability of saving rent money wherever the department, without serious detriment to its work, can move into free quarters. I am only apprehensive lest it find itself unprovided with free quarters and with its rent appropriation reduced below the point where it can procure rented space for continuing activities.

I am sending a copy of this letter and statement to Mr. DOOLITTLE and to Mr. YOUNG of Texas.

Very truly, yours,

R. M. REESE, Chief Clerk.

Units of the Department of Agriculture which, in the opinion of the Chief Clerk, may be removed into Government-owned buildings.

Location of building.	Occupied by.	Net floor space (square feet).	Annual rental.	Annual rental per square foot (net).	Appropriation from which paid.
Homer Building, 601 Thirteenth Street NW	Bureau of Markets	9,900	$8,500	$0.857	Stimulating agriculture.

Rent in District of Columbia pays	$12,540
Stimulating agriculture pays	14,100

	28,440

It will be seen that Mr. Reese states that 52,708 feet of space now occupied by the Department of Agriculture, for which a rental of $28,440 is now being paid, can be cut down so that the rent on this item can be decreased $12,540. In part, this is the opinion of Mr. Dorr, who has exclusive jurisdiction of all the buildings that have been constructed in Washington City as the result of the war. The committee went into this in a rather careful way and the record of the hearing covers some 62 pages. With that statement, I move that this item be decreased $12,540.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOWAY. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee, after that reduction, what rented buildings will the department still continue to occupy? I think the gentleman should inform the committee as to whether these buildings for which we are providing rental can be vacated and those activities placed in some of these temporary buildings owned by the Government.

Mr. JACOWAY. I have just made a statement about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been the policy of the legislative committee that has charge mostly of the rented buildings of the departments other than the Department of Agriculture to decline absolutely to provide rental for any of the departments of the Government, and so to force the vacation of privately owned buildings and the removal of governmental activities into the temporary buildings on the Mall and on other public grounds.

Mr. JACOWAY. I have just read a list of those buildings, and I have stated the amount of reduction which these gentlemen believe can be made.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am now rising for information as to the private buildings that will continue to be occupied under the proposed plan of the Government.

Mr. JACOWAY. I have mentioned buildings which are now occupied, and for which the Government is paying a yearly rent, and those activities which can be moved into Government-owned buildings and which will result in a saving to the Government for rent.

Stimulating agriculture pays $14,100. The wire act pays $1,800; that is an appropriation from the emergency fund. The items I have read make appropriation for a total rental of $12,540. According to Mr. Reese, who is chief clerk, he states that they can be housed in Government buildings, owned by the Government, on Government-owned lands.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman favor the committee with the information as to what private buildings will be occupied by the Department of Agriculture under the rental provision that he now supports?

Mr. JACOWAY. I think this information can be supplied; and if so, I will take pleasure in giving it in detail.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion this item can very properly be reduced by a much larger amount than that stated by the gentleman from Arkansas. In fact, from the information I have been able to get, it is my belief that the item can be stricken from the bill entirely. The Department of Agriculture has for a long time been renting a great deal of space; much of it I believe has been unnecessary because the Government owns buildings and has owned them and they are and have been unoccupied; they could very well be occupied by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. DALLINGER. May I ask the gentleman from Michigan why it is that there is no movement on the part of the Government to complete the Agricultural buildings according to the original plans so that these bureaus can be housed under one roof?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is a large proposition and involves the expenditure of a large sum of money. The building of a main building between the two wings would require a lot of money, a lot of time, and require action by Congress. During war times, particularly, it has not been thought advisable to embark upon such a large scheme and spend so much money.

Mr. DALLINGER. In the long run would it cost any more when you take into account the interest and time that is occupied in going from one bureau to another?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. As I understand the original plan of constructing a main building between the two wings when fully carried out it would not furnish anything like the room and space that the various activities of the department require. Even should the main building be constructed, or if we had it now, it would be necessary to occupy a great deal of outside space. But my contention, Mr. Chairman, is that there are Government-owned buildings that are now unoccupied and that the Department of Agriculture should be required to occupy some of them, and that money for the rent of other places should not be appropriated.

You find in this bill besides the appropriation in question an appropriation for the grain-standard work.

On page 84 it reads "including such rent and employment of such persons in the city of Washington as the Secretary may deem necessary," a very tidy sum of $598,600.

There is no limitation on the Secretary of Agriculture in the expenditure of that money, and he may expend a large amount of it for rent.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of the gentleman's statement, debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. There will be further discussion on this.

Mr. LEVER. Let us see if we can not reach an agreement for time.

Mr. MANN. Is there an amendment pending?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Will there be other amendments offered?

Mr. LEVER. I do not think so; not from this side.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], who has just stepped out, wishes to speak on this matter.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this paragraph close in 30 minutes—the gentleman from Michigan to have 5, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] to have 5, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] to have 5, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] to have 5.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I object, Mr. Chairman; I do not wish to continue the discussion unnecessarily. There is a good deal to be said on this, and a number of gentlemen wish to speak on it.

Mr. LEVER. I have provided in my request for gentlemen who wish to speak.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; but they are limited to five minutes. I hope the gentleman will not think I am trying to consume time unnecessarily.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, absolutely not. I wanted to get along on the bill. However, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, there are, as I have said, a number of unoccupied buildings in Washington, buildings that have been vacant for a long time. The Secretary of Agriculture has shown the same disposition as has been shown in other departments in refusing to occupy these buildings, preferring to come to Congress and ask for money to pay rent of other buildings. For a long time nearly all the buildings owned by the Federal Government in the block between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets on Pennsylvania Avenue, across the Avenue from the Willard Hotel, have been unoccupied. But the control of them, the actual occupancy of them, can be secured by the Federal Government if proper action is taken. There is space there available for the Department of Agriculture. The Maltby Building, the Senate Annex, has been vacant for a long time.

And there are other buildings I might name suitable and abundantly large to house all the extra activities of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman know that the Maltby Building is generally considered unsafe, and that is one reason why it is not occupied?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. At one time the Maltby Building, as the gentleman from Illinois says, was considered unsafe, but I am told it has recently been reinforced, and is now considered entirely safe. The Government has been working on that building, as the gentleman from Iowa says, all summer, and it is now fixed up and made safe.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. In reference to the Maltby Building, it was considered safe enough about three years ago to house about 100 Congressmen for several months, representing districts all over the United States.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It was considered safe enough to house a very large number of Senators.

Mr. MANN. It housed a small number of Congressmen, and that is the reason we made them move out, because the building was unsafe.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It was considered safe later when hundreds of Confederate veterans were housed there during their reunion in the city of Washington. There is a disposition on the part of the Department of Agriculture to continue all its war activities and involve the country in an enormous expense. Its officials show a disposition to refuse to return to normal times and to carry on their regular and proper activities that are proper for times of peace. But I understand the report made to the committee, of which the gentleman from Arkansas is chairman, is to the effect that there is space enough now owned, unoccupied, to house all the activities needing space or for which the Department of Agriculture is now paying rent in the city of Washington. In my judgment, we can get along now without the payment of any additional money for rent.

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have only a short time.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in response to what the gentleman from Michigan has just stated that Mr. Dorr did say to the committee that in time there would be enough space in all of these Government buildings that have been constructed as a result of war emergency in which every activity of the Department of Agriculture could be handled that was now asking for additional floor space; but he said it could not be done now. He further made the observation that we were paying rent on the buildings we are now occupying up to the 30th of June. He said in addition to taking care of the activities of the Department of Agriculture that every other department of this Government was clamoring for space——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; every other department of the Government is spending all the money it can, and every other department of the Government is striving to continue its war activities, it is enlarging the scope of work, unwilling to return to normal times. In view of the expenditure of immense sums of money I think we ought to cut down to normal times and try to save a little money instead of trying to spend it wherever we can. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. My time is limited. I think my friend has reported the situation fully. There is space, and for a long time has been, to house all of these extra activities of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And the Secretary of Agriculture has not seen fit to transfer his work to Government-owned property and he does not like the idea now of having Congress refuse his request for large money to pay rent. He admits practically that there is plenty of room and that he can make transfer in time, and he has neglected for a long time to make any effort to make the transfer. When will the Secretary act? When will he be willing to use Government-owned property and avoid expense of renting property? When will he be willing to exert himself, if a little exertion shall be necessary, to effect some reasonable measure of economy in his department?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think by refusing these very large appropriations we ought to make it necessary for him to act now. The Congress has waited long enough. I sincerely believe these large appropriations for rent are altogether unnecessary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I entirely agree with what the gentleman from Michigan has said. I observe that the Maltby Building is being put in first-class condition. Its weak points are being strengthened and the building made useful. I do not know why this was not done a long time ago instead of constructing buildings all over the city, a great many of which will be entirely unnecessary.

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield? Would the gentleman state to the committee in what particular building in the city of Washington that he would put these activities at the present time that is not now occupied?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, the gentleman certainly knows that the Maltby Building is not being occupied at the present time, if he has given any observation in regard to it, and we have a large number of other buildings.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Reese, of the Department of Agriculture, called the attention of the committee to the fact there were 40,000 feet available on leased ground, and if it is desired the Government should occupy the 40,000 feet all that is necessary to provide for it is to pay the rent.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the question is how much space is available but how much space now available can be properly used. The reference to the Maltby Building, I think, is just confusing the issue. There is no question but that there is going to be an amount of space available in these temporary buildings on Seventh Street in excess of what the Department of Agriculture can properly use. So the question of space over in the Maltby Building has nothing to do with this proposition at all. I think every fair-minded person here will admit that a certain portion of the offices of the Department of Agriculture could not be put in these temporary buildings on account of the value of their files. This matter of moving portions of the department's activities is merely a question of what the character of the work is that is being done and the value of the files. In some of the offices there are scientific files and data accumulated during many years, which should be protected from loss by fire.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I have only five minutes. In a minute I hope to be able to yield to the gentleman.

I think the Secretary of Agriculture has made a fair effort to meet the views of the committee and of Congress in regard to the matter of rentals. The gentleman from Arkansas read a list indicating where they are to move out—that is, from the Homer Building, and from the Bank of Commerce, and from the basement of 1227 F Street, and from the Woolworth Building. This totals 23,400 square feet of space where he is willing to move activities now in operation. In addition to that, there are 41,800 square feet that he is going to use for activities that are to commence hereafter. There is new work to be undertaken for the Bureau of Markets, which is going to occupy 20,000 feet of these temporary buildings. For the Bureau of Chemistry, new work, they are going to occupy 4,800 square feet, and for Crop Estimates, 8,000 feet.

That makes a total of 66,200 square feet which the Secretary of Agriculture is going to use in those temporary buildings. We ought not to overlook the fact that the greater portion of the space is to be used for new work. Now, it is barely possible that a very small amount of extra space could be properly utilized, but the committee checked that over very carefully, and it was our judgment, and we were unanimous, that the buildings for which a rental of $12,500 has been paid are the only ones from which the offices may be properly moved at this time. I do not have any disposition——

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], and I will do so at this time.

Mr. HAUGEN. I was going to suggest, in speaking about the fireproof buildings, that if any department has used great care in selecting fireproof buildings it is the Department of Agriculture, and certainly the Maltby Building is far superior to any other building hired by the department. It is the best building hired by the department outside of the one across from the Willard Hotel. Speaking about the safety of the Maltby Building, why expend these hundreds of thousands of dollars for its repair?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. These temporary buildings on Sixth and Seventh Streets are perhaps no better. But it is not a case of quantity. The question is, how much space in the temporary buildings can be used to advantage and without endangering valuable records.

Mr. HAUGEN. The Maltby Building has been there for years, and it has been available, and has not been occupied, and it is time now for Congress to take action and make the direction so plain that it will be clearly understood as to what is intended.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman makes the mistake of believing that it is space of which we are short. There is any amount of space on Sixth and Seventh Streets. We can probably get over 100,000 square feet for the Department of Agriculture there. The question is, how much of our activities can properly be moved over there at this time. The Maltby Building has nothing to do with it.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to a building that I discovered yesterday and that I did not know was in the city of Washington. It is a new building on Fourteenth Street and Ohio Avenue, known as the War Industries Building, and there must be at least 20 acres of space in that building unoccupied by anybody. There is a small part of the Internal Revenue Bureau moving into it. It seems to me improper to rent more property when you have acres of floor space unoccupied.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The Department of Commerce is going to use that for taking the census. They require 350,000 square feet, and they are going into that very building of which the gentleman speaks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to say so, either the Department of Agriculture or the Committee on Printing would render a service by inserting in the Congressional Directory the location of the various branches of the department. Nearly every other department of the Government indicates where its bureaus are located. The Department of Agriculture or the Committee on Printing does not do that. We know where the main building of the department is. I know where the old building is. I do not know what occupies either one of the buildings, and nobody else does, unless he goes and finds out or has recently been there. You do not know where the Bureau of Chemistry is; you do not know where the Bureau of Animal Industry is; you do not know where the office of the Farm Management Bureau is, or, if you do not know, you do not get any light from the Congressional Directory. And the same is true of all the other bureaus of the Department of Agriculture. It will be very easy to designate the location in the Directory. When I go to the Department of Agriculture I find it to be universally my experience that I go to two or three places before I find the one I want—always two, and sometimes more.

Now, having said that, and hoping it will have some effect on some callous hide that has to deal with the printing of the Directory, although my communications on that subject heretofore have had no effect, I want to say this: I am opposed to permanent occupation of the buildings erected on the parks in Washington, and that includes the Maltby Building. We purchased all the land around the Maltby Building. We own all those houses down there the other side of the building, north and west of it. We have acquired that property for the purpose of making a park, running from here to the Union Station, a fitting addition to the Capitol Grounds. We have put a lot of temporary buildings on the ground that was cleared off. The ground where these temporary buildings are located used to be covered with houses. Those houses were cleared off. Then we proceeded to get some temporary buildings there. That was for war purposes. The Maltby Building was ready to fall down, but for war purposes it has been provided that it be reinforced. It ought to be torn down, and all the rest of those buildings there ought to be torn down, at the earliest possible moment. The same is true of these buildings on the Mall, and if the Government of the United States or Congress starts to occupy those buildings permanently they will be there for years and years to come. I do not believe in letting somebody creep in to steal a public park temporarily and then, having gotten possession of it temporarily, claim they ought to keep possession of it permanently. [Applause.]

Those parks belong to the people of the country as parks. While it may have been proper to erect temporary buildings upon them for war purposes, I think it is a violation of all decency if Congress shall permanently undertake to have those parks occupied with public buildings. After having spent millions of dollars in acquiring this property over here as an addition to the Capitol Grounds, if we shall now undertake to locate permanently various bureaus and departments of the Government in the buildings that stand there it will not only have been a great loss financially in the purchase of the property, but I think it will be a disgrace to Congress in Washington. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SNYDER rose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I renew my effort to limit the debate on this proposition. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Only two gentlemen appear to desire time. Let us not drag over an item of $148,000 after we have passed upon millions.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] desires five minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What is the gentleman's request as to when the debate on all amendments shall close?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Minnesota informs me that he does not want any time at all.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Would the gentleman stop debate on all amendments or only on this amendment?

Mr. LEVER. On all amendments. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] has an amendment, let him offer it and speak on it.

Mr. SNYDER. I have no amendment, but I want to speak on this proposition for a few moments.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, how will that time be allotted?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] will have five minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin five minutes, and I will reserve five minutes and yield it to somebody.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] says he wants five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I will make it 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] proceeds the Chair desires to state that the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY] has never been formally reported.

Mr. LEVER. I ask that it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JACOWAY: Page 67, line 22, after the word "agriculture," strike out the figures "$158,689" and insert in lieu thereof "$146,189."

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, in line with what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just said with reference to taking up permanent quarters in these temporary buildings I agree with him absolutely. I just want to state that yesterday I had occasion to go to the Revenue Bureau, and discovered that the section of that bureau that I had some business with had been moved, and after walking about 3 miles, being directed from one place to another, I finally found they had moved into what is known as the new War Industries Building, down on Fourteenth Street and Ohio Avenue. It is a very large building, and that bureau has moved into one corner of it, and my impression was, from the information I got there, that the Revenue Bureau expects to take over that entire building for permanent use.

It seems to me that it is about time that we or somebody went on record in regard to what is proposed to be done with these temporary buildings. I had supposed that those buildings over here near the station were not to be used, but I notice in passing there that many of them are already occupied. It strikes me that if we are going to continue to permit these structures to be occupied by the various bureaus we will find that the occupants are permanently located, and we will never be able to get them out.

Now, one thing that the people of this country are demanding is that superfluous employees and inefficient employees should be dismissed from these various departments. Another thing they are insisting upon is that those that are now in positions shall do something for the money they get. I favor good compensation for everybody who is employed to perform public service, but I also favor an honest day's work for it, and unless something is done soon to correct the present situation we will find something on our hands—a trouble on our hands other than unemployment—and I think that this administration should set its mind at the present time upon——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In regard to the question of unemployment, does not the gentleman think that one of the easiest ways to relieve the public distress on that score is to find places for the unemployed in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. SNYDER. That is one way to do it. But I am opposed to it unless you find some necessary employment for the persons that you put in.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that the Department of Agriculture has taken over as many unemployed as any other department?

Mr. SNYDER. I think they have taken over more. I should think so. I think this $11,000,000 that was put through last fall was the biggest steal that was ever put through, and this bill provides a million and a half dollars for the same purposes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will notice that a large number of extra clerks are provided for in this bill?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes. I do not see how the Committee on Agriculture could have the nerve to bring in a larger appropriation bill at this time than the last one.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think that a great many unemployed soldiers could well be added to this vast corp of experts, professors, and lecturers, and other scholars that we are proposing to put into the Department of Agriculture to educate the farmer?

Mr. SNYDER. I think this thing of providing for the soldier is being overworked. I think if the soldiers are left to provide positions for themselves they will do it a good deal quicker than it can be done by this mistaken method of mothering and coddling that we see in operation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think we ought to make points of order against the unauthorized increases that are provided for here?

Mr. SNYDER. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why not begin on this bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the gentleman is entirely right in his statement that this bill carries improper amounts for continuing some of the war activities, but it is not entirely right to say that the bill carries a million and a half dollars in addition to the amount provided by the supplemental bill of $11,000,000 that was recently passed. The amount carried by the supplemental bill for the particular work the gentleman has in mind was $6,100,000, and this bill carries $1,500,000 for those purposes.

Mr. SNYDER. This bill, as I understand it, carries $1,500,000 in addition to the $11,000,000 appropriated last year for those purposes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. Under the allotment of time the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in the paragraph under consideration, as reported, for rental of private buildings for use of the Department of Agriculture in the District the same amount is carried as was carried last year, $158,000. They offer an amendment to reduce that sum by the measly amount of $12,540.

Anyone who has given any consideration whatsoever to the rental of buildings used by the Department of Agriculture knows that they are distributed in about 50 private buildings a. an aggregate average rental greater than is paid by any other department of the Government. The legislative committee that has charge of the rental of all buildings for all the other departments save the Department of Agriculture adopted a policy of cutting out the rental and forcing departments into the Government-owned temporary buildings where there is 4,000,000 square feet of space available.

The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] shakes his head. I say the testimony before the Appropriations Committee on the legislative bill shows that there are 3,994,900 feet available. I said 4,000,000 feet.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman means the total space in those buildings—not the unoccupied available space.

Mr. STAFFORD. Available in these temporary office buildings now for the various activities of the Government.

I do not subscribe to the idea advocated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that these buildings which have been erected at the expense of millions and millions of dollars should now be torn down. They should be utilized during their serviceability, which will very likely be 10 years. The Alien Property Custodian is housed in the most expensive apartment building on Sixteenth Street.

The Federal Trade Commission and other governmental activities are now distributed through the District in private buildings. They should all be forced to move into these temporary office structures until the Government can find time to erect modern office buildings; not ornate buildings, as has been proposed by some, but modern office buildings, such as was purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury for use of the Internal-Revenue Bureau and the War Risk Insurance Bureau, the building on the Arlington Hotel site, or the building erected by the Interior Department. They are sensible modern office buildings.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Dorr, who has charge of the space available in the various buildings, said that there was only between 600,000 and 700,000 square feet available in the various buildings.

Mr. STAFFORD. I read from Mr. Dorr's testimony before the subcommittee on the legislative bill, from page 1054:

Mr. BYRNS. What is the total net available space for office purposes in all of these buildings

Mr. DORR. 3,994,900 net square feet.

Mr. ANDERSON. A great deal of that space is now occupied.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the total available space. Now, there was a provision in the legislative bill apportioning this space, but it went out on a point of order. Mr. Dorr does not testify either before the gentleman's committee or before any other committee that there is no available space in these temporary buildings to house the activities of the Department of Agriculture; but instead of attempting to drive them out of these high-priced private office buildings—such as the Munsey Building, where you are paying more than a dollar per square foot—you come in here and propose a cut of $12,000 in a total appropriation of $158,000, a remarkably small reduction.

Mr. Chairman, these buildings that we have erected here on the Mall and in Potomac Park will be utilizable for 10 years, and now that we have spent millions and millions of dollars in erecting them it is good business policy to keep on utilizing them until they get into a state where the cost of repair and upkeep will be so great that it will be better to demolish them. In the meantime, let us adopt the policy of building modern office buildings to house the present and growing activities of the Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 67, line 22, substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY], as follows: "Strike out $158,689 and insert in lieu thereof $100,000."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] stated that if we start to occupy the temporary office buildings their occupancy will be made permanent. I submit that as long as we are issuing bonds at 4¼ per cent it would seem a good business proposition to occupy these temporary buildings that will accommodate the people employed in the Department of Agriculture better than they are, in many instances, provided for to-day. We have heard much about these buildings not being fireproof. As I stated a moment ago, the Department of Agriculture hires more buildings not fireproof than any other department. As I have said, these buildings are superior to those that we are now paying rent for. The Maltby Building and the whole block of buildings there, three or four stories high, are far superior to the majority of the buildings that the Government is now hiring. The gentleman has asked, "Why not complete the department buildings of the Department of Agriculture?" My answer to the gentleman is that that plan was blocked by the Real Estate Trust of Washington, first by the erection of the buildings underground, and next by the erection of a five or six story building on the ground contemplated for the site of the department building. So that, of course, is out of the question unless a new site is selected and a proper plan and building is decided upon. I think nobody would now suggest the completion of the plan originally suggested.

Mr. DALLINGER. Do I understand, then, that it is the gentleman's idea that that Agricultural Department Building should never be completed?

Mr. HAUGEN. Not the one that is under construction. I can not imagine that any sane man would even suggest such a thing. As the gentleman knows, that building was put nearly two stories of it underground, and another thing, a large six-story building was erected on the site that had been selected for the department building, which would have to be condemned and removed, which would make the site too expensive.

Mr. DALLINGER. Then it is the gentleman's idea that those two wings are going to stay there with that little miserable brick building in the middle to be a disfigurement to the city.

Mr. HAUGEN. They can be disposed of in various ways.

The gentleman from Wisconsin has called attention to the space which is available. It is common knowledge that clerks are being discharged here and leaving the city, and space is being made available every day. The department called attention to 40,000 feet available now. Objection is made to the use of it because it is on leased ground. That ought not to stand in the way. If necessary, we could provide for paying rent of the real estate. The buildings are there; they have been constructed at large expense. As long as we are issuing bonds, it is well to consider and practice a little economy, especially at this time. I trust the amendment will carry.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no Member on the floor of this House more anxious to save money for the Federal Government than I am. I do not believe in paying rent on buildings not owned by the Government when buildings Government owned can be secured. But after looking into the testimony in this matter; after we have called Mr. Dorr before the committee, and who is thoroughly advised; and after the testimony of Mr. Reese is considered, as I stated before, in time I think the Government can save possibly $53,000 in rent on account of rent now paid for the activities of the Agricultural Department in buildings not owned by the Government and moving them into Government-owned structures. Mr. Dorr says that on account of the great demand for extra space by other departments they are short of space, but he thinks by December next that not only can the Agricultural Department be taken care of, but many other departments can be housed in buildings now owned by the Government and on land owned by the Goverment.

As I stated, I am as anxious to save money as any gentleman on this side or the other side of the House. The Secretary of Agriculture stated to the committee that to go ahead and take certain activities out of certain houses that are now in need of space that they are proposing to, he is fearful that when the end of the fiscal year comes he will find himself in a position of having no space and having no appropriation in which to house the activities of the department, and the great Department of Agriculture will find itself embarrassed.

He says to this committee if you will let him administer this matter he will move these Government activities out of the houses on which we are now paying rent at the earliest practicable moment. I think his wishes should be respected. I say that if we are to err we ought to err on the side of virtue. I do not want to do anything to cripple this great Agricultural Department, and I am positively sure I do not want to do anything that will subscribe to the doctrine of spending money uselessly on the part of the Government, and especially at the present time, when every dollar that can be saved should be saved.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOWAY. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The gentleman heard the statement that Mr. Dorr said that there were 4,000,000 feet available in temporary buildings. Is it not a fact that Mr. Dorr said that all that space was now occupied?

Mr. JACOWAY. He said, as I recall, that all the space was occupied except a small portion on the corner of Sixth and B. The balance of the space was occupied, but he is of opinion that if given time that a great volume of money could be saved for the Federal Government by housing certain of these Government activities on property owned by the Government. But now it could not be done. Mr. Reese stated also that all these new items I have enumerated could go out of these places at the present time into houses owned by the Government, and in addition to that, he stated by the end of the fiscal year there will be other buildings becoming vacant that they could go into on Government-owned property. But at the present time we would run a chance of crippling the Agricultural Department and placing it in the anomalous position at the end of the fiscal year of being without space and no money to rent space. The subcommittee has gone into the matter in the limited time it had, taking testimony covering 62 pages, and I think out of abundant caution we ought to go slowly and be positively sure that no injustice is done the Agricultural Department in the question of ample quarters. I believe that at the end of the fiscal year, according to the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture, we can reduce it three or four times the amount of the decrease suggested by my amendment, and if it can be done we have the positive and unqualified assurance from the office of the Secretary of Agriculture that it will be done and every dollar possible saved to the Government. I am willing to risk the Secretary of Agriculture in this matter, and I know that the trust so placed in him will not be abused, but will be carried out to the letter conscientiously and in detail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan) there were 24 ayes and 35 noes.

So the substitute was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATES RELATIONS SERVICE.

Salaries, States Relations Service: One director, $4,500; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 clerk or chief accountant, $2,400; 1 financial clerk, $2,000; 1 clerk, $1,980; 1 clerk or proof reader, $1,800; 4 clerks, class 4; 11 clerks, class 3; 2 clerks, at $1,500 each; 13 clerks, class 2; 2 clerks, at $1,320 each; 1 clerk, $1,260; 36 clerks, class 1; 3 clerks, at $1,100 each; 39 clerks, at $1,000 each; 31 clerks, at $900 each; 1 clerk or lantern-slide colorist, $900; 3 clerks, at $840 aach; 2 clerks, at $720 each; 5 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 2 messengers or laborers, at $600 each; 3 messengers or laborers, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $600 each; 13 messenger boys, at $480 each; 1 messenger boy, $360; 3 messenger boys, at $300 each; 1 skilled laborer, $900; 4 charwomen, at $480 each; 11 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $203,840.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I wish to inquire as to this new position, "one clerk or chief accountant, $2,400." What is the purpose of that peculiar phraseology at the bottom of page 67?

Mr. LEVER. This employee has been transferred from a lump-sum fund to the general administrative expenses and statutory roll with the same title—no change in the salary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was he formerly on the statutory roll?

Mr. LEVER. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long has he been receiving a salary of $2,400?

Mr. LEVER. I can not say.

Mr. STAFFORD. If he is an accountant, what is the need of calling him a clerk? We do not generally pay clerks $2,400.

Mr. LEVER. I assumed that he may be clerk and chief accountant.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no instance in this or any other bill where we are giving a salary of $2,400 to a clerk.

Mr. LEVER. I will move to amend that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 67, line 25, strike out, after the word "one," the words "clerk or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For cooperative agricultural extension work, to be allotted, paid, and expended in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and under the same supervision as the additional appropriations made by the act of May 8, 1914 (33 Stats. L., p. 372), entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," $1,500,000; and all sums appropriated by this act for use for demonstration or extension work within any State shall be used and expended in accordance with plans mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the proper officials of the college in such State which receives the benefits of said act of May 8, 1914.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What is it?

Mr. STAFFORD. The point of order is it is new legislation heretofore not authorized by existing law.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is entirely wrong about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can be convinced if I am. I have read the hearings and I think I know, although I know I have not all the information which the gentleman has about it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the situation with respect to this item is this. In the food-production act, which is now in force, there is carried a sum of $6,100,000 for county agent, farm, dairy, and home-economics work. In the supplemental estimates the Secretary of Agriculture requested an appropriation of $5,670,000, in addition to the funds available under the extension act. The committee, after a very full and earnest consideration of the whole proposition, agreed to bring in this item increasing the appropriation for farm-demonstration and home-economics work by $1,500,000 over the fund that would ordinarily be available for the next fiscal year. So that we have very considerably reduced the estimates of the department. We have reduced them by $4,500,000 in round numbers. This proposition here merely anticipates the maturity of the so-called Smith-Lever Act. The committee felt in refusing the estimates of the Secretary of Agriculture that it was acting wisely for this reason:

The testimony before our committee from time to time discloses the fact that one of the chief difficulties in the organization of the work under this act came as the result of the inability of the department to find suitable men and women for this character of work. And when it was suggested that we should provide for an appropriation of something over $4,000,000, the thought that forced itself upon the minds of members of the committee was this, that this organization, which is now in operation, had been built up under an emergency condition, under war conditions, hastily gotten together, and that of necessity there must be a good deal of inefficiency in it. We felt that we were justified, notwithstanding the earnest plea of extension workers and presidents of agricultural colleges, and the Department of Agriculture itself, that it was unwise to break down this organization and build it up again, and that we would be acting wisely in eliminating from this organization such inefficiency as of necessity had to get into it on account of the haste with which the organization was built. The total appropriations for farm-demonstration and home-economics work for the next fiscal year will amount to $5,776,320, which in large measure will be matched by the State, so that, as a matter of fact, we should have a fund for that purpose during the next fiscal year of between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000. They are expending at the present time during this fiscal year, in round numbers, $8,000,000 of Federal funds and $8,000,000 of funds contributed by States, counties, various business organizations, and so forth, so that the total expenditure for this work during this fiscal year is about $16,000,000. Under the proposal of the committee the total appropriations for the next fiscal year will be something in the neighborhood of between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to how much is being expended by the Department of Agriculture, or is contemplated to be expended by that department, for the next fiscal year if the amounts carried in this bill are appropriated, together with the permanent appropriations that they have under substantive acts of legislation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. I will be very glad to give the information, although I just gave it a moment ago. Out of the Smith-Lever fund there will be $3,080,000 in round numbers. Out of the two items which we have just read for cooperative demonstration work we will have a fund of $1,196,320, and this proposal is $1,500,000, so that the total for the next fiscal year of Federal funds will be $5,776,320, which will be supplemented, of course, by State funds, which, as I stated a moment ago, would likely bring it up to between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not what I desired. The gentleman is only giving a small portion of the information I am seeking to obtain. I wish to ascertain the total of funds that will be available under the control of the Department of Agriculture for the next fiscal year under this bill if adopted as reported and also by reason of permanent authorizations?

Mr. LEVER. I thought the gentleman was referring to this class of work. It is set out clearly in the report—something like $31,000,000, which is found on the first page.

Mr. STAFFORD. The $31,000,000 only applies to the amount appropriated in this bill——

Mr. LEVER. The permanent appropriation is something like $62,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Additional?

Mr. LEVER. No; the total.

Mr. STAFFORD. Thirty-one millions additional?

Mr. LEVER. It is about $62,000,000, in round numbers.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I submit this is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. LEVER. Does the Chair desire to hear me or the gentleman from Wisconsin?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LEVER. It is very clearly in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on the face of the bill it shows that it is a modification of existing law, namely, the Smith-Lever Act. It seeks to increase the amount of appropriations provided in the Smith-Lever Act, which carries a definite amount of appropriation each year which could be used by the National Government in cooperation with State organizations. As far as that law is concerned certainly it is a change of existing law. Read the paragraph:

> For cooperative agricultural extension work, to be allotted, paid, and expended in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and under the same supervision, as the additional appropriations made by the act of May 8, 1914.

It describes that act. It is admitted by the chairman of the committee that this money is in addition to the permanent amount appropriated by the Smith-Lever Act referred to in this paragraph.

Now, he justifies it on some other act. I have not been able to follow it. He may have the law in his hand. I have the original food-survey and food-control law. I have not been directed to any particular paragraph of that law which authorizes it. That law was limited to the war. It was an emergency measure providing merely for conditions while we were at war with Germany. I have not at my fingers the act referred to by the gentleman. If the gentleman will call attention to what law it is, I may be able to follow him. But certainly, so far as the face of the bill is concerned, it is new law, because the original law fixed the amount of appropriation that Congress was to vote each year. It was an appropriation measure, and that amount is carried independent of this paragraph. That amount has been appropriated. That is part of the $31,000,000 additional that the Department of Agriculture has at its disposal, besides the amounts carried in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair catches what the gentleman says. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the organic act of the Department of Agriculture authorizes this kind of work. This is a method of disseminating information. The organic act authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to collect and disseminate information. This language might have read, "For cooperative agricultural extension work, $1,500,000." Now, the remainder of the language in the paragraph is nothing more nor less than a limitation upon the appropriation bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is the Chairman ready to rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON. It seems to me the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is clearly not well taken. All that the item referred to does is to mature the appropriations under an act already in existence. It matures the appropriations which would not otherwise be available under the Smith-Lever Act, and it provides that the sum shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of that act.

The Smith-Lever Act of itself sustains this appropriation. Suppose that act did not carry any appropriation at all; it would certainly be in order to carry an appropriation in this act putting into effect the provisions of the Smith-Lever Act, just as, for instance, in the meat-inspection act. That act originally carried an appropriation; it carries a permanent annual appropriation, and yet in this act we carry an additional appropriation for putting into effect the provisions of the meat-inspection law. The Chair will find that provision on page 18. It is almost identical in language with the paragraph against which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] makes the point of order. As I said before, all that this item does is to make an appropriation for the carrying out of a law which is already in effect, an appropriation which is an addition, it is true, to the appropriation carried in that act, but it does not make any new law at all. It simply increases the appropriation which is already carried there.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the positions taken by the two gentlemen, they have not advanced anything that shows that this is not a change of the existing law. I am well acquainted, as the gentlemen are, with the Smith-Lever Act. When it was agreed to in the House I protested against its policy. As my memory serves me, that act specifically provided the amount of appropriation that Congress should appropriate for these activities, and that amount is appropriated not by this bill but by that act. It is a continuing appropriation by Congress, and the department does not have to come to Congress to obtain the money, because it has been provided by that act. That was a permanent appropriation bill.

The gentleman refers to the meat-inspection act. That item on page 18 was subject to a point of order the same way. This amendment is akin to an attempt to increase the limit of cost on a public building. Congress has decreed that so much work——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman finished?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. Congress has decreed that so much money shall be appropriated for this character of work. It is appropriated. Now they seek to increase that amount on this appropriation bill, just as if in a public-building bill it was provided that so much money should be provided for a building. An amendment that was put on an appropriation bill seeking to increase the limit of cost would naturally be legislation. You can not escape from it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If a public-building bill appropriated half a million dollars for a public building, with no limit of cost fixed, would it not be warranted in——

Mr. STAFFORD. That is a different proposition.

Mr. MANN. Is there any limit of cost fixed in the Smith-Lever Act?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a specific statement as to the amount of money that Congress should appropriate.

Mr. MANN. Is there?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is.

Mr. MANN. On the contrary, does not the Smith-Lever Act appropriate, itself, so much money each year without any limit of the amount which Congress may appropriate?

Mr. STAFFORD. It specifically states that Congress appropriates so much money, and it provides for increasing amounts as the years go on, to be matched by appropriation from the States.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman does not quite mean what he says. If I remember the Smith-Lever Act, and I am sure the gentleman's recollection will be correct, the Smith-Lever Act is not an authorization of an appropriation at all. In itself it appropriates so much money each year.

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. MANN. It is not an authorization of an appropriation and Congress does not appropriate each year the money. It at one time appropriated for the future, each year——

Mr. STAFFORD. It is perpetual——

Mr. MANN. Without any limitation on what the Congress may appropriate and without any authorization whatever as to the amount appropriated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, here is a matter of policy as to how much shall be appropriated for this work. Congress adopts a permanent policy and passes an act known as the Smith-Lever Act. That act for the first year appropriated so many thousands of dollars, and then, as the years go on, the amount increases, and for this year that act provides so much money. I believe it will reach its full effect in six or seven years. That is the amount of money appropriated by Congress for that work. There is no authorization by Congress to appropriate anything more, and you are attempting in this bill to appropriate more money for a purpose for which Congress said only so much shall be appropriated, and which has been appropriated.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is through, I want to say that the gentleman's argument is quite aside from the situation. We are not undertaking in this appropriation to mature the Smith-Lever Act. It so happens that $1,500,000 would be sufficient to mature that act this year, but that is simply a coincidence. We are not undertaking to amend the Smith-Lever Act. We are undertaking to make an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the dissemination of information. That is all we do.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] says we have fixed the amount of money that can be appropriated for this purpose, and that therefore any increase in that amount would be subject to a point of order. Yet in this bill, in two items already passed, one for $551,000 for farmers' cooperative demonstration work outside of the cotton belt, and one for $645,000 for farmers' cooperative demonstration work within the cotton belt, you have appropriated money to do the very same kind of work that is being conducted under the Smith-Lever Act. The gentleman's argument would make both of those items subject to a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. No. Congress has not authorized any activities such as the gentleman refers to.

Mr. LEVER. I will ask the gentleman this question as to that: Would this item be in order if we had never passed the Smith-Lever Act?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. It seems the gentleman is getting himself in a wrong position there, because this provision does provide that this money shall be expended in accordance with the Smith-Lever Act, and that language would be law unless the Smith-Lever Act did provide that the money should be spent in some way.

Mr. LEVER. That is a fact; but that language is nothing more nor less than a limitation on this appropriation bill. This language might read, "For cooperative extension work, $1,500,000"; but the committee, in its wisdom, adopted a limitation upon this so as to make it sure that this fund would be expended in accordance with the plan already outlined by Congress.

Mr, Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair feels that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] would turn very largely upon the wording of the Smith-Lever Act. If it should be thought to be on a par with an authorization of a limit of cost on a public building, the point of order would be well taken if an attempt were made to increase the amount of the limit. But the Chair, without looking at the Smith-Lever Act at the present time, is under the impression that that law simply permanently appropriated a certain amount to be available annually, but in no respect prohibited Congress from increasing the amount if they deemed it necessary. The recollection of the Chair is, briefly stated, that that bill assured the different States cooperating with the Federal Government that there will be available a certain sum of money from the Federal Government each year, but does not undertake to say that Congress may not from time to time increase that amount. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan rose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Michigan desire to discuss this?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I desire to correct the wording of the paragraph from line 20 on page 70 to line 10 on the next page.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that I think that language superfluous. At least some of it can be stricken out. I mean this part—and all sums appropriated by this act for demonstration or extension work within any State shall be used and expended in accordance with plans mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the proper officials of the college in such State which receives the benefit of said act of May 8, 1914.

That is provided for in the Smith-Lever Act now in almost identical language. I am willing that it shall be stricken out.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It says "all sums appropriated by this act," and that would include $645,000 for the boll-weevil work and other sums.

Mr. LEVER. I am sure the department did not contemplate that. If the gentleman will move to strike it out, I will accept it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think it goes too far, and includes two items on page 70, and I doubt if it goes far enough in requiring the department to use the money and distribute the money among the States.

Mr. LEVER. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman from Michigan: "All sums appropriated by this paragraph" would limit it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes. I think the language otherwise is loose, and it will not require the Secretary of Agriculture to distribute the money entirely in accordance with the Smith-Lever Act. The language on page 70 seems to be strong enough to require the distribution of the money in that way; but over on page 71——

Mr. LEVER. I would say to the gentleman that if he will move to strike out that language, I will accept his amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will not the gentleman be willing to pass over that portion of it for the present, and return later for the purpose of perfecting the language if we feel it should be perfected?

Mr. HAUGEN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan if it is not possible that the department would construe the language to mean that this would give discretion to the Secretary to say how this money shall be expended, and that he might agree upon a plan to use 25 or 100 per cent of the money to be expended, and that plan might be pursued?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think it is uncertain, and that it places restrictions upon the Secretary of Agriculture in the expending of the money, whereas it was intended to restrict the use of the money to the carrying out of such projects as the Secretary of Agriculture and the head of the college shall agree upon.

Mr. HAUGEN. If agreeable to the chairman, I will move that the language be stricken from the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Beginning with line 4, page 71, after the figures "$1,500,000," all down to line 10, inclusive. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 71, beginning with line 4, after the figures "$1,500,000," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States, including the erection of buildings, the preparation, illustration, and distribution of reports and bulletins, and all other necessary expenses, $215,000, as follows: Alaska, $75,000, of which $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available for the erection of barns, purchase of breeding live stock, and other expenses connected with the stock-breeding experiments on the island of Kodiak and at the Matanuska station; Hawaii, $50,000; Porto Rico, $50,000; Guam, $25,000, of which $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available to repair damage due to typhoon; and the Virgin Islands of the United States, $15,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell such products as are obtained on the land belonging to the agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States: Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated for the experiment station in Hawaii $10,000 may be used in agricultural extension work in Hawaii: And provided further, That hereafter employees of the Department of Agriculture assigned to permanent duty in the Virgin Islands shall be entitled to the same privileges as to leave of absence as are conferred upon employees assigned to Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Guam by the act of June 30, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 441), and if any employee of the agricultural experiment stations of the United States in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, Guam, or the Virgin Islands shall elect to postpone the taking of any or all of the annual leave to which he may be entitled under the said act of June 30, 1914, he may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, subject to the interests of the public service, be allowed to take at one time unused annual leave which may have accumulated within not to exceed four years, and be paid at the rate obtaining at the time the leave is granted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I move——

Mr. LEVER. If there is going to be any controversy on this, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there will be any controversy about what I want.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15018) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, had come to no resolution thereon.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for not to exceed 10 minutes, and after that I shall prefer a request for unanimous consent. I do not think it will take me 10 minutes to make my statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for not more than 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, on December 30, when I asked unanimous consent to send the revenue bill to conference, I made assurances to the House, first, that if the House conferees did not agree to the child-labor amendment which was put on by the Senate I would bring it back to the House. The House conferees have concurred in the Senate amendment.

I also said that whether we agreed to the bone-dry amendment or not we would come back to the House and give the House a vote on that, and also that we would come back to the House on the amendment relating to the tax on political contributions.

In regard to the bone-dry amendment, the House appeared to be perfectly willing to send the bill to conference; but just before the question was put the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] came in, and not being thoroughly conversant at that time with the entire situation he asked, before giving his consent for the conference, an assurance from me that before we came to a final agreement we should come back to the House on the bone-dry proposition; and this demand was also made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL]. When on January 2 following we were about to vote on a rule sending the revenue bill to conference I made the same assurances as I had on December 30. Now, subject to the approval of the House, the committee have agreed to the bone-dry amendment. I took the matter up with the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] this morning, and also with the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL], and with the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], and the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN], who are interested in the matter, and they all assured me that they withdrew any demand that the conferees bring that amendment back to the House to have a vote upon it. So if there is no other demand by any Member in regard to that question, the House conferees will proceed to reach a final agreement with the Senate conferees on that matter. I hope there will be no demand, because it will save us at least two days on the revenue bill.

With respect to the Senate amendment providing a tax on political contributions, on the demand of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] I agreed that before reaching any final agreement on that provision I would bring it back to the House. Now, the situation with respect to that amendment is this: I told the Senate conferees that I would have to bring that back to the House before reaching any final conclusion. We discussed that amendment several times. The Senate conferees said that if we were going to bring it back to the House they would recede, because it would mean a delay in the passage of the revenue bill, which they did not wish. I on behalf of myself and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DIXON], as members of the House conferees, made several propositions to the conferees. First, we proposed to them to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment to insert, on page 86, in line 22, after the word "shall," the word "hereafter," so that the tax or penalty would not be retroactive. This was rejected. A majority of the Senate conferees and a majority of the House conferees rejected that.

We made a second proposition to insert the word "hereafter" after the word "shall" and to substitute "$1,000" for "$500." This was rejected by the conferees.

We made a third proposition to insert the word "hereafter" after the word "shall," and to insert the figures "$2,000" instead of "$500." This was rejected.

The fourth proposition was to insert the word "hereafter" after the word "shall" and to substitute "$2,500" for "$500." This was rejected.

Then to test the conferees we made the proposition to concur in the Senate amendment, which was rejected. I make no criticism for rejecting such a proposition, as it contained the retroactive tax; all these propositions, however, were made subject to the approval of the House, since I was under obligations to enter into no final agreement on the subject until I brought the matter back to the House for a vote. As I said, the Senate conferees said if we were going to take it back to the House they would recede, and so far as the Senate conferees could recede they did so yesterday.

I am here trying to keep faith with the House on my assurance that I would give the House an opportunity to vote on it before signing a report. I ask, therefore, unanimous consent that it shall be in order for the House to entertain a motion or motions to instruct the House conferees with respect to Senate amendment 222, relative to the tax on campaign contributions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To reserve objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina in order that the gentleman may continue his statement.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have completed my statement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask whether it is the intention to offer an amendment to insert the word "hereafter"?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I will go further and state that if the House gives permission to entertain a motion or motions, Judge RUCKER, chairman of the Committee on Election of President and Vice President, will offer the following motion to instruct the House conferees:

That the House instruct its conferees on House bill No. 12863 to concur in the Senate amendment No. 222, with the following amendments: "On page 86, line 22, after the word 'shall,' insert the word 'hereafter,' and on page 88, in lines 5 and 6, strike out the words 'within 30 days after the passage of this act and thereafter' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'hereafter.'"

Mr. FERRIS. Is it proposed to modify the amount?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; that motion leaves the Senate amendment just as it is, except that it does not make the tax retroactive—that is, does not apply to elections and primaries in 1918. It places in it the word "hereafter."

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. In case you get unanimous consent for the purpose of offering that motion, you would not exclude any other motion?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. GARNER. The way to get agreement here so that we may be certain to have a law is to concur in the Senate amendment, and then the Senate can not get away from it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say and announce now that if this amendment is offered, making it effective by the word "hereafter," I shall offer an amendment which will make it retroactive in the following words: Strike out of this bill, which is in the present tense, and say, "have given, advanced, paid, expended, subscribed, or contributed during the taxable years since 1912."

That would require an examination of accounts in the way of political contributions in all the campaigns back to 1912, and I am frank to say would cover the period while this administration has been in power, and would probably give us a lot of valuable information that the public ought to have with respect to contributions made during campaigns since that time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say that if I can get the unanimous consent, that would be in order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Senate had receded or would recede?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Senate conferees actually receded so far as they had the power, but the question is, Will the Senate permit them to recede? In my judgment it will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As a matter of fact, as it stands now there is no such amendment to the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; there is an amendment in the bill because it has finally to be ratified or rejected by the Senate itself in spite of any action of its conferees.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If the conferees on the part of the House had concurred, or if the House had concurred in the Senate amendment when the bill was over here for consideration, it would have been as much a part of the bill as the enacting clause is at the present time. The House let it go to conference by unanimous consent on the theory that that provision of the Senate would become a law.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER. If we had concurred in this amendment when it was over here, it would have been in the bill, and the Senate could not have gotten away from it. It would have been a part of the law.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, it would; but now the Senate recedes.

Mr. GARNER. The Senate has not receded, and the House can make it a part of the bill if it wants to concur in the amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not the House then in the attitude of refusing to permit the Senate to recede from an amendment that the Senate put on?

Mr. GARNER. Yes; and that is what we intend to do if we concur and make it a part of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was put in there as pure buncombe, has no place in a revenue bill, and was put there for spectacular purposes.

Mr. GARNER. That may be true, but if the House had concurred when it had an opportunity to do so, or if the House to-day will give unanimous consent for the purpose of opening it up for amendment and for concurrence, it will be a part of the law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from North Carolina has occupied 10 minutes, and preferred a request for unanimous consent, to which objection was reserved.

Mr. MADDEN. In order that there may be no further waste of time, I will object now.

The SPEAKER. Object to what?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman let me make a statement to the House? The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] when the bill was sent to conference agreed with the House that the House should have an opportunity to vote on the Senate amendment. Now he is seeking to comply with that agreement by unanimous consent, so that the House may take a vote now instead of having the conference report brought to the House, excluding this item, and then the proposition sent back to conference.

I take it that while there has not been undue haste in reference to this bill, as far as the conferees are concerned, still that it is absolutely desirable to have the matter disposed of at as early a date as possible, and I do not see why it is not just as easy for the House to do it to-day as it will be to do it next Tuesday or next Wednesday.

Mr. KITCHIN. I trust the House will do it to-day, because it will save us from going back to conference the second time.

Mr. MANN. That is all the gentleman is asking unanimous consent for?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; so as to save two or three days.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman goes one step further and announces that he proposes to have an amendment offered which would commit the House to this proposition.

Mr. KITCHIN. The House could vote against it if it is opposed to it, and other amendments or motions could be offered.

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman if the House should express itself as opposed to this Senate amendment, then the Senate is ready to recede, and the amendment is finished in that way?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and in my judgment, if you will permit me, I think the Senate, if we pass the amendment which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] will offer, will still recede. I think it will put it upon the ground that to recede would be in the interest of time in getting the bill through.

Mr. GILLETT. So in the interest of speed the best thing is to reject the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If the House concurs in the Senate amendment to-day on a vote, what position would the conferees then be in? Would not that then be a part of the bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. In my judgment under the circumstances, though I am not as skilled a parliamentarian as some others, I think the Senate itself could still recede or instruct its conferees to recede.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If the Senate puts on an amendment to a House bill and the House concurs in that amendment, does not that make it a part of the bill, the two Houses having come together on that one provision?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. After the Senate conferees have receded?

Mr. GARNER. They have not receded.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes, they have.

Mr. GARNER. They have not.

The SPEAKER. There is a question about whether they have receded or not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not this the state of facts: If the House takes no action whatever to-day, this whole matter remains in exactly the same situation as when it passed the House?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. If the House takes no action at all.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The Senate will then recede and the matter is not in the bill. Therefore the bill will be exactly as it passed the House.

Mr. GARNER. But the gentleman from North Carolina and his conferees will be in the very embarrassing position of having agreed to bring it back to the House, and they have not yet brought it back to the House for the purpose of consideration.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is what I am trying to do now by the unanimous-consent request I have made.

Mr. GARNER. If anyone objects to the consideration of it by unanimous consent, then the conferees on the part of the House are in honor bound to bring it back to the House for the purpose of giving us an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. MANN. Absolutely.

Mr. GARNER. Absolutely, and there is no getting away from it.

Mr. KITCHIN. And no one is trying to get away from it, but we are here trying to give the House a vote on the matter.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen should remember that the conference report is not before the House. When the gentleman from North Carolina asked unanimous consent to send the bill to conference, if the House at that time had agreed to the Senate amendment that this controversy is about, it would have been as much a part of the bill as any other part; but that is not the situation.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I am in honor bound to bring this matter to the House, so that it can have a vote upon it. I am seeking to have a vote upon it now rather than to compel us to report a disagreement and bring it back to the House, then vote on it or first discuss it, then have it carried to the Senate and discussed there, and then come back to the House with another report, all of which will consume at least two or three days, possibly longer. We can all know how we stand on this proposition to-day, and I am just asking it in the interest of time, so that we may settle the matter to-day.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to say to the House that in my opinion this has no place in a revenue bill. It is political buncombe, pure and simple; but as the bill makes the taxes retroactive, if this becomes a part of this bill there is no reason why it should not be retroactive, and I am unalterably opposed to permitting this to be written into law without making it retroactive and go back and show up some of the contributions——

Mr. GARNER. Why does not the gentleman concur in the Senate amendment?

Mr. FORDNEY. Because I do not want it in the bill. This is buncombe in the bill, and we would make ourselves ridiculous to agree to any such thing in a revenue bill.

Mr. GARNER. Child labor may be buncombe.

Mr. FORDNEY. I agree with the gentleman that the child-labor proposition is buncombe, for this reason: You are imposing upon the manufacturers of this country adult labor, but at the same time admitting goods from a foreign country produced by child labor.

That is what you are doing now; you can not make anything but buncombe out of it.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Wait a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FORDNEY. A majority of the conferees are for striking this out of the bill. The Senate conferees want to yield and strike it out of the bill, and they are unanimous in that.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman does not believe the House wants to yield, does he?

Mr. FORDNEY. I believe the House does want to yield, and I am expressing my own personal opinion, sir.

Mr. RUCKER. I understand, but——

Mr. FORDNEY. They want to yield, because in my candid opinion this is nothing but political bunk.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman's opinion is his own opinion——

Mr. FORDNEY. But my opinion will go as far as the opinion of the gentleman from Missouri; but I am expressing my own personal opinion and not attempting to do so for anybody else.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman speaks of it being buncombe; that is, a provision that will have a tendency to stop debauching the people of this country in the future——

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me ask the gentleman a question; you have asked me a question. Do you——

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman has the floor.

Mr. FORDNEY. Does my good friend believe that anybody on the face of God's green earth will pay a cent of tax under this provision if it becomes a law?

Mr. RUCKER. If they do not it will stop corrupting the people in elections——

Mr. FORDNEY. No; it will not; it will do just what such laws have done in the past; you will find a way to get around it. That is all you will do, and it has no place in this bill. It will make us ridiculous to agree to it; and if we do agree to it, I want it retroactive. I will not agree under any other circumstances.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this fact: The gentleman from Texas, in my judgment, is exactly right when he says that the Senate has not receded on their amendment. In fact, the Senate can not recede. They may agree to recede, but they have not done it. There is no way by which a recession can be made except it be part of the report. Now, if this House at this time should agree to the Senate amendment as it has been presented and is now in conference, there would be no possible way for the conferees on the part of the Senate to recede.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the Senate could recede; I said the Senate could.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from North Carolina intends to have an amendment offered if his request for unanimous consent is conceded?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, having made the objection, or reserved the objection, if that amendment is to be offered and I can offer my amendment, I withdraw the objection I made to the request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] withdraw his request?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks that notwithstanding the general rules of the House that it shall not be in order to offer a motion or motions to instruct the House conferees as to Senate amendment No. 222 to the revenue bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that that would not be in order, because unanimous consent was not given for any such purpose.

The SPEAKER. No; unanimous consent was not given for such purpose. The conference report is not before the House.

Mr. GARNER. I offer a motion that they be instructed to agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman [Mr. RUCKER] has a motion he wants to offer, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RUCKER moves that the House instruct its conferees on H. R. 12863 to concur in the Senate amendment No. 222 with the following amendment: On page 86, line 22, after the word "shall," insert the word "hereafter," and on page 88, in lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "within 30 days after the passage of this act and thereafter" and insert in lieu thereof the word "hereafter."

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to move to instruct the conferees to concur in the Senate amendment. I think that has preference over the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to instruct the conferees of the House to concur in the Senate amendment No. 222.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order on the motion made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANN. I think we ought to have all the matter before the House at once.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. RUCKER. To make a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. RUCKER. The point of order is this, if I understand it: The gentleman from North Carolina asked unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the rules of the House, an amendment providing just exactly what this amendment offered by me does——

Mr. KITCHIN. No; my request was for a motion or motions.

The SPEAKER. "Motion or motions" was the language of the request.

Mr. MANN. Nobody can afford to take any fine tricks on this thing.

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt about the gentleman's motion being in order.

Now, for what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To offer an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 86, line 22, after the word "shall," strike out the words "give, advance, pay, expend, subscribe, or contribute in the aggregate during any taxable year" and insert in lieu thereof the words "have given, advanced, paid, expended, subscribed, or contributed in the aggregate during any taxable year since April 1, 1912."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, that amendment is offered as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The SPEAKER. The vote comes first——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is that not debatable?

Mr. GARNER. All these motions are debatable, if I understand it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I desire to be heard briefly on the substitute.

Mr. GARNER. I have no objection to the gentleman from North Carolina controlling the time, but I want some time on this motion.

Mr. KITCHIN. Which motion here has preference?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. KITCHIN. I have always understood heretofore that a motion to concur with an amendment has preference over a motion to concur. That has been the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the rule is perfectly patent, and I called attention to it when the gentleman asked to send this bill to conference. When the Senate amendment first comes before the House the preferential motion is to concur with an amendment; but after the Senate has agreed to the amendment and it comes before the House again, the preferential motion is to concur in the Senate amendment, which takes precedence over a motion to concur with an amendment, the design in each case being to bring the two bodies together in the easiest way. The way in which it comes up, by analogy, it seems to me, the motion of the gentleman from Texas takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that the gentleman has stated the case precisely as it is.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized. How much time does the gentleman from Texas wish?

Mr. GARNER. Five or ten minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House and the gentleman from Missouri, as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say I do not know whether the House desires any legislation on this question or not. But I do want to impress upon the House this one thought: That if you desire legislation upon this question the only possible way to get it is to vote for the motion I have made. If you vote for the motion of either the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] it means that a complete report will be made on the revenue bill and this amendment will be stricken out, the Senate yielding, and there being a difference between the two Houses. But if you agree to the motion I have made, then you will have the minds of the two Houses meeting and there will be no possible way by which this legislation can be defeated, except for the Senate to back up and plead guilty to the fact that they were bluffing, pure and simple. Now, I want to call their bluff. They put this amendment on in the Senate. It comes to the House. The House permitted the bill to go to conference by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, no. The bill was sent to conference by a rule; but the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] agreed that, notwithstanding the rule, he would bring it back for a vote on this proposition.

Mr. GARNER. Anyhow, this bill went to conference with the idea that the House would agree to at least three propositions in the bill. I call you attention to them. One was the bone-dry amendment, another was the child-labor amendment, and the other was the one in reference to political contributions. Neither of these amendments ought to have been on the revenue bill, but they were all there, and when it came here we asked the conferees if they would not agree to them or they would bring it back to the House for a vote. I submit to the gentleman that there is just one way to get this legislation, and that is to concur in the Senate amendment; that is, to instruct your conferees at this stage of the procedure to agree to the Senate amendment. Now, if your conferees are instructed to agree to the Senate amendment, and they go back under direction of our House, and the Senate conferees agree to this amendment, how are you going to keep it from being law? In only one way, and that is for the Senate conferees to go back to their body with an official record of the fact that they withdraw the amendment and disagree to their own action.

If you vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], you have an amendment that makes a disagreement between the two Houses, and we are placed in the position of having refused to legislate on the question of political contributions. I want to put this before the House, so that no Member can say in the future that he would have been perfectly willing to legislate on this subject if he had had an opportunity. You have the opportunity now to either get this as a part of this bill or else the Senate will be compelled to recede and say to the world, "We placed this amendment on the revenue bill, but we did not act in good faith, and when you called our hand we backed down."

That is the only way.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman think that this is good legislation?

Mr. GARNER. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I am so anxious to get some legislation on this question, some legislation that will protect the ballot box from the rich men of this country, that I am willing to accept this, and in the future it will enforce an amendment of it. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. In a moment. I do not know how you all feel about contributions to political campaigns, but I believe that it does more to create bolshevism in this country than any other one thing. Go up, we will say, to the State of Michigan, the State of my friend FORDNEY, and what have you? You have an affair that is brought before the Senate to investigate the election of a Senator, which is questioned by virtue of the fact that he has spent too much money.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is why I wanted to have it made retroactive.

Mr. GARNER. Will you vote with me?

Mr. FORDNEY. Will you follow me?

Mr. GARNER. I will, if you will undertake to get legislation on this question; and if the conferees on the part of the House will go back into conference and agree to the Senate amendment, you will put the burden on the Senate, will you not? Let me ask the gentleman from Michigan that question.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman that I have stood for this amendment making it retroactive. I have so stated. I ask the gentleman if he will follow me. I will stand there. Where will the gentleman stand?

Mr. GARNER. I will stand for it.

Mr. FORDNEY. But I will not stand for it unless you make it retroactive.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman's motion make it retroactive?

Mr. GARNER. It does.

Mr. FORDNEY. The present provision does not.

Mr. GARNER. The present provision does make it retroactive.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman would go up into the State of Michigan and make an investigation, would it not be well also to go down into the State of Georgia and see whether the Senator from that State was honestly elected?

Mr. GARNER. It does not make any difference to me what State you go to.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. I want to see enacted a law, and I take advantage of the situation to get some law in this country where we can stop large contributions. I heard complaining a good friend of mine, a member of the conference, who said he did not want to do it because it would be unjust to the people who had contributed in the past. Now, when you find a man who has contributed large amounts for a campaign fund for a Congressman or a Senator you will find one or other of two things: Either he has more money than he has any use for or he is trying to buy something. [Applause.] I want to stop that. I do not care how much a man paid for last year's contribution. There is not a man who contributed more than $500 for a campaign fund in 1918 for a Congressman or Senator but he either had more money than he could use or he was trying to influence or get into the good graces of that Congressman or that Senator. I am willing to make him pay this tax. I think he is able to do it:

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does this provision cover contributions for primary expenses?

Mr. GARNER. I think it does. Let me ask the gentleman from North Carolina. Does this provision cover contributions for primary expenses?

Mr. KITCHEN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. He says it does. I had not carefully examined the amendment.

What I wanted to do, gentlemen of the House, was to direct your attention to the parliamentary situation with reference to this particular amendment. If you vote for this motion of mine you are likely to get a law, or else you will put the Senate in a hole. If you vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] you will put the amendment in conference, and the House conferees will contend for it, and the Senate conferees will not yield, and therefore the House conferees will have to yield.

Now, I understand you have this strange state of affairs: The Senate putting on an amendment, and according to the statement of the chairman, the entire conferees on the part of the Senate wanting to yield on their own amendment; they do not want you to concur in it. If the Senate itself had taken that action we would have them on record in the Senate that they refused to stand by their own amendment. But the only way we can do it now is to vote for this motion to instruct the conferees to agree to the amendment, and then the Senate conferees will have to go back into the Senate and get a vote through the Senate instructing them to recede.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. There seems to be a lack of information as to the wording of the amendment. Can we have it read so that we can know what the gentleman is talking about?

Mr. GARNER. It is No. 222. I supposed everybody had read this amendment.

Mr. KREIDER. I was trying to get it from the Clerk, and it was stated that the amendments are not printed.

Mr. GARNER. The substance of it is that you are to pay 100 per cent on all political contributions for campaigns of Congressmen and Senators in excess of $500. If a man has contributed $1,000, he would have to cover $500 into the Treasury as taxes.

Mr. FOSTER. Not the candidate.

Mr. GARNER. The one who contributes the money. It is the person who contributes to a candidate's campaign, aside from the candidate himself.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MANN. I understand if a candidate for an office contributes $500 to any political committee—even his own—he would be required to pay an additional $500 for taxes?

Mr. GARNER. That is true; but the money that has been expended in his own behalf is not included.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Texas, in answer to the query of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], said that if you wanted to make the effect of this amendment retroactive all you had to do was to vote for your motion.

Mr. GARNER. It makes it retroactive so far as last year is concerned.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have just read the proposed amendment, and I fail to find in it any provision to that effect.

Mr. GARNER. This bill is to apply to 1918, and therefore it would apply to that year.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. How about contributions made to campaign committees? What effect will the Senate amendment have as to contributions made to National and State committees and not made directly to the candidate?

Mr. GARNER. Anything over $500 in the way of a contribution made to a committee or a candidate would be taxed. It means that you are going to limit contributions in this country to legitimate purposes; that is to say, $500 or less to a campaign fund.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I notice the gentleman said "not to include contributions made by the candidate himself." A good many candidates are in some places assessed a certain amount for each county. When that assessment is made, if the candidate pays it, is that included?

Mr. GARNER. I do not know, but I imagine that $500 would be about as much as most candidates would be assessed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] five minutes, and, of course, if he wants more time I will let him have another five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] has made an accurate statement as to the situation that confronted the conferees. There was a division of sentiment, and a majority of the conferees were for wiping this provision out altogether. They regarded it as bad business, as a fool amendment—buncombe, as it were—upon a great revenue measure. It is one of the weaknesses of another body to inject into measures of this kind propositions that come up from various sections of the country, and this one seems to have come from one particular section of the country, where one particular Senator appears to have had trouble with another candidate. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] has made a forceful speech with regard to the desirability of stopping corrupt practices. No Republican will disagree with him as to that. But the gentleman from Texas has cited an election up yonder in Michigan, where, he observes, it is reported that large sums of money were spent on behalf of the respective candidates. The gentleman might just as well have referred to the recent election in the State of Georgia, where, I am told upon reliable authority, more than $100,000, some of it raised from officials of the Government backed by the President of the United States, was spent to elect a Senator—a candidate who, if I am not misinformed, obtained compensation from the Federal Trade Commission, from which he resigned, while he was a candidate for office, and who now holds a very good job, paying him a very large sum, under the auspices of the Alien Property Custodian. These are things which the gentleman from Texas might have called up, because he may have more information upon them than I have.

Mr. CRISP. Will my friend yield to me?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Without either admitting or denying that there were large contributions made to a campaign in Georgia in a race for the Senate, I think if that is true it is a splendid place to get some revenue. [Applause.] And as a Georgia Member I shall vote for this amendment. If contributions for this purpose were made in Georgia, the contributors should pay the tax, just as they should pay it in any other State. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should not expect the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], whom we all esteem highly, to take any other position with regard to a nefarious practice within the confines of his own State, and I question whether the gentleman from Georgia would halt at an investigation that ought to be had into the charges that this campaign in Georgia, which involves letters from the President of the United States, affecting the price of cotton, and the standing of candidates, which involves Col. Ed. Brown, which involves certain gentlemen who have apparently grown enormously rich in recent months—I question whether the gentleman from Georgia would hesitate to investigate all these things, as perhaps they should be investigated by a senatorial committee, if a senatorial committee, controlled by the party in power, were as active in investigating currupt practices in Georgia as it seems to be active in investigating charges in Michigan. [Applause.]

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] inveighs against corrupt practices, and yet he has been one of the active spirits of the party in power on this floor for the last six years. With what legislation to check corrupt practices enacted by his own party, which has had the power to enact such legislation, is the gentleman from Texas dissatisfied? We have had one corrupt-practice act after another brought in by the gentleman from Missouri, who took the high ground that the gentleman from Texas takes. Is he dissatisfied with that legislation? Does it not go far enough? Has he left loopholes for high officials of the Government to make large contributions for candidates in Georgia, or elsewhere, or to enable Presidents to write letters affecting cotton prices and drive out all candidates not approved by him one or two days before the polls close? Or is the gentleman dissatisfied because it is now proposed to reach the primary elections, which are final in certain sections of the country, by a measure which happens to be injected into the Senate because some Senator has a quarrel with somebody in his State?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Would not the gentleman like to see the names of the officials who contribute to the Georgia campaign fund published?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Let us vote for this, then.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania five minutes additional.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course, I should like to see these names published. I should like to see published the name of every contributor to this senatorial campaign in Georgia, which deprived of his election to the Senate one of the most popular young Democrats upon that side of the House. I should like to see emblazoned in large letters on the front page of every newspaper published from Augusta to the sea, or from Jacksonville to New York, the names of public officials and other large contributors who were so anxious to take care of the President's senatorial candidate in Georgia that they were willing to violate even Democratic honor in order that that election might be accomplished. But I want to say that I am not quarreling with the gentleman from Texas nor with any gentleman from Georgia. All these matters could be reached under existing law. The gentleman's party has been in power for all these years, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] who brought in this amendment, chairman of the Committee on Election of President and Vice President of the House of Representatives, has been before this body time and time again suggesting a remedy for these corrupt practices, and we have given him all the legislation he desires. Why does the gentleman now want to go to the country with his demagogic proposition introduced as a matter of personal interest in another body, and tie this great House of Representatives up to it on the greatest revenue bill ever passed in the history of man.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to know of the gentleman whether this interpretation of the bill as amended would apply in specific cases like this. In my district where the Democratic postmaster admitted that he has paid $500 for a post office at Cedar Grove, another man demanded $300. Remember that was out of a fund of $20,000 that was up against me. I hope it will not happen, because I do not think they could pay it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When I said the amendment was put in for personal reasons I did not refer to the gentleman's particular district. [Laughter.] But I do not see any reason why we should get excited over this proposition. If we are going to have it at all, this inquisitorial system, let us get down to rock bottom. The gentleman from North Carolina, finding himself beaten in conference, is endeavoring to keep faith with the House; he is obliged to come back to the House and keep his word and give the House an opportunity to vote.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. In the gentleman's judgment, is this retroactive and how far back will it run?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It will not be if the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is carried, because he proposes to insert the word "hereafter." It will be if my amendment is carried, because I propose that it shall go back to April 1, 1912, about the time the Wilson administration was promising to do great things for the working people of the country by uprooting the tariff system.

Mr. BUTLER. It will make a great many people cough hard. [Laughter.] If the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] shall prevail in this House, it would become a part of the law unless the Senate recedes it some way.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the motion of the gentleman from Texas prevails, we would be bound to stand by.

Mr. BUTLER. This provision, then, would go back one year.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; in that event it would go back one year, but that would not tax the large contributors when the war began, when we were shipping munitions to Mexico unlawfully and contributions were made that helped along in presidential campaign matters wonderfully well. It would not go back to 1912, when we were not passing out promises "like molasses with which to catch flies." It would not go back when large contributions were being made by people connected with large steel corporations, people who used to be charged with contributing money for Republican purposes, but who seem to have been won over by the administration.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield for one question.

Mr. FOCHT. Just one question. Would not the gentleman think it would be outrageous and a most unjust thing to have this retroactive because it would take from the postmasters who were appointed on the arrival of the Democratic administration, when there were 19 or 20 candidates and only 1 was appointed, and what about the other 19?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; and if the gentleman will wait——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, I will not yield during that one minute. Of course this ought to cover circulars sent out in the last campaign to postmasters and Federal office-holders asking contributions because the funds were low—some of them sent out not in the name of Vance McCormick, chairman of the Democratic national committee, but by some one close to Vance McCormick. The inquiry should cover those circulars referring to campaign deficiencies, which gently intimated that if people had any faith in the power that appointed them or in such jobs as came to them through Agricultural appropriation bills, and the like, where appropriations were doubled to take care of new employees, they ought to "cough up." All these things should be uncovered and will be uncovered if my retroactive amendment passes. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I believe every man in this House is anxious to have some law placed upon our statute books to, if possible, purify elections and to prevent the unlawful spending of money to corrupt the people who are voters of the country in a general election. I will vote for such a law at any time, at any place, brought up in a proper manner. As before stated, this provision has no place in a revenue bill, because every man, if honest, will admit that if this provision is put into law this Government will never get one penny of tax unless we make it retroactive. There will be some way to get around the law in the future. I said a few minutes ago, and I repeat, that this bill goes back and taxes the people of the country, manufacturers and individuals, on their incomes for the year of 1918, and Congress claims to have had the right of even going further than that and taxing the people in order to get revenue in the United States Treasury, to help pay these great debts incurred by the war and still going on. I say it has no place in this bill. This provision does not make the law retroactive. Although it seems the intention of the provision was for that purpose, yet it does not do it. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] a few minutes ago referred to the great expenditure of money in the State of Michigan. What he would have you to understand is that he meant in the senatorial campaign in the primaries last year. He regrets exceedingly that that straddling-the-fence politician, Ford, failed to receive the nomination on either side, ran on everything political, and succeeded in nothing. Now, I want to go further than that. I am willing to go back to the expenditure of money last year in the State of Michigan in the primary campaign, but, like my good friend from Pennsylvania who suggested an amendment, I want to go back as far as 1912 at least, and further if you want to do so. Oh, if you will only make it retroactive and catch the fellows who contributed more than $500 to past political campaigns for the past 6, 8, or 10 years, this bill will yield more than $6,000,000,000, my friends. We know of plenty of campaign contributions above $100,000 to the presidential campaigns in the past.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. And, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, no one would be guilty—let me finish this sentence—no one would be guilty of saying that the embargo that was raised by the administration permitting arms and ammunition to go into Mexico had anything to do with permitting the selling of guns and ammunition going into Mexico by any man or any set of men who contributed money for the campaign of 1912. Oh, dismiss it from your mind; but it happened, it happened. Now I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What reason was given before the committee for limiting it just to last year? Why did they stop just at last year?

Mr. FORDNEY. They did not want to catch anything back of the primaries in Michigan last year, as I understand it; no other excuse was given. In fact that alone was not given, but

I think we can see by the handwriting on the wall what the intent was. Now, one Senator said to me, a member of the Finance Committee, that when the amendment was offered on the floor of the Senate he did not oppose it for he did not think for a moment it would be adopted; had he thought so he would have taken the floor and most earnestly and strenuously opposed the passage or the adoption of that amendment, and he now wants to get away from it. The conferees of the Senate want to be excused or relieved from voting for that amendment remaining in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to say to the gentleman, and I frankly state, that a majority of all the conferees are in favor of striking this paragraph from the bill because in our opinion it has no place in this law. It makes the conferees, it makes the Congress ridiculous to pass a measure of that kind in a revenue measure intended, my friends, to collect money to support our boys upon the battle fields of Europe, to bring such political buncombe into it. It makes the Members of Congress in both Houses, in my opinion, most ridiculous. Present to this House a measure of this kind to limit contributions to campaign funds and put as heavy a tax upon it as you may place and I will vote for it at any time. I have been elected to this House 11 consecutive terms. I never had more than $100 given to me for any one of those 11 campaigns and never in my life put $300 in the total 11 campaigns I have taken part in, and therefore there is nothing personal in this for me. Gentlemen, my skirts are as free from fraud in a campaign, I believe, as any man on earth and I want to keep it so, but I say this measure is ridiculous to include in this law. I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to discuss with you the practical question, so far as the parliamentary situation is concerned. Personally, if I had my way, I would prefer not to have the amendment retroactive. I do not believe, however, that a man who is able to contribute $500 or more to some friend for political purposes will be hurt if he does have to pay a tax on the contribution.

Now, our excess-profits, income tax, and many other taxes of the revenue bill are retroactive. Therefore I do not think it is going to do such grave injustice if those who had enough money so that they could contribute $500 or more to some campaign will be hurt if they pay a tax. But now I want to discuss with you the parliamentary situation.

The Senate proposed an amendment providing that those who contributed over $500 should pay 100 per cent tax. Now, that amendment is before the conferees and is at issue between the two Houses. If the House instructs its conferees to concur in that amendment without any change whatever, when the House conferees go back to the Senate conferees and say, "We accept that amendment," then the jurisdiction of the conferees over that matter ceases. And that amendment goes in the conference report, and when the conference report is presented to the Houses they must accept it or reject it in toto. But say that now we instruct the House conferees to concur in the amendment with an amendment. Of course, the House conferees will endeavor to carry out the instructions of this House, for I do not believe there is a man in this House who was instructed but that would obey those instructions. But suppose that the House conferees go back and say, "We want to concur in this amendment with the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, my friend, Mr. RUCKER, or the amendment of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]," and the Senate conferees say, "We will not accept it." Then the Senate conferees can say, "We will not accept it, but we will recede," and they can bring in the conference report, leaving it out.

But take even the other horn of the dilemma, and say that they could not reach any agreement at all, then they can report a disagreement as to that amendment, and when it goes back to the Senate the Senate could recede from its position and the House be left high and dry. Now, that is the situation. Now, my friends, if the membership of this House desires legislation on this subject, the wise thing for them to do is to vote for the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to concur straight. If a majority of the House does not want legislation, if a majority of the House want to fix it so the Senate or Senate conferees can recede without rejecting the conference report, then they had best vote to concur with some amendment, which then will leave it where the Senate conferees can either recede or report a disagreement and make it possible to eliminate the whole matter without rejecting the conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House is not going to do a silly and ridiculous thing, although I have sometimes seen the House do that.

I want to say at the outset that I have never been in the habit of receiving campaign contributions to any extent; I never have solicited any; I never have received any, even from the packers, notwithstanding the statement that was recently made. [Applause.] In the last campaign there were sent to the man who was looking after my interests two campaign contributions, one of $100 and one of $150, which I duly reported, in accordance with a not very good custom, and, after the election, returned to the contributors. So that I am not at all fearful that a restriction of $500 would ever affect any contribution which I might want or receive personally. But let us see what this Senate amendment is, and then what the situation is here in the House. The Senate amendment, which, to begin with, was probably hastily and somewhat loosely drawn, without fixing any time whatever, provides for a tax upon every campaign contribution of over $500, the tax to be equal to the excess over $500, whether it be in reference to a Member of Congress, a presidential elector, governor of a State, a sheriff, or any other State official who was elected at the same time as the Member of Congress.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. May I call my colleague's attention to the fact that that would apply also to any proposition voted for at any of those elections, including the good-roads proposition in Illinois last fall?

Mr. MANN. I was going to say that it not only applies to candidates of a political party for office, but in those States which permit the submission of propositions to the voters of the States, where a committee is organized to urge the adoption of the proposition—as, for instance, in my State, a constitutional convention—the law applies to contributions made to those people. Now, let me say this, that there seems to be a general idea here that this Senate amendment applies to last year, the election of 1918, because this bill is designed to enact taxes for 1918. This is not a bill for the collection of 1918 taxes. Gentlemen are in error in thinking that. This is a general revenue bill. It provides in that bill in various places that for the year 1918 the taxes shall be so-and-so, but otherwise it is a general revenue bill, and there is no provision specifically that this shall apply to the campaign of 1918. On the other hand, there is no limitation that it may not apply to the campaign of 1916, 1914, and as far back as we can go under the power we have to raise this revenue. The amendment provides, and to that extent it seems to contemplate the collection of taxes for past contributions, that all of these committees and individuals, and everybody else covered by the amendment, shall make a return within 30 days after the passage of this act. Now, the purpose of making the return within 30 days after the passage of this act can only be for the purpose of collecting revenue, because that return has to be filed with the collector of revenue. Now, how far it goes back can not be ascertained except by construction.

It applies to the treasurers or chairmen of all State or congressional committees and of all political committees as defined in the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910, and in my judgment it would require every one of these committees since the act of 1910 became a law to file within 30 days after the passage of this act a full statement of all receipts of those committees. And while that would not be physically possible it would be possible to impose a penalty upon live people, not upon the dead ones, who were occupying these various positions.

There can be no purpose in the amendment requiring these returns to be filed with the collectors of internal revenue within 30 days from the passage of this law unless it applies to somebody; and if it applies to 1918, by equal token of the bill it applies to 1916, 1914, and 1912. That shows how utterly ridiculous the proposition is as it stands.

Now, I have no special fear that the very wealthy men who may have contributed would not be able to pay the tax. Of course the amendment provides that "any person, firm, or corporation contributing," and so forth. The law heretofore forbids a corporation to make a contribution. Whether this amendment, by putting in the term "corporation," will permit corporations to make contributions in the future, I do not undertake to say; but very likely. But here, how about this proposition: This amendment requires a candidate for office himself, if he be a Member of Congress and a candidate for Congress and contributes to a regular campaign committee of his party more than $500, to pay a tax equal to the excess over $500. Now, in some States, in some localities—in Chicago, for instance, and maybe I am interested to that extent—it is the custom for candidates for Congress, there being 10 districts in our city, to be asked for contributions to the central campaign committee. I have at times in the past, at the request of the committee, contributed $1,000. I think the request last fall was for $750. Now, is it proposed—and gentlemen must vote for the fairness of a proposition—that a man who was a candidate for Congress or some other position—because these contributions were not confined to candidates for Congress—having contributed out of his own means for his election, through the regular political committee channels, in the most perfect way that you can make a campaign contribution, with no effort to spend money personally, soliciting voters personally, shall be penalized now by a tax on his past contribution, against which he could not guard himself, while other Members of this House and elsewhere who spend their own money out of their own hands—I would not say as to Members of this House corruptly, though possibly in some cases outside of the Members of the House it might be corruptly—shall escape paying any tax.

How utterly ridiculous the proposition is! What justification can there be for it? Shall we propose in this bill to tax the profits, the excess profits, for 1918? We propose to increase the personal revenue taxes of individuals for 1918.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has only six minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. We will extend the gentleman's time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question before he resumes?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. We are permitted to spend so much in accordance to the provisions of an act of Congress that was considered fair and honest. Yet if we do spend that money, if I understand the gentleman's statement correctly, we would have to pay it over again?

Mr. MANN. If you paid it to a campaign committee you would have to pay it over again; yes.

Now, it is considered fair, though it is questioned by many people, that we may increase the tax for 1918, because we have had that under consideration, lo! these many months. Early in the year Congress commenced on this legislation, and perhaps people would have to take judicial notice that the taxes which were to be levied against them were to be increased because of war conditions. There can be other justification in any event for going back into the past and collecting taxes about which people could not know in advance. But here is a proposition passed by the Senate after the last election, after people had made their contributions and received their contributions, both for primaries and national-election purposes, that proposes by the strong arm to say to men who were generous enough to contribute, perhaps through friendship, perhaps through belief in the principles of a party, "We will take you by the arm and require you to pay over again." A thief would not be so mean. [Applause.]

And yet it is proposed under the dignity of Congress that they play the strong-arm act upon these people. I have known young men, candidates for office without money, who had some strong personal friends who were willing to put up more than $500 to help them, when other men with wealth could contribute all they pleased out of their own pockets. Under this bill a candidate for governor in my State with wealth may pay $100,000 himself, not to a political committee, and it will cost him nothing. But the poor man who wants to be a candidate for governor and has some friend who is willing to contribute $500 or $1,000 to his campaign expenses must double the amount. It is purely in the interest of the rich campaigner instead of the poor.

I am not in favor of corruption in elections. The power of Congress is plenary for the control of both primary and general elections. We can say that nobody shall contribute anything for campaign expenses. We do not need to resort to a tax for that purpose. We have the power to limit the expenses and the contributions. And yet it is proposed, and seriously proposed, to go back—nobody knows how far back—and say to men who in the open had contributed money which they believed was to be usefully used, "We will rob you now of the amount that you were generous enough to contribute." [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my time extended half an hour. There are several gentlemen who desire to speak upon this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to have the time for debate on the Garner motion extended 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. Reserving the right to object, I hope the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, who is the floor leader of the majority, will urge upon Members of the House that they stay with the Committee on Agriculture until we finish the Agricultural appropriation bill to-night.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, we are not going to agree to that.

Mr. HEFLIN. It must be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was not asking anybody to agree except the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. MANN. Well, he is notifying the House; and while he is doing that I am notifying the House that if he wants to stay late to finish the bill to-night he will have to keep a quorum here.

Mr. LEVER. Then I think a quorum will have to stay here.

The SPEAKER. The House has notice from both sides. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the time be extended 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? I do not object to a longer time for debate on this motion, but it seems to me that the opposition ought to have some time. The time ought not to be entirely under the control of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The immemorial rule of the House is——

Mr. MANN. The opposition has had all the time so far, except the one speech that I made.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I should like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question. I should like to know how the gentleman is going to vote on these various propositions. I have voted with him frequently on revenue propositions——

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman wants to know how I am going to vote?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman consent then to the extension?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am going to vote against the Garner resolution because it is retroactive. It takes the fellow who gave his money to political committees or organizations when there was no law against it, when he had a right to do it, and taxes him 100 per cent on all in excess of $500, and I will not vote for any law to go back and punish a man for doing what the law permitted him to do. I shall vote for the Rucker proposition, that just simply puts in the word "hereafter" after the word "shall," and let the Senate amendment stay like it is. The only difference between the Garner amendment and the Rucker amendment is that the Garner amendment taxes the man who contributed in the last campaign, when there was no law against it—taxes his gift—while the Rucker amendment provides exactly the same as the Garner amendment, except to make it apply hereafter.

Mr. GARNER. Of course this time is coming out of the time of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] reserved the right to object to this, and all this debate is out of order.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman has made his speech to the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman from Ohio knew how he was going to vote, but he wanted the gentleman to make his speech to the House. Now, let me ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Has the extension of time been granted?

The SPEAKER. It has not, and all this conversation is out of order.

Mr. FOCHT. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. There is already a request pending to extend the time 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. I ask that the gentleman from North Carolina occupy two minutes of his own time for the purpose of answering a question.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] knew how the gentleman from North Carolina was going to vote, but, of course, that was an opportunity for the gentleman from North Carolina to make his speech. I do not object to that, but I want to ask the gentleman now, if the Rucker amendment is adopted by this House, does the gentleman from North Carolina believe that there will be any provision touching campaign contributions in the bill when it becomes a law?

Mr. KITCHIN. I doubt exceedingly if it will become a law. I doubt exceedingly, if the gentleman's amendment carries, whether it will become a law, because I believe the Senate will recede in any event, and therefore, believing that, I can not permit myself to go on record for the sake of shouting political morals for a proposition that in my judgment is really a moral wrong, and that is the reason I am going to support the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. GARNER. If the motion that I have made is agreed to by the House, will it not be necessary then for the Senate, in order to recede, to go back and recede formally and put the Senate on record?

Mr. KITCHIN. While there is some doubt about it, I believe that is exactly what they will have to do.

Mr. GARNER. Then the gentleman's proposition is to adopt the Rucker amendment, when it is a certainty that it can not possibly become a law and the Senate will not go on record; but if you adopt my proposition you will either have it a law or the Senate will have to back up on its own proposition.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Senate will go on record in both events. It is bound to do so.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Texas now wants his way about it, so that the Senate can back out. The gentleman from North Carolina wants his way about it, to make it hereafter, so that the Senate will back out. Now, if I am right about that, the only difference between the two gentlemen is that the gentleman from North Carolina makes a bluff and the gentleman from Texas—and he will understand what it means—raises the bluff. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Illinois is an expert on parliamentary law as well as a good many other things, but he is wrong in reference to this proposition. [Laughter.] If the House will adopt the motion I have made, I honestly believe that this will be a part of this bill when the bill becomes a law, because the Senate has not the courage to back out. They played the demagogue, as some have suggested, and when it goes back and it is called to their attention that it is to purify the ballot there is not enough Senators in that body to withdraw it from the consideration of the conferees. This is not raising a bluff; it is calling a bluff. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will admonish gentlemen that they must not refer to the Senate.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the careful attention of the House without interruption while I attempt to explain what this Senate amendment and the various suggestions connected with it mean. The time may have come, and I believe it has come, when we ought to have a satisfactory corrupt practice act in the United States. But this clause in this bill is not that kind of an act. I expect to vote against every one of these propositions which will be submitted soon to this House. There are the best of reasons for it.

Now, I want to address particularly this side of the House. We are about to yield the control of this body to the Republicans. We ought not in the closing weeks of our control to add to our splendid record of legislative achievement a proposition so silly, so absolutely absurd. Let me tell you what you are voting for. If you vote for this proposition or any of these amendments any firm, person, or corporation who contributes or expends more than $500 toward the success or defeat of any proposition submitted at any election when presidential electors are to be elected, or Members of Congress or Senators, whether it is a primary election or general election, is fined the amount of the excess over $500 and compelled to pay that amount into the Treasury of the United States.

Let me call attention to the conditions in my own State of Illinois, and everyone of you have similar conditions in your own State. In the election of last fall we had pending a proposition providing for a constitutional convention. That was a proposition submitted at a time when there were elected Members of Congress. It was promoted by an organization of lawyers and of citizens who accepted contributions from civic organizations throughout the State and who carried on an extensive campaign. I have no doubt that in some weeks toward the close of the campaign as much as $500 per week was contributed and expended, and the last two or three weeks more than that. If you vote for this proposition, then those contributors are fined—and God knows we need a new constitution bad enough—are fined the amount they contributed above $500.

Are you going to vote for a proposition as absurd as that? The organization which promoted this campaign will be compelled to pay into the Treasury of the United States the entire amount they expended during that campaign over $500.

I wonder how much money the Anti-Saloon League and similar organizations have paid out in recent years to promote the principles they stand for and to influence the result of elections. Every one of those moral organizations, without any exception, expended more than $500 last year, and yet when you vote for any one of these propositions, except the Rucker proposition, you are voting to fine every one of those organizations the amount they expended for these purposes in recent campaigns, less $500; and the Rucker proposition will put them all out of business in the future.

That is not all. Your committees have assessed you in your own State and you paid the assessment. I undertake to say that few committees have assessed Members of Congress less than $500. That money you did not pay for your own election alone; it was expended by your committees, and the entire amount went into the respective counties of your congressional district and your entire ticket got the benefit of it. You are therefore voting to compel yourself to pay into the Treasury the amount of that contribution, less $500. Are you willing to do that?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman more time.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. It happens frequently that Members of Congress and other speakers participating in a national campaign contribute their expenses. They travel from one end of the country to the other, and they submit their expenses as a part of their campaign contribution and say, This is my contribution to the national campaign fund. How many of you have done that? Many; and few have escaped contributing less than $500. If you vote for any of these propositions, except the Rucker proposition, you vote to fine yourself the amount of the excess of your railroad fares and other expenses in these campaigns over $500.

In some of the States contributions are made compulsory in primary elections. When you submit your name for the purpose of having it printed on a ballot you are compelled by the laws of the State to pay so much money. I am not familiar with laws of that character, and I do not know whether the amount required in any State is over $500, but if it is then you are fined the excess over $500, and are compelled to pay it into the Treasury of the United States. Every man in this House who is called upon to vote for this retroactive proposition, and everyone except the Rucker amendment is retroactive, votes to accomplish the results I am describing. You have invited contributions to your national committees from your friends and from others, and persons representing you have done it, and your friends and others have contributed, and they have contributed because you wanted them to contribute to national committees, and you propose now to go back and fine your friends the amount of their contributions above $500. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote against all of these amendments, including the Rucker amendment. The Rucker amendment makes these things possible in the future, and that, from my standpoint, is just as bad as making it also retroactive. This is not the kind of a corrupt-practices act we want.

We have at the present time in the United States 17,000 more millionaires than we had when the war broke out in Europe, and this situation demands attention in this connection.

The war has been brought to a victorious close, and our participation in it has not developed in our armies any large number of prominent officers of high rank. After the Civil War from the North and the South there came to both branches of the National Congress military officers of high rank who during that long four years' struggle had rendered most excellent service and had acquired in a military way most prominent positions. It is hardly likely that any large number of military officers of high rank in the American armies will come to this body as the result of reputations made in France. But there is another class developed by the war who will be largely represented here if such propositions as these are written into the law of the land. You do not reach by this amendment, so strenuously insisted upon, the corruption you want to reach. Write into the law this proposition and you destroy political committees, both National and State. A rich man can carry on his own campaign, expend his own money, and can not be reached by anything in the existing law or this proposed amendment. It costs $100,000 to cover my own State of Illinois with a 3-cent letter in a political campaign, and there is nothing in the law which requires the rich man who is able to send out a communication of this kind to even account for it. A rich man can travel over any State in this Union in a political campaign with secretaries and assistants and publicity men, and we have no laws that would compel him even to account for expenditures of this kind. A rich man at the head of a ticket in any State can establish headquarters and conduct a campaign, such a campaign as may carry his entire ticket through, and expend any amount of money on his correspondence and his alleged personal expenses—a most elastic term—without even accounting for it. This amendment, whether it is retroactive or not, is in the interest of men of great wealth. It makes it impossible for a poor man to make any kind of a campaign against them without the assistance of his committee, and there will be no National or State committees if this is written in the law.

While the war has not developed for us any large number of great generals, it has developed for us 17,000 millionaires. A careful examination of our income-tax statistics—and I have made that kind of an examination—will show that we had 7,400 millionaires in this country in 1914. In 1915 we had at least 10,600 millionaires. In 1916 we had at least 17,000 millionaires. Statistics are not available in this particular for 1917 and 1918. The chances are that the increase in the number of millionaires did not continue at the same ratio on account of the taxes imposed after our entrance into the war, but it is a perfectly conservative estimate to say that we have at the present time in the United States 24,000 millionaires, of which number 17,000 are war millionaires coming into existence as the result of the war since the commencement of the war in Europe in 1914, and of course the number of near millionaires has also largely increased.

You are, therefore, making it possible when you write into the law such amendments as this for this class of war heroes to force their way into the National Congress and into prominent positions in the various States. Do you want to vote for a proposition which may bring about such a result as this?

This proposition, whether retroactive or not, will make it impossible for the Anti-Saloon League to continue in existence if it should be enacted into law in its present form. If it had been written into the law some years ago, it would have defeated the prohibition amendment which has been ratified by the requisite number of States. If this proposition is written into the law, it will put out of business the organizations for the promotion of the equal-suffrage amendment to the Constitution of the United States, for the reason that it will impose a penalty of 100 per cent on the excess over $500 of any amount which any person, firm, or corporation shall give, subscribe, expend, or contribute in the aggregate during any taxable year "for the success or defeat of any proposition to be voted upon at any primary election, general or special election at which candidates for Member of the House of Representatives or United States Senators or electors are to be nominated or elected."

We need and ought to have a corrupt-practices act. It ought to be carefully thought out and prepared, so as to meet the conditions which ought to be corrected at the present time. This amendment, whether retroactive or not, will accomplish the very things this House and the country do not want accomplished. I expect to vote against this motion and against all the amendments to it which have so far been proposed, but I will be glad to cooperate to the very extent of my ability in the accomplishment of legislation which will properly meet conditions presented to us in our elections at the present time.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, since my service in this House there have been enacted a corrupt-practices act and some amendments to the corrupt-practices act, but up to the present time none of them seems to reach the men who ought to be reached. This motion which we are now called upon to vote on does not go far enough, but there is one thing which we ought to do. Every time it is proposed in this House to vote to improve the corrupt-practices act, to make elections in this country purer than they have been in the past, we ought to vote for it. That is what the proposition is in this case. I do not know how many men in the last campaign, in 1918, contributed to the two great political parties. But, as said by the gentleman from Georgia, these men who have contributed large sums of money to campaign funds will not be ruined if this amendment should become a law and they are assessed and have to pay the taxes provided under this bill. I am free to say I would rather not go back beyond this year, but would rather make it effective from now on; but the difficulty is now that when we take this amendment and put another amendment on it, then the other body will have an excuse to not agree to it. Therefore, in order to cinch this matter now, if it is possible to do it, and I do not know whether that will or not, we ought to vote to accept it with one year. That is the only reason I shall vote for it as it is now written. If we can not do that, then I shall gladly vote for the Rucker amendment. I can say that I would rather have the Rucker amendment now than I would have the straight proposition of concurring in this, if it may come nearer getting such an amendment and stop the use of money in elections throughout the country in every election district.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does not the gentleman think we would be justified in going back to the year 1918, because these men who spent these large sums of money for the election will not take office until the 4th of March of this year? I think that is another reason why we are justified in this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I doubt that is a good reason or whether we should make this retroactive at all, but I shall vote for the motion only on account of this parliamentary situation we find ourselves in at this time. I shall gladly vote for the amendment the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has offered, and strike out the last year and make it hereafter, so it will apply to campaign contributions in the future. We have heard a good deal of talk and have seen much printed in the newspapers throughout the country in respect to excessive expenditures in the campaigns in the different States. I do not know that any State is entirely free at times. They do not all get the prominence in every campaign that some of them have had lately. Some men seem to rely upon their money to carry them into office and that is what we want to stop. It has been said here that 17,000 millionaires have been created by this war, so there are 17,000 more reasons why we ought to pass this legislation than there have been in the past. Let us vote for it and put it in if it is possible to do it at this time. Let us do our part so that we will show our willingness to get some legislation along this line. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker: We ought to be honest with ourselves, and honest with the country when we deal with the proposition now pending. What is it that it is solemnly proposed that we shall do? Should we concur in the Senate amendment, then we say that every man who, in 1918 at a time when his action was lawful, at a time when contributions were permitted, and public sentiment did not frown upon them, made a contribution in excess of $500 shall now to the extent of that excess, be compelled to pay the same into the Treasury as a so-called tax. This payment will not be a tax, it will be a fine for doing a lawful act. While it is not technically the same, this amendment has all the objectionable elements of a bill of attainder, or an ex post facto law. It proposes to stamp innocent people with the brand of wrongdoing, to penalize them for doing that which under the law of the time of the act, was lawful and proper. I am not interested in this matter of bluffs, and calling bluffs, referred to by some of my friends. They are using technical terms with which I am not familiar. But I am interested in taking up this proposition, and dealing with it in such a way as to make of it an effective law for the future, a law that will be useful and wholesome in respect to the public morals of the country. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] said, and well said, and we all agree to his statement in our hearts, that debauching influence of great expenditures of money in connection with popular elections, ought to be eliminated both by the force of public opinion, and positive statute. How can we deal with this situation and a just and fair law? The answer is easy. Defeat the Garner motion, and adopt the Rucker resolution. This amendment was undoubtedly intended by the Senate to be prospective in its effects, to deal with the future.

Read this amendment and it will be apparent that as drawn, it was not expected or intended to apply to the election of 1918. But by virtue of certain phraseology used in the bill, which says that the taxable year referred to, shall be the year stated I think on page 4 of the act to be the calendar year 1918, the question is raised whether this amendment might not apply to a situation to which it was not intended that it should apply, viz., to the election in the year 1918. If under any circumstances, the Senate amendment could be construed to apply to the year 1918 it should be amended to remove that possibility. Hence the propriety of adopting the Rucker resolution which proposes to add to the Senate amendment the word "hereafter."

I do not agree with the construction placed upon this amendment by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It seems to me that upon the most casual inspection of the language of the amendment it will be apparent that the effort to make it applicable not only to the year 1918, but to 1917, 1916, 1915, or as far back as you choose to go, it is an utterly strained construction of the language used, in contravention, and in violation of the ordinary principles of legal interpretation. This amendment may apply to the year 1918 for the reason that it provides that the reports contemplated shall be filed within 30 days after this amendment becomes law, and then within 30 days after any election occurring thereafter. This language shows that these reports shall be filed with reference to some one specific election. Hence it is a fair interpretation of the amendment that when it says a report shall be filed within 30 days after the passage of this act, having in mind that the other reports are to follow some one election thereafter, this first report was intended to apply to the election of 1918 and to no other. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is it that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri proposes to do? Why, simply to say that in the future, a tax of 100 per cent shall be imposed upon contributions in excess of $500. This would put all persons contemplating political contributions upon notice. The Senate amendment was not intended to ascertain who made political contributions in 1918. If that information is desired, look to the reports filed under the Federal and State laws. These reports will tell you who contributed in New York, Pennsylvania, Georgia or in any other State in the Union. We ought to do what is fair, decent, and honest in this connection. If an opportunity is afforded by appropriate action to make some helpful improvement in the political conditions of this country, let us avail ourselves of it, and pass a wholesome act that will apply, as all acts of this character should, apply, to the future, and to the future only. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is not before the House, but is in conference. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], I am informed, by unanimous consent asks that the House conferees be instructed as to the Senate amendment. First, whether the conferees should agree to the Senate amendment. If the vote of the House should be in the negative, then the House should vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri whether the Senate amendment should be retroactive. Am I correct in that?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. CANNON. Yes. Now, I am not going to vote, as far as I am concerned; I do not think I shall unless I may be suddenly converted, and I do not think I will be. [Laughter.] I am not going to vote to concur in the Senate amendment. I am not going to vote for the instruction.

Mr. Speaker, this Senate amendment was conceived in petty, little politics. I believe in honest elections, but when you take a great revenue bill to close up this war or carry it on, a bill that has taken months and months to consider, and then to have some Member of Congress for some reason or other to hang on it in the name of reform this proposition, why that is little, peanut politics.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, with the permission of the gentleman from North Carolina, on this subject.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to these requests? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in the first place, let us understand the exact issue before us. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] moves that the House concur in the Senate amendment providing for a tax on political contributions, which tax, according to the amendment, is retroactive and applies to contributions in the elections or primaries in 1918.

Mr. GARNER. To instruct the conferees to agree to it.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is the same thing. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] moves that the House instruct its conferees to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment making the tax on political contributions apply only to such contributions hereafter made in future elections, in future campaigns, and not to such contributions made in past elections and campaigns. Now, what is the object, gentlemen, of any legislation with respect to money contributed for or spent in elections or primaries? It is to prevent corruption and debauchery of elections and primaries. That is the only object that any patriotic man can have, is it not? How in the name of common sense can you prevent debauchery or corruption in an election or primary by putting a tax on persons who contributed in an election or primary that was held months before such a tax was ever suggested? Why, the whole object is to prevent it in the future. What does the Garner motion do? It asks the House to concur, to instruct its conferees to concur, without a change, with the Senate amendment that not only levies a tax on future contributions to campaigns, but 100 per cent of any amount in excess of $500 that was contributed by anyone for political purposes to any person, to any party, to any association, or to any organization during the year 1918, though there was no tax on and no law, statutory or moral, against such a contribution.

Now, let us take a case, we Democrats and Republicans. Suppose, fellow Democrats—even you who advocate the penalizing, retroactive tax—before you heard this cry of "political godliness," to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has just referred, you had learned that Bill Jones had given to SCOTT FERRIS, chairman of the Democratic congressional committee, $10,000 in the last campaign to help elect a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate, would not every one of us Democrats, including the gentleman from Texas himself, have thought more of Bill Jones and thought him a better and a more patriotic man than he was before he contributed the $10,000? Would not every Democrat here have thought such a contribution was proper and wise? Would not all of us have defended him?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? We would have known that Bill Jones had an object in giving the $10,000, and that he had gotten certain things, and that it was not legitimate money. They do not make $10,000 contributions unless they have some purpose in doing it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us examine our own minds and consciences about this thing. You have to answer this to yourselves, and not to me, or to the House, or to the country. Would not you have thought Bill Jones was a mighty fine fellow and that he had a right, a perfect right under the laws of this country—a perfect right, moral as well as legal—to make such a contribution? And he did have such right, if he felt that a Democratic House and Senate could serve this country better than a Republican House and Senate could. Answer this to yourselves, my fellow Democrats. Would any one of you have condemned and denounced such a contribution? Would you have not defended it? Why now try to punish, penalize with a heavy 100 per cent retroactive tax, Bill Jones for making the contribution?

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Please do not interrupt me. I have but three or four minutes.

My Republican friends, suppose you had learned before this "godliness" had struck the House, before the Senate had put this amendment on, that Tom Smith, a good Republican, had given $10,000 to Dr. FESS, chairman of the Republican congressional committee, to help elect a Republican House and a Republican Senate, because he felt that a Republican House and Senate could serve the country better than a Democratic House and Senate, do you not know that every Republican in this House would have thought more of him and regarded him as a better and more patriotic man than you had before? Would not every one of you have defended such a contribution as wise and proper? Not one of you would have condemned it. Why now attempt by concurring in the Senate amendment to punish by a 100 per cent tax Tom Smith for making such a contribution? The passage of the Garner motion would put us Democrats and SCOTT FERRIS in the position, after soliciting and accepting from Bill Jones his $10,000 to help elect a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate, of coming back in this House immediately after the election and saying to him, "Although we asked you for the $10,000 to help to elect a Democratic House and Senate for the good of the country and you gave it, we are now going to pass a retroactive law and punish you and penalize you in the sum of $9,500 by a tax to the Government, because you complied with our request." [Applause.] And the same observation will apply to the Republicans with respect to Republican Tom Smith, who contributed $10,000 to their campaign in 1918.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not yield.

Mr. GARNER. Are you in favor of the Rucker amendment?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am.

Mr. GARNER. Then you want to say that in the future he shall not have this moral and legal right?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I am willing to curtail that right in the future, but not to punish him for exercising his rights within the law in the past. I am against political corruption; I am against money being wrongfully spent in elections. I try to do the moral thing not only in politics but in all things. [Applause.] But I would not do an immoral or a dishonest or an unfair thing in order to accomplish what some people may think was an honest and right thing. I would not vote now to punish men for making contributions in 1918 or in the past when there was no tax on and no law against such contributions. It would not be right or the square, fair thing.

We can talk about purity in elections, we can denounce corruption in elections, and we can indulge in glittering generalities about corruption and debauchery and honesty and purity in elections as much as we please, but, gentlemen, it just is not right to go and penalize by any kind of a law a man for doing that which in law and morals he had a right at the time to do. [Applause.] And, therefore, I am not going to support the Garner motion but will support the Rucker motion. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield to a question?

The SPEAKER. All time has expired. The question is on the Garner motion.

Mr. FESS. A parliamentary inquiry. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FESS. If the Garner motion is not agreed to and the Rucker amendment is not agreed to, what will be the status?

The SPEAKER. It will be exactly where it was when we started in here two hours ago.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the question is on the previous question. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] moved the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear it.

The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Garner motion to instruct the conferees to concur in Senate amendment 222.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the Garner motion will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 61, nays 242, answered "present" 4, not voting 122, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. RUCKER was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. STERLING with Mr. FULLER of Illinois.

Mr. PRICE with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. DILL with Mr. MASON.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. WALSH, vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I wish to vote "present," then, on this roll, and to recall the vote that I cast on the other roll call and to be recorded present on that vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DAVEY, for four days, on account of illness in his family.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. LEVER the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15018) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose the Chair had recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. On page 70, in line 24, it reads:

Thirty-third Statutes at Large, 372.

That is a typographical error and should read Thirty-eighth Statutes at Large. I ask unanimous consent to make that change.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to line 24, page 70, for the purpose of making a correction. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 70, line 24, strike out the word "third" and insert the word "eighth."

Mr. LEVER. We have verified this, and my statement is correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] had reserved a point of order which I would like to have disposed of first.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purpose of my reserving the point of order was to ascertain what the present practice is as to cumulative leave of absence. The last proviso grants these employees in Alaska, Hawaii, and other distant lands cumulative leave for a period of four years. I remember when I was on the Isthmus some years ago Gen. Goethals stated that it was not good policy to allow them to collect their leave of absence for too long a period. We all desire to have them return to the States when they are privileged to have their vacations.

Mr. LEVER. I understand from the statement here that the customs service and the labor and immigration services in Hawaii and Porto Rico grant additional time to cover the time required on the voyage. The civil employees of the War and Navy Departments located at stations outside of continental United States are granted more leave than those on the mainland. The Philippine Islands and the Canal Zone are liberal in the matter of annual leave, and, in addition, they make allowance for the required transportation. The Navy act of August 20, 1916, provides cumulative leave for civilian employees at stations outside of the continental limits of the United States, and it is believed that the enactment of the legislation proposed will serve to keep the men more contented, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has not given the information that I sought, and that is why should the departments grant this accumulated leave. Four years is a long time even for Alaska or Porto Rico.

Mr. LEVER. Just how much the various departments of the Government grant I do not know, but it was pointed out to the committee, taking the case of the Virgin Islands, the leave of the individual would practically expire before he could make the trip, and the Hawaiian Islands the same way, also the Philippine Islands, and Alaska worse, and they felt that it would be in the interest of the service to let the leave accumulate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 71, line 24, after the words "Virgin Islands," the words "of the United States."

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman is right, and I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 71, line 24, after the words "Virgin Islands," strike out the words "of the United States."

Mr. MANN. I do not want to start giving a long name to the Virgin Islands, so that we will always have to say "Virgin Islands of the United States." The only Virgin Islands we legislate about are the Virgin Islands that belong to the United States. The other language is superfluous and ought not to be in the statutes.

Mr. LEVER. I am glad the gentleman has offered the suggestion; the gentleman is right about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I also ask to have the same amendment adopted on page 72, lines 11 and 15.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 72, line 11, after the words "Virgin Islands," strike out the words "of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 72, line 15, after the words "Virgin Islands," strike out the words "of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of having read a letter which I think is appropriate to this Agricultural appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS.

DEAR SIR: You remember two years ago last spring you mailed out some sample cotton seed. My name was in the list. The boys prepared the land and I planted the seed by hand, and when the cotton began to grow I could see that it was better than the other cotton, so I picked the cotton and saved it separate from the other; and last winter, when the day's work was done, I picked the lint off the seed by hand. I had enough seed to plant 1 acre. The drought came and my cotton did not mature to do any good, so this summer when I was sad, knowing my boy was going over the top in France, I just could not keep still, so I decided I would spin my lint into thread; so, with the help of a picture, my youngest son constructed a spinning wheel which was a success, so I spun the lint into thread and then I crocheted a laundry bag and donated to the Red Cross, so I decided to make one and send you, also stating how I made it from the seed you sent me. My boy that made the spinning wheel was 13 years old. My age is 52 years. I intended the bag for your Christmas present, but could not get it off. So wishing you success,

Very truly,

EMILY C. FELTS,
Waurika, Okla., R. 2, B. 54.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would not under ordinary circumstances take the time of the committee to read any letter from anyone into the RECORD, but I have been so touched by the letter just read from Mrs. Felts that I have made bold to introduce it here. I hold in my hand this laundry bag made by hand by a woman of my district 52 years of age, made by her own hand independent of modern invention. The cotton prepared without the use of a gin, picking by her own hand the lint piece by piece from the seed, the spinning wheel made by her boy 13 years of age upon which the cotton was spun, crocheted with her own hands while her boys were fighting in France. It is so refreshing in these times of war and high prices to know there still lives a woman so worthy, so capable, so generous as to send me this interesting present. I am so proud to make public acknowledgment of the gift and public acknowledgment of her industry, ability, and true worth. It is a worthy lesson in frugality for all of us. I am proud she lives in my district.

Mr. CANNON. Of course you have woman suffrage in Oklahoma. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, certainly. We are proud to make acknowledgment of that. To such industry we may all applaud. To such industry and true worth we may all subscribe. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think I shall not be in the House late this afternoon when the provision relating to the Federal Horticultural Board is reached. There was some talk yesterday about the action of the Federal Horticultural Board and the prohibition of importations. I have a note from Mr. Marlatt with an attached statement or memorandum undertaking to tell how plant novelties may be imported, and as it is a matter of great interest to many people in the country connected with this prohibiton I ask unanimous consent to have the letter and memorandum printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The matter is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FEDERAL HORTICULTURAL BOARD,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1919.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MANN: I am handing you herewith a copy of the new statement which has been drawn up by Dr. Galloway relative to plant quarantine No. 37. It gives specific information relative to the means of entry through this department of prohibited articles for the purpose of keeping the country supplied with new varieties and creations and the necessary breeding or propagating stock.

In the statement sent to Mr. LEVER and incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for January 30 the following paragraph covering this point is included:

"The quarantine makes provision for the entry of these miscellaneous other bulbs and other prohibited articles in limited quantities through the office of foreign seed and plant introduction, this department, for the purpose of keeping the country supplied with new varieties and creations and the necessary breeding or propagating stock, such entry necessarily being safeguarded by the highly developed inspection and quarantine service which has been organized by this department. It is impracticable to give this type of inspection to commercial importations. The cost would be prohibitive, especially under conditions which would require very frequent provision for holding the imported material in quarantine for a period of months or years and the necessity for very high-grade and expert inspectors. Furthermore, inspectors with the training required are not available."

Yours, very truly,

C. L. MARLOTT, Chairman of Board.

HOW PLANT NOVELTIES MAY BE IMPORTED.

It will be noted that under regulation No. 3 novelties of lily bulbs, hyacinths, tulips, lily of the valley, crocus, or narcissus, or novelties of any fruit plant that can be forwarded as scions or buds, or novelties that may be propagated by seeds or nuts, may still be imported in any desired quantity for propagation purposes under permit. Novelties of many kinds originate each year in all parts of the world, and, while some of these may be excluded under regulation No. 3, provision is made for their importation under regulation No. 14. In other words, quarantine order No. 37 does not preclude the securing of novelties by horticulturists, nurserymen, and others, but provides a way through the United States Department of Agriculture for bringing in this material in limited quantities.

For a number of years the Office of Foreign Seed and Plant Introduction in the Bureau of Plant Industry has been introducing new, rare, and useful plants and plant material from all over the world. In pursuance of this work, which will be continued and expanded, machinery has been developed which can be utilized in bringing in novelties for those engaged in commercial enterprises. Heretofore the work of the Office of Foreign Seed and Plant Introduction has had to do largely with the bringing in of plants and plant materials for scientific workers in the Department of Agriculture, State experiment station workers, and a special corps of collaborators and experimenters. This work has been carried on in close cooperation with the Federal Horticultural Board, resulting in the development of specially equipped inspection houses, quarantine houses, and other facilities for taking care of plants and plant materials when they arrive and during the course of the usual procedure of inspection.

For the importation of novelties a special permit from the Federal Horticultural Board will be required in each case. The shipments will all be made through the Office of Foreign Seed and Plant Introduction. This office will receive the material, care for it during inspection by the inspectors of the Federal Horticultural Board, and when inspection is completed and the material is released it will be repacked and forwarded to its final destination. This is the procedure now followed in the case of plants and plant material brought in for scientific workers. This work has been going on for more than 20 years, and during that time nearly 50,000 different lots of plants, seeds, bulbs, vines, cuttings, etc., have been brought in.

In recent years the facilities for handling plants during inspection have been improved. From the moment the plant material arrives it is under the supervision of experts and every condition looking to the welfare of the plant is provided. This kind of work must necessarily be limited to small lots. The number or quantity of each lot permitted entry will depend on the nature of the plant or plant material. The Federal Horticultural Board will decide such matters in issuing the special permit. The board will also determine from proper certificates furnished by the persons desiring to import and through its own advisory experts whether the plant or plant material may be classed as a novelty.

The procedure, in brief, for the importation of novelties under regulation No. 14 will be that persons contemplating such importations will first make application to the Federal Horticultural Board for a special permit. The application will be accompanied by a certificate as to the bona fide nature of the novelty or novelties, the name and address of the exporter, and the quantity of material it is desired to bring in. As the quantity of any novelty that will be allowed to come in will be limited, it may be necessary to make limitation by bulk rather than by numbers. This procedure is followed with parcel post material. If the permit is issued, the importer will be furnished with shipping instructions and shipping tags. These he will forward with his order and the material will come addressed to the importer in care of the Office of Foreign Seed and Plant Introduction, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. The importer must make arrangements with some responsible party or parties in Washington, D. C., for the clearance of the material through the customhouse at Georgetown, D. C., and for the payment of any and all charges involved. The department can not handle any of these matters. When the material is cleared it will be turned over to the Office of Foreign Seed and Plant Introduction by the duly authorized agent of the importer and prepared for examination by the inspectors of the Federal Horticultural Board. If released by the inspectors, it will be immediately repacked and forwarded to the importer by express, charges collect.

A permit for the importation of a novelty will be granted by the board only upon condition that if the plant material brought in is found infested with a dangerous insect or disease it will be destroyed and the records in the case furnished the importer in order that he may make adjustments with the person or persons from whom the plants were ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I am particularly interested in the reason for the increase of the salary of the chief of the bureau from $4,500 to $6,000.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of Agriculture came before the subcommittee in charge of this bill and recited to us the situation which brought about this increase of salary. During the next fiscal year it is probable that under Federal appropriations coupled with State appropriations under the Federal law there will be expended between $65,000,000 and $75,000,000.

The gentleman who for many years had been chief of the bureau and who is in a large measure was responsible for the growth and development of the bureau, as the gentleman from Wisconsin may know, recently died. The Secretary of Agriculture has been making vigorous efforts to see if he could find somewhere some one who is willing to take the responsibilities as to the administration of this large fund at a salary of $4,500.

He took the matter up with 12 of the most influential and best State road commissioners in the United States. He submitted some names to these commissioners and engineers and asked them to suggest to him the names of one, two, or three men in the United States who are big enough to handle the proposition. They submitted three names, he said. It was ascertained, however, that the first man whose name was submitted is now drawing a salary of $10,000 or $12,000 a year in a Western State. The second-named man is drawing a salary of $4,500 in a Middle Western State; but in that connection we are informed that he rents his house for $35 a month. You could not rent the same house here, I should say, for less than $75 or $100 a month. The Secretary tendered this position to the first-named man and asked him to come on here and confer with him. The man declined, on the ground that he owed some obligations to his family.

He brought the second man here and offered him a salary of $4,500 and urged him to take it, pointing out to him that it was practically a lifetime position, that it was a position of great honor, and all that sort of thing. This man for the same reason refused the offer. We can get a man, probably from the New England States, for a little less than this, but the committee concurred with the subcommittee in its belief that we ought to get a man from the western section of the country, which is more interested in the cheap grade of roads than in the high-priced ones. And while the Secretary of Agriculture did not suggest the figure, he did say that he thought he could get this second-named man probably for $7,500, and possibly for $6,000. That is a plain frank statement of the situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is no bureau in the department which expends as much money as this bureau, and from the statement made by the gentleman, I think it would be false economy to keep the salary at the present figure. Therefore I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating and reporting upon the utilization of water in farm irrigation, including the best methods to apply in practice; the different kinds of power and appliances, and the development of equipment for farm irrigation; the flow of water in ditches, pipes, and other conduits; the duty, apportionment, and measurement of irrigation water; the customs, regulations, and laws affecting irrigation; for the purchase and installation of equipment for experimental purposes; for the giving of expert advice and assistance; for the preparation and illustration of reports and bulletins on irrigation; for the employment of assistants and labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for rent outside of the District of Columbia; and for supplies and all necessary expenses, $82,440.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 77, line 4, strike out "$82,440" and insert in lieu thereof "$102,440."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto may close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, this amendment restores the appropriation of this item to the original amount. Until the last agricultural bill the amount carried was $102,440. On account of the war and the necessity for using great amounts of money, this item, among others, was cut down by $20,000. The money is used in cooperation with the States on a half-and-half proposition. The State of California in the past has expended $7,000 and the Federal Government $7,000 for this purpose. I am presenting this amendment at the request of the State engineer of California and at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. I believe I can explain the matter more thoroughly by reading a letter which I received from the State engineer. It is as follows:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING,
Sacramento, December 4, 1918.

Hon. C. F. CURRY,
Congressional Office Building, Washington, D. C.

Subject: Funds for cooperative work in irrigation and drainage.

DEAR MR. CURRY: Knowing your keen interest in the matter of proper support of the Division of Irrigation, I make free to request your interest in obtaining, if possible, more money for that division than is now available.

For some 16 years the Division of Irrigation—formerly a part of the office of experiment stations, but now connected with the Bureau of Public Roads—United States Department of Agriculture, has been cooperating with the department of engineering of the State of California.

Each party to the agreement contributes the sum of $7,000 annually for the investigation of such subjects as the irrigation of rice, alfalfa, orchards, and other staple crops of California; the pumping, storage, and conveyance of water for irrigation; the organization of irrigation districts; the design and construction of irrigation works; the silt problem in Imperial Valley; and other kindred subjects.

The Division of Irrigation of the Federal Government is also cooperating with most of the Western States in a similar manner and along similar lines of work.

As you know, the yields of crops throughout the West depend largely upon the wise use of water, and during the past and present emergency regarding increased war production by means of irrigation, the members of this division have rendered valuable service to such State organizations as the department of engineering, council of defense, food and power administrations, railroad commission. The assistance given this office has been of very great and growing benefit.

For several years it has been crippled for lack of funds, and the extra war work which it has undertaken has been made possible only by dropping much of its regular work. In addition, and to make matters worse, the Agricultural Committee of the House during its session last winter reduced the appropriation for this division from $102,440 to $82,440, on the ground that little drainage work could be done while the war lasted on account of the high price of tiles. This prediction has not come true, since much more irrigated land has been reclaimed by drainage during the past year than has been done in any previous year. The amount should have been increased rather than reduced.

May I ask, therefore, on behalf of the State of California, that you will keep the interests of this division in mind and take such steps as you may deem proper to induce the Agricultural Committee of the House to restore the appropriation to what it was in prewar times?

Very truly, yours,

W. F. McCLURE, State Engineer.

Mr. Chairman, it was too late to have this matter included in the bill by the committee. We did not get the report back from the Agriculture Department in time. Mr. C. F. Harrison, Assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture, in a letter to me said that the extra money can be used to advantage, and that it ought to be appropriated, but the Secretary of Agriculture could not see his way clear to put in a supplementary estimate. The chairman of the committee suggested that I present the amendment from the floor, and I understood that he would accept it. I hope that it will be adopted.

Mr. HAUGEN. The amount estimated is only $82,440. I understand the gentleman to say that more was carried in former years.

Mr. CURRY of California. It carried what I have asked to have inserted, $102,440, in the prewar period.

Mr. HAUGEN. The item provides for investigating and reporting upon the utilization of water in farm irrigation, including the best methods to apply in practice, which include tiling.

Mr. CURRY of California. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Tiling is as old as the hills, and the farmers generally know as much about tiling and draining as any one in the department.

It would seem that the time has come—I do not want to take up the gentleman's time.

Mr. CURRY of California. There was nothing said about tiling on this proposition, except the Committee on Agriculture said that on account of the price of tiling there ought not to be so much done during the war. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman has an understanding with the chairman that the increase is to be accepted, of course, I do not care to rise in opposition.

Mr. CURRY of California. The chairman suggested I submit the amendment, and I understood the committee would accept it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, I do not have any objection to accepting the amendment. There are two items in this bill—this is one, and the other item is drainage—which for many years have carried the same appropriations. The committee last year reduced this appropriation, if I recollect, by some $20,000——

Mr. CURRY of California. That is correct.

Mr. LEVER. On the theory that during the war there would be very little irrigation work done. The gentleman from California has been very, very earnest in this matter, and if it is satisfactory to the other members of the committee I have no objection to it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to accommodate the gentleman from California, but I believe it is also fair to say that the people are generally fairly well informed as to drainage, especially tiling, which this appropriation is to be used for—it is for information as to improved piping, and so forth.

Mr. CURRY of California. That is not for tiling; that is a minor purpose. There is not one cent in ten dollars that would be used for tiling.

Mr. HAUGEN. What is it to be used for?

Mr. CURRY of California. It is used for the investigation of irrigation and reclamation in cooperation with the Western States and for the investigation and use of water in the production of alfalfa and all kinds of crops, citrus fruits, and so forth.

Mr. HAUGEN. It says, "the flow of water in ditches, pipes, and other conduits," and I take it it refers to tiling. I am quite certain so far as drainage goes; but, after all, if it is agreeable to the chairman, I do not care to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Public Roads, $594,320.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HEFLIN: Page 78, line 7, after the figures "$594,320," insert the following as a separate paragraph:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture all available war material not needed for the purposes of the War Department, but suitable for use in the improvement of highways, and that the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he hereby is, authorized to employ the same in Federal road improvement and to distribute such material as may not be needed for this purpose among the highway departments of the several States upon the same basis of distribution as provided by the Federal aid road act, approved July 11, 1916."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal said about the vast quantities of material, explosives, and other things that have accumulated in the War Department by reason of the great preparations that we have been making for the war just ended. Some have suggested that some of this material should be disposed of, even if it is thrown into the sea, and I submit to the gentlemen of the committee, that this material can be used and used to great advantage by distributing it as the Federal roads act provides. I think it is proper to insert it at this place. I know of no other measure that we could get the provision on, and if we can put it on this bill at this time, why the States can get the benefit of this great amount of war material that has been accumulated by the War Department. It will be distribluted in the States according to the population of the State, according to the number of miles of post roads, and according to the territorial area. That is the provision of the Federal good-roads act, and I hope——

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. What is this material which the gentleman desires to have distributed?

Mr. HEFLIN. Various kinds of materials—explosives for one thing, cement and other valuable stuff, implements, and so forth.

Mr. HAUGEN. Such as automobiles and trucks?

Mr. HEFLIN. It would include all of them, I think.

Mr. HAUGEN. And road machines of all kinds?

Mr. HEFLIN. Every kind that the Government does not propose to use in the war service.

Mr. HAUGEN. Can the gentleman give an approximate estimate of the value?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not that information.

Mr. HAUGEN. It would run into hundreds of millions of dollars, would it not?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know how much it would amount to, but the Government has it on hand, and unless it can be used in the War Department it will probably be thrown aside as junk or sold to somebody at sacrifice prices. It can be used now to great advantage in the various States, and there is no better use to which the Government can put them than for building up the public highways of the country.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand that the explosives that they have been throwing or may throw into the ocean are a considerable part of this?

Mr. HEFLIN. I say that it has been suggested that they might have to throw some of it away.

Mr. LITTLE. Permit me to say that I am in favor of this amendment, because my attention has been directed to the fact that they have thrown away explosives of very considerable value. And I heard a very reliable man say that he would give $1,000,000 for certain explosives that he understood they were about to throw into the ocean. And if the gentleman has a suggestion that would take care of that stuff without throwing it away, I am in favor of it.

Mr. HEFLIN. This provision will certainly do that, because here is a way to dispose of this stuff that is actually not needed by the War Department for war purposes. And I trust the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] will not make his point of order but will permit us to put this provision in the bill at this time——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this matter has received no very serious consideration at the hands of the committee. I recognize it is a matter of great importance, and I wish very much the gentleman from Alabama would work out in greater detail the proposition and be in position to furnish the proper committee, which I think is the Military Committee, with detailed information of the amounts and the kind of material on hand.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield for a question.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I will just say to the gentleman that that matter is now before the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LEVER. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that. It belongs properly to that committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to say to the gentleman, inasmuch as we are now passing on the road department of the Government, there is no more appropriate place than here. I spoke to the chairman of the committee about it when we were considering this bill, and I suggested to him I would offer it there or on the floor, and he suggested it be done here.

Mr. LEVER. I will state to the gentleman that my own view is confirmed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON] that the Military Committee is the proper committee to dispose of these materials. They properly belong to the military establishment of the Government. The Military Committee is more familiar with the subject than we are. The gentleman's purpose is good, and I am in favor of it.

I make the point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. All I am interested in is getting the material so that it will be available for use in the various States. I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order but will let the House vote on it.

Mr. LEVER. I would much prefer, as good legislation, to let the Military Committee pass on it. Therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF MARKETS.

Salaries, Bureau of Markets: One chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 administrative assistant, $3,000; 1 administrative assistant, $2,500; 1 clerk in charge of supplies and accounts, $2,250; 2 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 1 clerk, $2,000; 1 executive assistant, $1,980; 1 administrative assistant, $1,980; 11 clerks, class 4; 1 clerk, $1,740; 14 clerks, class 3; 1 clerk, $1,440; 35 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,380; 5 clerks, at $1,320 each; 1 clerk, $1,300; 163 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk, $1,140; 40 clerks, at $1,100 each; 88 clerks, at $1,000 each; 13 clerks, at $1,080 each; 7 clerks, at $1,020 each; 2 clerks, at $960 each; 24 clerks, at $900 each; 3 clerks, at $840 each; 2 clerks, at $720 each; 1 laboratory helper, $900; 1 laboratory aid, $960; 3 laboratory aids, at $900 each; 1 laboratory aid, $840; 1 laboratory aid, $720; 1 photographer, $1,400; 1 photographer, $1,200; 1 superintendent of telegraph, $2,000; 1 supervising telegrapher, $1,620; 5 telegraph operators, at $1,600 each; 47 telegraph operators, at $1,400 each; 1 telegraph operator, $1,320; 7 telegraph operators, at $1,200 each; 1 telegraph operator, $1,080; 2 telephone operators, at $900 each; 1 telephone operator, $840; 1 draftsman, $1,400; 3 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 1 draftsman, $900; 1 map tracer, $900; 1 map tracer, $720; 1 map tracer, $600; 4 machine operators, at $1,200 each; 2 machine operators, at $1,100 each; 1 machine operator, $1,000; 3 chauffeurs, at $900 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $900 each; 3 laborers, at $840 each; 6 laborers, at $720 each; 4 laborers, at $660 each; 5 laborers, at $600 each; 2 laborers, at $540 each; 1 messenger, $720; 10 messengers, at $540 each; 1 messenger, $480; 6 messenger boys, at $600 each; 5 messenger boys, at $540 each; 21 messenger boys, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $420 each; 1 messenger boy, $360; 1 messenger boy, $300; 1 charwoman, $540; 6 charwomen, at $480 each; 6 charwomen, at $300 each; 9 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $671,810.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman can not do that with the reservation pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserved a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the passage of the Agricultural bill, but the increase in the number of clerks and the increase of appropriation in the Bureau of Markets is so startling that I should like to have some information about it, especially as I believe many of the items in this paragraph are subject to a point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I will say this to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I think it will be more expedient to discuss the individual items when we come to them.

With reference to this question of statutory salary I will say that the estimates called for a very much larger appropriation in the Bureau of Markets than the committee allowed, and we came back to the statutory salaries and reduced the number of clerks, and so on, in proportion to the reduction made in the lump-sum item. If the gentleman will allow me to do so when we come to these various items, I shall be very glad to discuss them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman if there is a statutory provision for the increase of the salary of the chief of the bureau from $4,500 to $5,000?

Mr. LEVER. No; that would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there any authorization for the increase of the salary of the administrative clerk from $2,500 to $3,000?

Mr. LEVER. There is not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For the one administrative assistant from $1,980 to $2,500?

Mr. LEVER. No. I will say to the gentleman, to save time, that no increases of salary on this statutory roll are made except where low-grade places have been dropped; as, for example, in the case of five telegraph operators at $1,600 and one telegraph operator at $1,080. Those are new places and the lower grades have been dropped, so that there is no increase or salary unless that can be considered an increase of salary, and I do not think it can be under the rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I notice in the schedule accompanying the report that 20 telephone operators are provided for at the rate of $1,400 each. Is there a statutory provision of that kind?

Mr. LEVER. You mean in the number?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Telephone operators at $1,400 a year.

Mr. LEVER. They are only transferred, I will say to the gentleman, from the lump fund of this bureau at the same salary. When a place becomes permanent the policy is to transfer from the lump-fund item to the statutory roll.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to call the attention of the gentleman and of the committee to the fact that in the current appropriations for the Department of Agriculture telephone operators in the Bureau of Forestry, for example, get $600 per annum. Telephone operators in the Capitol here, who are very busy operators, get $900 per annum. I have a number of citations here of the salaries paid telephone operators in various departments, and they do not correspond with this $1,400 increase in the Department of Agriculture, which, with $240 added, would make a salary of $1,640 for these particular operators who are favored in the Bureau of Markets.

Mr. LEVER. I think that is due to the fact that the telephone operators for the Bureau of Markets would likely have to be persons who can take technical telegrams. I imagine that they have to be a good deal more skilled and more highly educated than the average telephone operator, although I will say frankly to the gentleman that I did not make inquiry as to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that the number of clerks of class 1 has been increased from 91 last year to 163 this year.

Mr. LEVER. That is to take care of the increase in the lump-fund appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the total appropriation for clerk hire, from the chief of the bureau down, has jumped from $387,850 last year to $671,810 this year, or nearly twice as much in one year.

Mr. LEVER. The same answer fits that proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How old is the Bureau of Markets?

Mr. LEVER. It is about six years old, I think. The Bureau of Markets started with a $50,000 appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. The total carried now is considerably over $3,000,000, if I recall it offhand.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a very startling statement——

Mr. LEVER. I do not think so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of the fact——

Mr. LEVER. I do not think so. The Federal Government did not begin to make appropriations for agriculture until the year 1839. For some reason or other the earlier statesmen of this country did not recognize the proposition of appropriating money for the study of agriculture.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We did not get a real recognition of agriculture until President Lincoln's time.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit me, I will give him some information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to ask that the debate on this item be closed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I shall be obliged to make the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I have no objection to the gentleman proceeding for five minutes further, but after that I shall ask that the debate on this paragraph be closed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am opposed to this method of increasing salaries without the sanction of Congress, and I think the time has come when some of us should take a stand on that question. There is no reason why we should sit here month after month, legislating for the departments of the Government, only to permit the departments to run at variance with the legislation we pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman makes the point of order, let us have a decision on it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Regular order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not making this point against the Bureau of Markets any more than against any other department, but I say to the gentleman that the time has come, in my judgment, for somebody in this House to make a stand, not necessarily as "a watchdog of the Treasury," but as one who intends to see that the prerogatives of Congress are preserved.

Mr. ALMON. May I ask if the increase of $240 a year applies to these employees?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; it would. While the operators in the Capitol are getting $900, and one of them is getting $2.50 a day, these operators in the department are suddenly jumped to $1,400.

Mr. LEVER. That portion of the paragraph is not subject to a point of order. There is only one item that is subject to a point of order, and that is the increase of the salary of the chief.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman mean to say that the other salaries are not subject to a point of order?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly not. They are not increases at all. They are simply transfers at the same salary.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman make the statement that these other places are all authorized by law?

Mr. LEVER. Surely they are.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And these are simply transfers?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am going to contest the position of the chairman of the committee on that.

Mr. LEVER. Then let the gentleman make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It occurs to the Chair that in the interest of the economy of time——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I demand the regular order. That brings the matter to an issue.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to do it, but I accept the challenge. I make the point of order that the increase of salary of the chief of this bureau from $4,500 to $5,000 is not authorized by law.

Mr. LEVER. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to reserve further points of order to the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, if any part of the paragraph is subject to the point of order, the whole of it goes out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am willing to make the point of order against the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already sustained it.

Mr. LEVER. Then I offer the following amendment: To insert the paragraph as it is in the bill, except in line 10, where it says "one chief of bureau at $5,000," make it "one chief of bureau at $4,500."

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think it would aid in the expedition of the consideration of this paragraph to consider each item separately?

Mr. LEVER. I am willing to do that if the gentleman wishes. I want to save time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am raising a new question. I do not want to delay the passage of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Then I offer the following amendment to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the former amendment and offers another.

Mr. STAFFORD. Subject to the reservation of points of order to the other paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 78, line 9, after the colon insert "One chief of bureau, $4,500."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think some of these items are subject to a point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest this: It is getting late in the day. If my friend from Michigan will permit me, I do not think it is quite fair to the membership of the House and the employees of the House that under the guise of a reservation of a point of order the merits of a proposition should be gone into. I think every Member of the House knows why I am trying to expedite this matter. It is for the purpose of going into a conference to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock, which I have called, believing that this bill would be finished by this time. It is a conference on the wheat-guaranty proposition. Men are coming here from different sections of the country to talk with certain Members of Congress. Will the gentleman point out which of these items he thinks are subject to a point of order and let us pass upon them? That is the thing to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair make this statement for the purpose of keeping the RECORD straight: The Chair has already sustained a point of order to the entire paragraph, and unless the gentleman offers an amendment restoring it, it is not in the bill at all.

Mr. LEVER. Then I offer the amendment to insert the paragraph as it was originally in the bill, with the exception of the change of one chief of bureau from $5,000 to $4,500.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 78, after line 8, insert:
"Salaries, Bureau of Markets: One chief of bureau, $4,500; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 administrative assistant, $3,000; 1 administrative assistant, $2,500; 1 clerk in charge of supplies and accounts, $2,250; 2 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 1 clerk, $2,000; 1 executive assistant, $1,980; 1 administrative assistant, $1,980; 11 clerks, class 4; 1 clerk, $1,740; 14 clerks, class 3; 1 clerk, $1,440; 35 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,380; 5 clerks, at $1,320 each; 1 clerk, $1,300; 163 clerks, class 1; 1 clerk, $1,140; 40 clerks, at $1,100 each; 88 clerks, at $1,000 each; 13 clerks, at $1,080 each; 7 clerks, at $1,020 each; 2 clerks, at $960 each; 24 clerks, at $900 each; 3 clerks, at $840 each; 2 clerks, at $720 each; 1 laboratory helper, $900; 1 laboratory aid, $960; 3 laboratory aids, at $900 each; 1 laboratory aid, $840; 1 laboratory aid, $720; 1 photographer, $1,400; 1 photographer, $1,200; 1 superintendent of telegraph, $2,000; 1 supervising telegrapher, $1,620; 5 telegraph operators, at $1,600 each; 47 telegraph operators, at $1,400 each; 1 telegraph operator, $1,320; 7 telegraph operators, at $1,200 each; 1 telegraph operator, $1,080; 2 telephone operators, at $900 each; 1 telephone operator, $840; 1 draftsman, $1,400; 3 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 1 draftsman, $900; 1 map tracer, $900; 1 map tracer, $720; 1 map tracer, $600; 4 machine operators, at $1,200 each; 2 machine operators, at $1,100 each; 1 machine operator, $1,000; 3 chauffeurs, at $900 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $900 each; 3 laborers, at $840 each; 6 laborers, at $720 each; 4 laborers, at $660 each; 5 laborers, at $600 each; 2 laborers, at $540 each; 1 messenger, $720; 10 messengers, at $540 each; 1 messenger, $480; 6 messenger boys, at $600 each; 5 messenger boys, at $540 each; 21 messenger boys, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $420 each; 1 messenger boy, $360; 1 messenger boy, $300; 1 charwoman, $540; 6 charwoman, at $480 each; 6 charwomen, at $300 each; 9 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $671,810.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order on the paragraph and I make a point of order on the following several items: One administrative assistant, $3,000; 2 executive clerks at $2,000 each; 1 clerk at $2,000; 1 executive assistant, $1,980. Then on page 72, line 2, 1 superintendent of telegraph, $2,000; 5 telegraph operators at $1,600; 47 telegraph operators at $1,400 each; 4 machine operators at $1,200 each; 2 machine operators at $1,100 each; 1 machine operator at $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina is it true that there are no increases in these clerks?

Mr. LEVER. There is not a solitary increase of salary except the increase of the chief of bureau to which the point of order was sustained.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order because this is a vital matter providing new positions in the Government service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he did not say in answer to my question at the beginning of this controversy that the administrative assistant raised from $1,980 to $2,500 was not authorized by law.

Mr. LEVER. No; I said it was authorized as far as the appropriation bill was concerned.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And did not the gentleman make the same statement in regard to one administrative assistant raised from $2,500 to $3,000?

Mr. LEVER. No; no change in the salary there. I think the gentleman misunderstood me. These are transfers from a lump sum. The man has been carried during the past year from lump items. At least, that is what they told us.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My point, Mr. Chairman, is that they are not authorized by law. The salary has not been fixed by law. The law fixes the salary at $2,500, and the department added $500 to the lump sum, and then the gentleman from South Carolina says that is an authorization by law. The department deliberately took from one fund in its possession and placed it to the credit of another sum to pay the salary, advancing it from $2,500 to $3,000. That is not an authorization by law; it is an evasion of the law. That is the practice I am contending against. I would not have made the point of order if it had not been for this subterfuge to get a man into a job, then increase his salary, and then claim that it is an authorization. The only legislative assistant we have is carried on the rolls at $2,500.

Mr. LEVER. I do not admit that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's bill fixes the salary at $3,000, and the only excuse is that the Secretary had another fund into which he put his arm, took out $500, and gave it to the clerk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, nothing more vital in determining the salary of employees and officials in the departmental service has been presented than the question now before the Chair for decision. It is proposed to grant authority to the head of a department to single out from a lump-sum appropriation, which is available only for use in the field service, to enable him, without any authorization of law, to provide for any clerk or official, have him fix a salary, and then after he fixes the salary, whether it be at $2,000 or more, to have the committee come in here and provide a statutory place at the increased salary. There is no such law warranting that position.

In the draft copy of the legislative bill which I have in my hand reference is made to the one statute that fixes the salary of clerks—the Revised Statute, section 167. That prescribes the classes and employees. Class 4, class 3, 2, and 1 receive from $1,800 to $1,200; copyists, $900; messengers, $840; assistant messengers, $720; watchmen, $720; firemen, $720; telephone switchboard operators, $720; charwomen, $240.

We have had the question up in the legislative committee. Where the Navy and War Departments had some appropriations for temporary service, they increased the salaries of certain persons that previously had been employed on the statutory rolls from $2,000 to $2,750. We had the question before us in connection with the State Department in the use of their lump-sum appropriation. Because the head of the department under the lump-sum appropriation fixes the salaries, there is no authorization of law for providing an administration assistant at $3,000, because there is no such person employed now under authorization of law by that designation. You might just as well say that he could employ an assistant chief of the bureau at $10,000 or $20,000 if you follow the logic of the position of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. I have not taken any position yet.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is one of the most revolutionary doctrines that has ever been presented to the House since I have been a Member of it. I wish to go further than that, that even if this appropriation had been an appropriation for the employment of officials, that would not be authorization for the creation of designated employees by name as is provided in this Bureau of Markets. Here we have an instance of what this gross extravagance means. This bureau, which only five years ago had an appropriation of but $30,000, now has an appropriation of over $3,000,000. Here is this item which on the statutory rolls last year carried an appropriation of $387,000, and it is now attempted to raise it to $687,000—by the edict of whom? By the edict of a subordinate bureau chief receiving $4,500 a year—ambitious, it is true, to magnify and extend his functions, but where can the Chair or anyone cite an instance where there has been any authorization of law for an administrative assistant at $3,000? Where can you find any authorization of law for an executive clerk at $2,000, or a clerk at $1,980, or for telegraph operators at $1,400 or $1,600, or for a superintendent of telegraphs at $2,000? There would be no protection to the Treasury, there would be no protection to the Congress, if, under a lump-sum appropriation for activities in the field, an ambitious bureau chief could fix the salaries as he saw fit and then go before the committee and the committee would merely say, "Yes; we have employed that kind of a man in the service out of a lump-sum appropriation, and we will create the office at that price."

The rules of the House have been fixed for the protection of Congress and the protection of the Treasury, and that is why I am here protesting as strongly as I can against any such policy as would recognize the right of a bureau chief to create offices that have never been created by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman a question. Is not the trouble with the whole thing the fault of Congress in giving a lump-sum appropriation to be parceled out by the bureau chiefs or the heads of departments?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; the Congress has said that there shall be just so many places utilized in the bureau as are carried in the appropriation act. There is not a word of authorization in these subsequent appropriations or in the present act which warrants him in utilizing this money for departmental expenses, not a word, and you can not read into it any such thing.

Mr. ALMON. Has the bureau any authority to use this lump-sum appropriation to increase a man's salary whose salary is fixed by law?

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the position taken by the chairman of the committee it would seem so.

Mr. LEVER. But the chairman of the committee has not taken any position as yet.

Mr. STAFFORD. It would seem that the law which provides that the clerks of certain classes shall receive certain salaries can be set aside by the edict of a bureau chief who says, "I will pay this out of the lump-sum appropriation and will pay $2,000 or $3,000," where the salary was theretofore very much less, and then go to Congress the next year and say that the man was employed at that particular sum out of the lump-sum appropriation as warrant for the committee to fix the salary at that sum.

The CHAIRMAN. Is not the remedy this, when they come before Congress asking for lump sums to say that it will not be voted?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; the rules of the House say that you can not carry legislation on an appropriation bill. Where is there a line of legislation in all of the statutes that provides for the creation of an administrative assistant at $3,000, for executive clerks at any salary, or of telegraph operators at $1,600 or $1,800? That is the point at issue. There is no legislation, and they are attempting here to legislate where Congress has not heretofore acted. I am raising this point of order so as to protect Congress, so as to protect the House against the ambitious inroads of these executive officers who have no regard at all for the mandate of Congress or much consideration for the Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of such importance that I think a quorum should be present.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman will permit me to make my statement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I shall withhold the point for a few minutes. Will the gentleman permit this to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no; I have already explained to the gentleman why not.

Mr. HEFLIN. We can have a call of the House. We must finish this bill to-night.

Mr. LEVER. Let me make a statement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will withhold the point for a short time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin has become violently vigorous on this proposition. You would imagine that this is a new discovery, that it is an innovation of the rights of Congress. You would think that the earth was about to rise up and the skies were about to fall. Now, this very procedure has been going on in the House ever since I have been a Member of Congress, 17 years last December, and this is the first time that the gentleman from Wisconsin has raised his vigorous and eloquent voice in behalf of the protection of the American Congress against bureau chiefs.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. No; I can not yield now. Mr. Chairman, let me call attention to this fact. I am not speaking without knowledge but from the act of March 4, 1917, which reads as follows:

> And hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to make such appointments, promotions, and changes in salaries to be paid out of the lump funds of the several bureaus, divisions, and offices of the department as may be for the best interests of the service, and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to pay the salary of each employee from the roll of the bureau, independent division, or office in which the employee is working and no other. Provided, however, That details may be made therefrom to the office of the Secretary when necessary when the services of the person whom it is proposed to detail are not required by that office.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. About two years ago Congress fixed the salaries and limited the maximum salary that might be paid to men employed under lump-fund appropriations to $4,500. Moreover, the law requires that when the Secretary of Agriculture regards a position in the lump fund as being of necessity a permanent position that he shall transfer that person to the statutory salary.

The department has submitted its own proposition here in the Book of Estimates. There is no increase here, and there is no effort to cover up anything, either by the committee or by the Department of Agriculture. It is all set forth here in this Book of Estimates. This department assistant was carried on the lump sum at $3,000. He has been transferred, so the committee is informed, at exactly the same salary. There is no increase in it at all, and, as to the matter of whether or not the department has the power to employ such an individual, it seems to me that unless the department can employ persons of this character to do administrative work you had as well abolish the Department of Agriculture, and you had as well repeal the organic act which created it. I do not regard this proposition as being in the same class as that of an Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. I think that the ruling of the Chair the other day was eminently correct. There is not a bureau here, and we have passed practically all of them except this one, that does not have its administrative officer, and has had it since I have been a member of the committee—17 years. It seems strange that gentlemen are willing to cripple a great bureau which is undertaking to do for agriculture that which Congress and the Nation neglected until six or seven years ago. We have spent more than half a century teaching people to produce things, but have neglected the marketing feature.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The point of order is the gentleman is not discussing the point of order and he would not yield to me.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is entirely right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. The authority from which the gentleman read a few moments ago has been brought to the desk, and the Chair finds that the Secretary of Agriculture may fix salaries and make appointments and promotions and changes in salaries from the lump sum.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, where is the authority to transfer from the lump sum to the statutory roll?

Mr. LEVER. I think I can find it in a moment if the Chair will send back that book. There is an appropriation by Congress. I do not think anyone will deny that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that the gentleman is right, but the Chair wanted to find it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the Chair bear with me just a minute?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I listened attentively to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], and I have been amazed that he should say that this practice has prevailed with regard to other departments. I have been in this House 12 years, and have seen points of order made time and time again with regard to legislative, executive, and judicial bills, and other appropriation bills, where, when it was patent upon the face of the bill that there was an increase of salary over and above that provided for by law, the point of order was sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. LEVER. You do not want to misquote me. I did not say it prevailed with other departments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman contend this department is exclusive in the right to raise salaries contrary to law?

Mr. LEVER. I do not know about the other departments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am stating, since the gentleman is putting his 17 years in the House against that of other gentlemen in the House, that during my 12 years experience I have seen such points of order sustained with sustained regularity. Now, I would like——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to follow the gentleman's line of argument, which is interesting. If the Chair has got the right idea of the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], it is that, in the first place, the Secretary of Agriculture had a right to fix salaries out of that lump sum, which seems to be true. Now, I understand the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina, to say that this salary provided in this bill is not different from the salary fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture for this position out of the lump sum, and therefore no increase.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is merely a matter of fact that I want to bring to the Chair's attention.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair wants.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the appropriation bill of last year appropriation was made for one administrative assistant at $1,980. That is the law up to this point. This bill provides for one administrative assistant at $2,500. It is an increase of $520. The gentleman from South Carolina seems to contend that the Secretary of Agriculture or the chief of the bureau had the right to take that $520 from some other fund and appropriate it to the salary of this first administrative assistant, giving him, contrary to what we believe to be the law, an increase of salary of $520. Mr. Chairman, if it can be done in this instance by the Secretary of Agriculture he can suggest next year that the salary be increased $500 more and the next year $500 more until he brings the salary of that first administrative clerk up to $5,000.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is mistaken about that. As soon as this man gets on the statutory roll the Secretary ceases to exercise authority as to increase of his salary.

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, no.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think this is a most dangerous practice and that we ought to stop it now if we can do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair make an inquiry of the gentleman. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] just made an interesting statement. The Chair did not exactly understand. I want to know if it is true if the Agricultural bill last year carried a salary of $1,900 for this position and now they seek to increase it to $2,500?

Mr. LEVER. That is not the case.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the gentleman seems to understand.

Mr. LEVER. The statutory roll of the Bureau of Markets, and all these statutory rolls, carry a certain number of clerks this year. We increase the lump-sum fund item for that bureau, say, $100,000. They employ clerks, maybe an administrative officer, under that, and they fix his salary at $2,500. Then the law requires, if it is a clerical position or a position that is likely to be permanent, that within one year's time that man shall be transferred to the statutory roll. But that is not the case here. He is transferred at the salary that he is getting now. He is now on the lump-fund salary at $3,500. Now, it is proposed to transfer him to the statutory roll at the same salary.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the point of order, but I desire simply to say that the chairman has made it so clear that there can be no question about it that Congress has surrendered its power, its prerogative, of fixing salaries for the clerks in the departments. As he has cited, the Secretary has been given authority not only to fix the salaries in the first instance but subsequently to increase the salaries at his own will.

Further than that, we had always believed that when we had appropriated for a salary upon the statutory roll that was the salary to be paid to that particular employee, but we find that whenever a department finds it necessary to increase salaries they transfer the clerks from the statutory roll to the lump-sum roll, and then transfer them back again to the statutory roll at an increased salary. As stated, $4,500 is the limit. With that situation, it would seem, in making these lump-sum appropriations we should exercise some care and some judgment. When we appropriate lump sums here of $50,000 or $100,000, we place it in the hands of some Secretary or some bureau chief to fix the salary, not at $1,000 or $2,000, as may be suggested in the estimate, but for them to determine increases; and, as was pointed out here, the salary of one was increased $800 and another $500—people taken from the statutory roll and placed upon the lump-sum roll—and $500 even extracted from the emergency fund in one instance and $800 in another instance and paid to them as additional salary.

Now, gentlemen, I submit to you that Congress ought to exercise its right and exercise that prerogative and fix salaries.

Mr. LEVER. Here is the statement in the Book of Estimates about this administrative assistant:

One administrative assistant, by transfer from lump fund for administrative expenses, $3,000.

Now, this ought to be the highest evidence as to what the fact is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture approved October 1, 1918, that same administrative clerk is appropriated for at the rate of $2,500.

Mr. RUBEY. No; that administrative clerk is still carried in this bill.

Mr. LEVER. He is carried in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But raised by transfer to $3,000.

Mr. LEVER. No. I know the gentleman wants to be fair. The gentleman does not seem to get the situation. This administrative assistant at $3,000, who is to be transferred at the beginning of the next fiscal year, is not on the statutory roll at all. He is on the lump-sum roll and is drawing $3,000. He is an entirely different man from this other assistant administrative officer here at $2,500. He is an entirely different man from the man drawing $1,980, because they are both now on the statutory roll.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman if he does not provide in his present bill for only two assistant administrative officers?

Mr. LEVER. No; we provide for three; one administrative assistant at $3,000 in line 11, one administrative assistant at $2,500 in the same line, and then down in line 14 one administrative assistant at $1,980.

The CHAIRMAN. The attention of the Chair had not been called to the third one. But is not the gentleman in trouble by having created a new position?

Mr. LEVER. Not at all. It is not a new position, but a transfer. It is a new place on the statutory roll, that is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a new position that has not heretofore been recognized by Congress.

Mr. LEVER. It is nothing different to what the law requires to be done. It is a position now in the Agricultural Department. The only difficulty is that this man is now being carried on what we call the lump-sum salary roll. We are transferring him at the request of the Secretary under a direction of Congress passed here some years ago. I thought the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] had drawn this proposition, but I understand it is carried on the legislative bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not recall it; and I should like to have the gentleman present an authorization which allows the transfer of an official not heretofore created by Congress, who was employed out of a lump-sum appropriation by a bureau chief, to the statutory roll.

Mr. LEVER. I am satisfied I could do it if I had the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Since there seems to be a good deal of difficulty in getting at the facts, the Chair will suggest to the gentleman that he let the matter be passed over until the end of the bill, when the Chair will look the matter up.

Mr. LEVER. The Chair desires to pass this over temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. Until the close of the bill. If there be no objection, it will be passed for the present.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I have unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a memorial protesting against the Bureau of Markets?

Mr. LEVER. I will be glad to have the gentleman do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the memorial referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The memorial is as follows:

MEMORIAL TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

JANUARY 27, 1919.

We, the board of trustees of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange, most respectfully submit that the Congress of the United States should determine the scope of the work which the Bureau of Markets shall continue to perform. It is becoming increasingly evident that its activities must be clearly defined and that it shall not be allowed to continue its work to the disturbance of business.

Some of its work is conceded to be useful. Its compilation of receipts of various commodities and its report of the movement of storage stocks are commendable. At the same time this work, to a more limited extent, has always been and still is being done by private agencies, to the perfect satisfaction of business men, giving them all the information they require and at no expense to the taxpayer.

The statement of "receipts by States," and the statement of "shipments originating at Chicago," in our estimation, have no value either statistical or practical, and the time consumed in compiling them is wasted.

The statement of supplies of fresh butter and eggs "on the market" is also valueless, because it includes the stocks of the "chain" stores which retail their goods and whose stocks are not available on the wholesale market.

In announcing its intention to appoint inspectors in the various markets to determine quality and settle disputes between shipper and receiver, and between seller and buyer, it is infringing upon the work of the various trade exchanges and will absorb the inspection fees properly belonging to them.

The bureau has made the experiment of gathering quotations for butter, and it is a failure so far as its utility to anybody is concerned. Wholesale butter merchants are obliged to keep a daily record of their transactions to be given to a representative of the bureau who makes the quotations from the report of the sales given him. Assuming that the transactions reported are correct, so far as prices are concerned, the "score" of the butter sold is always open to question. Any number of perfectly honest and capable butter men may not agree that a certain shipment of butter is "92 score." It may be "91 score" in the estimation of some or "93 score" in the estimation of others; nevertheless, if the seller reports it as "92 score," that is the way it must be quoted, as under the rules of the bureau the seller determines the score. The bureau's ignorance of the butter business is manifested by the rules under which its quotations of butter are compiled.

It is stated that this system of reporting is to be extended to cheese and perhaps to some other commodities, thus giving merchants more useless and unnecessary trouble and expense in making out slips of sales for the information of bureau representatives.

We maintain that the quotations put out by the Bureau of Markets are published too late to be of any service to butter merchants in the big cities. It is necessary for said merchants to have an established trading basis by about 11 o'clock in the morning, and sales on the street and on the various exchanges establish that basis at or before that time every day. The report of the Bureau of Markets is not available until the next morning and is then practically valueless.

The Bureau of Markets every morning gathers the sales of fruits and vegetables at the various railroad depots and at other receiving points and compiles quotations from them, which it publishes. This work is useless and unnecessary as private agencies publish a much fuller and more intelligent market report. Produce men use the report of the private agencies and send it to their shippers for their information and pay for it, in spite of the fact that the service of the Bureau of Markets is free. Why should the taxpayer pay for this useless work?

Like all Government publications, the circulars put out by the Bureau of Markets enjoy the franking privilege through the mails. They are sent out as first-class matter, without postage, in the same category with important business mail. Thousands of these circulars are sent every day to people who do not want them, and they find their way into somebody's waste-paper basket.

The Bureau of Markets is maintained at an expense entirely out of proportion to its utility. It does very little useful work that is not done by private agencies at no expense to the people at large. It does not aid in the distribution of produce; it does not increase exports; it does not keep down the cost of living; it does not help to make any money for anybody, but if allowed to go on in its own way it is likely to become a nuisance which the business man should not tolerate.

Congress should not be guided entirely by the recommendations of the Department of Agriculture as to the Bureau of Markets. It should discover a way to independently investigate conditions in the various large distributing markets and find out just how much of its work ought to be continued, then define the scope of its activities and limit appropriations to its economical conduct. The business man is tired of "bureau" regulation. He had too much of it during the necessary regulations of the Food Administrattion, to which he patriotically submitted. He does not want to be bothered with a bureau that gives him only a lot of additional and useless work and expense. Now that the war is over he wants to be let alone.

Respectfully submitted this 27th day of January, 1919.

[SEAL.] JOHN S. MORRIS, President.
SAML. S. DANIELS, Secretary.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Last year there was carried in the agricultural act an item which in the aggregate amounted to something over $42,000 for the purpose of a city market-news service or something of that nature. That item, as I understand it, has been completely eliminated by the Committee on Agriculture in making up this year's bill. I should like to ask the gentleman in what paragraph it was carried last year and in what paragraph would it be carried if it came into this year's bill.

Mr. LEVER. That item has never been carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill. The work has been done under the food-production division, and the department recommended that it be transferred to the regular appropriation bill. The item does not appear anywhere in this bill. The committee, after a very thorough discussion, concluded to drop it, refusing the estimate on the ground that it was more or less of a local rather than a national service. We did not think it of any great value.

Mr. ROGERS. May I ask the gentleman whether, provided the committee should see fit to continue the activity, this particular paragraph just read would be the appropriate place for it?

Mr. LEVER. No; I suggest to the gentleman that he offer it as a separate paragraph anywhere under this bureau.

Mr. ROGERS. It seemed to me when I heard the language read that this item would, if increased $40,000, be broad enough to cover the purpose which was included by the committee for the current year.

Mr. LEVER. Which item?

Mr. ROGERS. Lines 4 to 11, page 80.

Mr. LEVER. That might be true.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it not a fact also that if this was offered as a separate paragraph it would be subject to a point of order?

Mr. LEVER. I do not think so. If the gentleman will examine the Book of Estimates he can find the exact language.

Mr. ROGERS. I have the exact language and my colleague has the language ready to offer.

Mr. LEVER. I would rather the gentleman offer it as a separate paragraph, because it carries $42,000 and Congress is anxious to segregate these items.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman will assure me that it is not subject to a point of order——

Mr. LEVER. I do not think that it is subject to a point of order, but I am not a parliamentarian.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Massachusetts is fully aware that that does not bind other Members of the House against making a point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my pro forma amendment and offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ROGERS: Page 80, line 11, strike out "$317,520" and insert "$360,400."

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, when Mr. Braud, of the Bureau of Markets, was before the Committee on Agriculture early this month he called attention at length of the Committee on Agriculture to the necessity, as he viewed it, for the retention of this item. On page 1920 of the hearings on the Bureau of Markets, Mr. Brand spoke as follows:

This particular item, 124, is what we call our local market-reporting service. The proposition involves an increase in statutory and lump of $50,000, $42,880 of which is lump and $7,120 statutory. I have asked Mr. Branch, who has developed this work from its very inception, to present the matter to the committee.

Then for a dozen pages he developed the need of this service. The Committee on Agriculture, as far as I can understand from the hearings and from conversation with members, decided to eliminate this item altogether on the ground that it involved a duplication in part at least, and, as the chairman of the committee just stated, there is no provision for retaining the work. My opinion is that the work is extremely valuable in certain sections of the country. These sections in general are urban and suburban sections in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, northern Illinois, regions around Philadelphia, and regions around New York City, and some other congested centers of the same kind.

I suggest to the committee that the direct contact between the dwellers of these communities and the dwellers of the largest portions of the United States, on the one hand, and the Department of Agriculture, on the other hand, are extremely limited, and that it is a great pity, provided the work is of real utility to these sections of the country, to eliminate it after only one year of trial. The commissioner of agriculture of the State of Massachusetts, under date of January 28, addressed to Mr. LEVER, chairman of the committee, a letter, which I have laid before Mr. LEVER, and by his authority I desire to read it to the committee at this time.

BOSTON, January 28, 1919.

Hon. A. F. LEVER,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LEVER: I have heard that the Committee on Agriculture has cut the appropriation for city market news reporting service from $50,000 to $10,000—

Mr. Wheeler is misinformed in that respect, because it was cut from $50,000 to nothing—and that with this smaller appropriation it will be practically impossible to continue this work—

Of course, the elimination of the appropriation means the elimination of the work—

It strikes me that this has been a very satisfactory piece of work, and that the farmers of the country, particularly those near the cities, who have to do with the markets daily, have got to depend upon this service very materially, and that its discontinuance would be a severe blow to their work. I trust that there may be found some way in which this appropriation may be put back on the agricultural appropriation bill, so that we may have the continuation of this service.

I also understand that the news service which has to do with the wholesalers, retailers, and jobbers is to be continued. If this is so, I would like to ask why there has been this discrimination against the farmer, who absolutely needs this market news service in order to know the market conditions in the several cities to which he has to ship his products.

Very sincerely, WILFRED WHEELER, Commissioner.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the officials of the Bureau of Markets and branches that is designated as special, submitted to the Committee on Agriculture several cases where distinct and cordial commendations of this work has come from large cities of the United States. Those are quoted on page 110 to page 112 of the hearings. They include citations from officials as well as from private citizens from Chicago, Boston, Cleveland, Denver, Springfield, Mass., and Providence, R. I. I do not wish to detain the committee by referring to them in detail, but it seems to me they are strong indorsements, and establish pretty conclusively that there is a real need for the continuance of this service. The amendment which I have offered simply increases——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this item which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] proposes to increase has no relation whatever to the work that he has been telling about. This item provides for "acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm and nonmanufactured food products, the purchase of farm supplies, and so forth." The service the gentleman is talking about, and for which he wishes to provide money, was a strictly local service, carried on in the immediate vicinity of some of the large cities of the country during the war, when it was very desirable and necessary that no foodstuff should be wasted, and that there should be the best conditions of marketing during that emergency. And I wish to emphasize to the House that it is strictly a local matter. The marketing is by gardeners near to the cities and by growers of small fruits in the immediate vicinity of large cities. It has no relation to matters over which the Federal Government can properly exercise control. The Federal Government has no more right to interfere with or take part in that work or assist or advise in it than the Federal Government has to go out and supply the table or furnish the clothing of individuals throughout the country. It is strictly a local matter; it is an activity in which our Government should not engage, except possibly during time of emergency, as was the case during the late war.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I can not; I have only a few minutes. It is not a Federal function. I hope the committee will pay attention to the tendency of some of these bureaus to extend their activities, to take up lines of work that they should let alone. They like to extend their activities; they like to enlarge their bureaus; they like to have more money to spend; they like to employ more agents and employees of one kind and another. During the war emergency the extension of some of their work was necessary in order to increase the food supply and to see that it was not wasted—to help the people in these respects.

There is now tremendous effort in this Department of Agriculture, as similar effort is being made in other departments, to continue those emergency activities and to make them permanent. Evidently the chiefs of bureaus do not like to see money taken away from them. They would like to keep their divisions and bureaus large, and those who are on the pay roll do not like to have their meal tickets withheld; they do not like to be separated from the pay roll. So there has been an unusual effort to continue work begun and very properly begun and carried on under these war emergency appropriations, and that work has been extended, as I say, to many activities that are strictly local, with which the Government of the United States, as a general proposition, has nothing to do. This is particularly true as to the activities around Boston and around the city of New York and around Cleveland and around Chicago. The business carried on is always entirely between the gardeners, the raisers of perishable fruits in the immediate vicinity of the market and the commission merchants and dealers in those cities. Some of these gentlemen seem to think it would be advisable and entirely proper for a Federal agent to go in and interfere with and regulate affairs of that kind, to influence the purchase and sale of these food products. But what does this lead to? If there is a dispute between the gardener or the orchardist near a city and the dealer in the city to whom he has shipped his goods as to the quality of the goods when they reach the market, they ask that a Federal inspector shall come and inspect the goods and certify as to their condition when they reached the market. That is altogether outside of the proper Federal activities, and where there is such a gross violation of the principle that should always prevail, that this local work should not be done by the Government, this committee and the House ought not to approve such a suggestion as is involved in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this has any place on this item.

Mr. ROGERS. It is in order on the item, and the chairman says it properly belongs here if anywhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. ROGERS) there were—ayes 7, noes 18.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts there is another opportunity here to offer his proposition as a separate paragraph, and it is found in the Book of Estimates, one from the last.

Mr. DALLINGER. I have the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. And I trust he will not make the point of no quorum, because we have to pass this bill to-night, and I hate to bring gentlemen back.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting and distributing, by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, and market prices of grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, $50,000.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 16, after the figures "$50,000," insert:
"For furnishing to producers, dealers, newspapers, and consumers accurate information regarding supplies of fruits, vegetables, dairy and poultry products, meats, fish, and other food products received on farmers', municipal, and other city markets and prices for which such products are sold; and information regarding such products when in abundance or oversupply, and other related matters, $42,880."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment may be modified so as to come on page 80, line 15, after "$250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 15, after the figures "$250,000," insert:
"For furnishing to producers, dealers, newspapers, and consumers accurate information regarding supplies of fruits, vegetables, dairy and poultry products, meats, fish, and other food products received on farmers', municipal, and other city markets and prices for which such products are sold; and information regarding such products when in abundance or oversupply, and other related matters, $42,880."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. LEVER. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts offers it as a new paragraph?

Mr. DALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in eight minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment embodies the language found on page 243 of the estimates of appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the next fiscal year. This amount is what the Secretary of Agriculture recommends for the purposes enumerated in the amendment. Now, I want to appeal to the members of this committee on both sides of the House, because it is not a partisan question in any way, shape, or manner, for fair play to the agricultural interests in the vicinity of our large cities.

There are many men here in the House who represent suburban districts, and they have constituents vitally interested in intensive agriculture. So far as the value of farm products is concerned, the small but congested district which I represent in Massachusetts is among the leading districts in the country, because it contains a very large number of people engaged in market gardening—raising vegetables and fruit for a market of 2,000,000 people. Now, this little item of $42,000 which the Secretary of Agriculture has recommended and which the Committee on Agriculture has thrown out is practically the only item in this part of the bill, at least, directly benefiting the millions of people living in our large cities—the only direct and special benefit they get out of the Agricultural appropriation bill. Mr. Chairman, you have placed the chief burden of national taxation upon these great centers of population, and when the Secretary of Agriculture comes before you and asks for a little item of $42,000 to benefit the market gardeners and the consuming public living in the vicinity of our large cities, you propose to deny his request.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire?

Mr. DALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. WASON. Does not the population you speak of receive benefit by reason of inspected meat that is grown in the West and inspected in the central yards and shipped there for consumption?

Mr. DALLINGER. Of course, the gentleman from New Hampshire is correct. Every item in this bill is for the benefit either of the people of the entire country or of the people of a particular region; but this item of which I speak is the only one in the Bureau of Markets in which the market gardeners and the people they serve are particularly interested. It is a service which the Agricultural Department has been doing for them, and doing for them satisfactorily, and which they are asking to have continued. Now, it is a pretty small matter when we, as their representatives, ask you to keep this item in, not to comply with our request. I trust the committee will adopt this amendment and allow this important work to be carried on as in former years.

Mr. BAER. You want to put this in in order to give prices to the people in the city to protect them against the profiteers?

Mr. DALLINGER. That is one reason. Consumers and producers are both entitled to receive this information.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I do not care to debate the matter, inasmuch as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] covered the subject so fully a while ago.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. I would like to be heard on that, Mr. Chairman, not because I desire the item to remain in the bill, but I think it affects practically every other item in the bill. Will the Chair indulge me for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do that. The Chair thought the point of order was conceded.

Mr. LEVER. No. This item reads:

For furnishing to producers, dealers, newspapers, and consumers accurate information regarding supplies of fruits, vegetables, dairy and poultry products, meats, fish, and other food products received in farmers', municipal, and other city markets, and prices for which said products are sold; information regarding such products when in abundance or oversupply, and other related matters.

Mr. Chairman, when the first item was inserted in the Agricultural appropriation bill for the estimates of the Bureau of Markets the same question arose. It was argued then by those of us in charge of the bill that the organic act creating the Department of Agriculture provides for two fundamental things: First, the collection of information relating to agriculture; second, the dissemination of that information by different means which might be thought to be wise. Now, this item is nothing more nor less than the carrying out of those important features. We are gathering information relating to the supply and prices, and so forth, at these various places and disseminating that information to those who should have the information. So it seems to me it is clearly in order under the organic act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had his mind concentrated on another matter, and ruled perfunctorily. Has the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] anything to offer?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have not the organic act before me, but the organic act does not authorize the Bureau of Markets to perform this character of work in the extensive manner which is provided in this amendment.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit, I will call the Chair's attention to the organic act, which will be found on the very first page of the book which he has in his hand.

The CHAIRMAN. It reads as follows:

There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of the word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

It seems to be rather general and broad.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, that is general, but it ought to be considered in the light of knowledge as to the kind of Government we are trying to carry on in this country and what our institutions are. The Federal Government has its duties to perform; the officials of the Federal Government have authority which they can exercise. There are certain obligations resting on the people of the States themselves. There are certain rights the people of the States have, and among them is to take care of matters that are strictly local, and the Federal Government has no right to interfere with matters that are local, and entirely so, in their nature. And these activities are entirely local. There is a tendency somewhere—I would not apply this remark at all to this work or the gentlemen who are urging it—to ask the Federal Government to do things the like of which the people of the country ought to be ashamed to ask the Government to do—things that they ought to do themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call attention to the fact that this amendment is general and applies to work all over the United States. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair will repeat that he did not give the matter anything like careful consideration a few moments ago for the reason he thought the point of order had been conceded. But after having his attention called to the matter, he thinks that the point of order is not well taken, and he overrules the point of order.

All debate has been exhausted on the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that was given very careful consideration by the committee. Upon hearing the representative of the bureau it was decided by the committee that the money could be used to better advantage otherwise. I will read from the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. Have you this service here in Washington?
Mr. BRANCH. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you use the rural telephone in getting these prices out to the farmers around here?
Mr. BRANCH. No; we do not.
The CHAIRMAN. Would that be possible?
Mr. BRANCH. Yes; if the way we handle it did not serve them adequately. For those who come into the market on a certain morning the bulletin is there for them when they arrive and before they start selling; and those who do not come in are reached the same morning by mail. So if they come in the following morning they have read it, consequently, I think the distribution is pretty well covered in that way.

Now, I submit to you that that sort of information can be of no value to any particular one, and as I stated, after the committee gave it careful consideration it thought that this was one of the items that might be eliminated from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. DALLINGER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote on this question is—ayes 12, noes 16; so the amendment is rejected.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Forty-five Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, a call of the House will be taken automatically.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 15108, found itself without a quorum, whereupon he caused the roll to be called, when 152 Members, a quorum of the Committee of the Whole, answered to their names, and he presented the names of the absentees to be printed in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present. The committee will resume its session.

Accordingly the committee resumed its session, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I understood that the vote had been taken on that and that it was defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is entitled to another vote. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. DALLINGER) there were—ayes 28, noes 55.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating, demonstrating, and promoting the use of standards for the different grades, qualities, and conditions of cotton, and for investigating the ginning, grading, stapling, baling, marking, compressing, and tare of cotton, $45,920: Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $26,960 may be used for testing the waste, tensile strength, and bleaching qualities of the different grades and classes of cotton in order to determine their spinning value and for demonstrating the results of such tests.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have an amendment that I want to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama may be read for information. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HEFLIN: Page 82, line 14, after the figures "$45,920," insert:

"Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall hereafter require the cotton exchanges of the United States to tender and deliver on contracts only such grades of cotton as are specifically named in the nine standard grades adopted by the Congress of the United States."

Mr. LEVER. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was only read for information.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, about eight years ago the Congress passed an act, and I had a part in its passage, naming nine grades of cotton and standardized the grades of cotton to be tendered on the exchanges of the United States. The Bureau of Markets has widened out these grades. It has made technical shades and variations of grades, and now has 21 or 22 of them. If a man buys cotton on a contract on the New York exchange now, he does not know what he is going to get. If they tender him a grade and he says "That is not within the nine grades standardized by Congress," then they say, "Oh, we have made variations of those grades," and they claim the right in the Department of Agriculture to do that. I submit to gentlemen in this House that it is unfair to the producer and unfair to the spinner to permit this addition to the number of grades. I hold that these 21 grades help nobody but the gambling speculator upon the exchange; and I say to you gentlemen that the nine grades standardized by Congress cover every spinnable grade of cotton that we produce in the United States, and if we are in favor of honest dealing on the exchanges we ought to require these men to tender upon contracts one of these nine grades and no other, because they cover every grade of cotton grown in the United States. I do not think that these exchanges ought to be permitted to tender stuff on a legalized exchange that does not represent 10 per cent of American cotton and that which the spinner does not want; and I say to my friends from the grain-growing section that if under this law the department has the right to spread out these grades and enlarge the number, as it has done, it will do the same for you upon your wheat and corn, and if ever they spread out your wheat and corn grades the gamblers will fleece you just as they now fleece the cotton producers. I am in favor of requiring honest dealing on these exchanges, and if this law permits this kind of grading to be done it is detrimental to the producer, it is hurtful to the spinner, it is helpful only to the gambler in cotton. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted at this time, the Secretary of Agriculture will have to issue an order saying to the exchanges, "You must comply with the act establishing the nine standardized grades of cotton." When we passed the law I thought—and others here from the cotton belt thought—that none but the nine grades could be used. That was your purpose. It was the purpose of the Senate; it was the purpose of everybody who knew anything about it, and this power that they now claim to have, to spread out these grades covering more than 20 of them, must be taken from them, and this provision that I offer here will do that thing. [Applause.] I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not make the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] that has made the point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I trust the gentleman from South Carolina will not make the point of order against this proposition, because I want to say that under the present system they are robbing the cotton producers of the South of millions of dollars every day. The demand for American cotton is 6,000,000 bales more than the American supply, and yet they are beating down the price by speculation and by grades from 21 to 22, and are not required to deliver standard grades that Congress has provided.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Gentlemen, the other day spot cotton at Charleston, S. C., was 30 cents and the future price 24 cents on the exchange in New York—thirty dollars difference in the bale. Heretofore under honest dealing on the exchanges the future market in New York would have been 31 cents and the spot market 30, the one cent accounted for by the freight charges to get the cotton from Charleston to New York. Whenever the spot market is higher than the future market it is wildcat gambling pure and simple. [Applause.] If they can do that with cotton, gentlemen, it will not be long before they can do it with grain.

I had a spinner to tell me the other day that he could not get his cotton supply through the exchange. The producer is being robbed by the present operation of the exchange. All I want is to have the price be exactly what the law of supply and demand justifies. That is what I am asking for, and I trust that no gentleman will make a point of order against this meritorious and emergency measure. Let the law of supply and demand operate, and if this gambling is to go on do not for God's sake let it go on by the sanction of Congress. [Applause.] You have an opportunity here and now to stop it. You can by the adoption of my amendment stop it now and require these men to tender standard grades and not 21 and 22 grades that they are using over there without authority of law.

I repeat again that when I voted for this law I never dreamed that they had the power under it, and I do not think now they have, and if they have I want to take it away from them as soon as it is possible. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the amendment has been offered.

Mr. HEFLIN. I offered the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is correct, a point of order was pending.

Mr. HEFLIN. I offer it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment that it is new legislation.

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not make the point. I would like for the House to vote on it.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have had the subject up before the House, and the House has passed on it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Not exactly this case; this has never been voted upon.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the difficulty; we have had the general subject up.

Mr. HAYES. This requires expert knowledge, and the gentleman asks the House to vote on something that it knows nothing about.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Chair is now ready to pass upon the point of order which was reserved to the item on page 78.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 78.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears no objection. The Chair will now pass on the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] made a point of order against one item of the bill, to wit, "one administrative assistant, $3,000," on the ground that it was an increase of salary. The gentleman from South Carolina, in charge of the bill, made a statement—which, of course, is accepted as true—that that was a transfer from the lump-sum roll, without any increase in pay to this particular individual, to the statutory roll. The gentleman from Wisconsin argued with considerable force and a great deal of evident sincerity that a transfer could not be made from a lump-sum to a statutory roll in the face of a point of order. It is a novel proposition to the Chair, because in the experience of the present occupant of the chair he does not recollect that such a point of order was ever raised before.

It was a novel proposition to the Chair, because in all his experience here he has known this kind of transfers to be made repeatedly, but he does not recall that ever before was a point of order raised against it. The Chair has taken some time in looking the matter up. The vital point of the whole proposition is whether a transfer can be made from the lump-sum roll to the statutory roll without change of salary. In the act of March 4, 1913, Thirty-seventh Statutes at Large, page 739, section 7 provides—

> That no part of any money contained herein or hereafter appropriated in lump sums shall be available for personal services at a rate of compensation in excess of that paid for the same or similar services during the preceding fiscal year, nor shall any person employed at a specific salary be hereafter transferred and hereafter paid from a lump-sum appropriation at the rate of compensation greater than such specific salary, and the heads of the departments shall cause this provision to be enforced.

That is all that it is necessary to read. The Chair finds from that an authority to transfer from the so-called statutory salary roll an employee to the lump-sum roll, provided that the salary paid under the lump sum shall not be greater than that he was receiving under the statutory roll.

There is existing law providing for the head of a department to employ, to promote, and to fix salaries of clerks to be paid out of a lump-sum appropriation. The Chair confesses very frankly that the question of a proper holding on this proposition is not free from doubt; but here is authority to transfer from a specified salary to a lump-sum roll, and the Chair is going to hold that there is an implied authority, to say the least, to transfer back from the lump-sum roll to the specified-salary roll, provided the salary is not increased, and that that can be done even in the face of a point of order. The fact being taken as true as outlined, and no doubt it is, that this transfer was made from the lump-sum roll to what we know as the statutory roll at the same figure he was drawing under the lump sum, the Chair feels impelled to overrule the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Then it will be considered that the statutory roll will be passed as we fixed it.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the position of the Chairman on the other points of order that I have made on other items—for instance, one superintendent of telegraphs, $2,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had really overlooked the fact that a point of order had been made against this item.

Mr. LEVER. I call the Chair's attention to the fact that all of the other propositions involved in the gentleman's point of order are exactly in the same category. They are all transfers.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no provision in the statutory roll at present for any such position as superintendent of telegraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say that he is decidedly of the opinion that no new statutory position can be created by these transfers.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think the Chair is correct upon that proposition. The organic act permits the Secretary of Agriculture to employ "other persons." I think that is the language of this act, section 523, in the volume before the Chair. These people have been employed out of a lump sum at a salary of $1,400, and now they are being transferred. I do not think it is necessary to have any specific authority creating these positions on the statutory roll. I do not know myself of any specific authority for the employment of an assistant administrative officer, and yet the Chair has just held that that is in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the Chair to hold that if a position is estabilshed you can transfer it onto the statutory roll at the same salary.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the intention of the Chair to be so understood.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did I understand the Chair to hold that the salary would have to be the same as that which was carried on the statutory roll?

The CHAIRMAN. If a transfer from the statutory roll to the lump sum is made it can not be made at a salary greater than that received under the statutory roll, and if a transfer is made from the lump sum back—as the Chair understands the facts are in this case—to the statutory roll, it must be made at a salary not larger than he was receiving under the lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the Chair's ruling, in effect, is that if the head of a bureau plays the game of ping-pong and takes a man off the statutory roll at $2,500, for illustration, an administrative assistant, and puts him on the lump-sum roll and increases the salary to $3,000, then he can transfer him back to the statutory roll at $3,000 and create a new position at a higher salary?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman does not understand the Chair at all upon the proposition. If this party was upon the statutory roll at $2,500 and then transferred to the lump-sum roll, he would have to be transferred at a salary of not over $2,500 under the lump sum.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not believe there is any testimony here that this gentleman, chief of this bureau, deliberately took him off the statutory roll, receiving $2,500, and placed him on the lump-sum roll at $3,000, and put him back on the statutory roll at $3,000.

Mr. LEVER. There is no such testimony and no such fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not intimate that there was, but just read the provisions of the law, which was very plain, that if he was only drawing $2,500 on the statutory roll he can not be transferred at over $2,500 under the lump-sum appropriation. That is very plain. The Chair recognizes, and may as well say it, speaking as a Member of the House now, always being opposed to this lump-sum appropriation business, he realizes that great abuses may grow up under such practices. If a man is on the roll and transferred to the lump-sum appropriation, the salary can not be increased above that he was receiving in the first place, but if he was never in the service the law gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority to make appointments, promotions, and changes in salary to be paid out of the lump sum of the several bureaus, divisions, and so forth. He has authority to employ a man and fix the salary. Now, the Chair has held that he thinks he may transfer him back to the statutory roll, providing he does not increase the salary. It is up to the House to determine whether they would reduce that salary or not. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does a Member of the House lose the right to make a point of order that arises in connection with the Chair's decision? I think under the Chair's ruling a point of order would now lie against the words "one administrative assistant," because there is a clear case of an increase of salary for that particular officer.

The CHAIRMAN. It is clearly too late to make that point of order; the gentleman should have reserved that point of order at the proper time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, of course, nor any other gentleman could foresee what the decision of the Chair would be.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inform the Chair a point of order was not only made against this one administrative assistant, $3,000, but half a dozen other positions.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but not the point of order the gentleman is now seeking to raise. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina in reference to the point of order now made by the gentleman from Wisconsin: Does the gentleman concede that this is a new position created?

Mr. LEVER. Which position?

Mr. STAFFORD. Superintendent of telegraph, $2,000.

Mr. LEVER. All of these telegraph operators are now in the Government service. They are in exactly the same position as the one administrative assistant upon which the Chair passed. They are drawing this salary from the lump-fund appropriation. They are now being transferred to the statutory roll, but they are not new places. It is a new place on the statutory roll, but not in the service.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of such consequence that I think the Members of the House ought to have a chance to consider it before we proceed further on this bill, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [The Chair proceeded to count.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman to withdraw that point of order and let us proceed to business.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late now. [After counting.] Sixty gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, no. Call the roll.

Mr. WASON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided there is no quorum present, and no business can be transacted.

Mr. WASON. A parliamentary inquiry can be made, can it not?

The CHAIRMAN. It can not when the roll is being called.

Mr. WASON. I addressed the Chair before the roll call was ordered.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15018) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and having found itself without a quorum, he had directed that the roll be called, whereupon 134 Members responded to their names, and he submitted a list of absentees for printing in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] specify the provisions against which he makes points of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I made points of order against "1 administrative assistant, $3,000"; "2 executive clerks," lines 12 and 13, "at $2,000 each"; "1 clerk, $2,000"; "1 executive assistant, $1,980." I also made a point of order against "1 superintendent of telegraph, $2,000." Will the Chair permit me to say just one word?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] directed the attention of the Chair to the authorization of the Secretary of Agriculture to fix the salaries out of lump-sum appropriations. I wish to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that that was simply a current appropriation law, and that with the lapse of that appropriation that authority ceased absolutely. That has been the current of the decisions of the Chair right along. There has been no authority called to the attention of the Chair authorizing the transfer of clerks or officials employed from the lump-sum roll back to the statutory roll.

These positions that I am making points of order against are, some of them, new positions which have not heretofore been created.

I wish to direct the Chair's attention to a provision carried in one of the former Agricultural appropriation acts which legalized all the positions that were then carried in that act. Inferentially, positions that were not carried in that act were not provided for by law, and when a committee attempts to bring in positions that have not heretofore been provided for by law, I think it is a safe conclusion that they are positions that are not authorized by law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. As to that provision that was passed which legalized all those that are now employed, which makes them statutory positions, does not that mean that all those who were on the statutory roll at the time of that enactment were those that were on the lump-sum roll, because many of them on the lump-sum roll were but temporary?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the very point. The gentleman from Michigan emphasizes the very position that I am taking on this matter. The provision referred to is "That hereafter any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture whose rate of compensation is specified herein shall receive compensation at the rate so specified." The purpose of that provision, which is similar in its purport to a provision carried on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, was to legalize the positions as carried in the then existing act.

Now, as brought out very succinctly by the gentleman from Michigan, the intent was to legalize the positions on the statutory roll, and when they were legalized they became fixed as the positions that were created for that department. The provision that the gentleman from South Carolina pointed out, that as to a lump-sum appropriation, which expires with the year, the Secretary of Agriculture may fix the salaries of the respective positions under that appropriation; of course that is merely temporary and falls with the appropriation. The Chair can not hold that it authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to create for all time a statutory provision. This provision here shows the intention of Congress to legalize those positions, those positions that were existing at that date then established, and no other positions have been established. I cite Thirty-seventh Statutes at Large, in the appropriation act for 1914. The burden is upon the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LEVER. It is not a burden at all. It is a pleasure to relieve myself of the burden.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a burden upon the committee to show that these positions have been authorized.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the point the gentleman from Wisconsin brings out, I wrote the language that he has read. I suggested it to meet a situation such as we have to-night, when Members, forgetting the larger things, think about the smaller things. But that does not in the least affect this situation. That affected the clerks and employees of the Department of Agriculture, who were then in the service, and it was designed to do that very thing. The point of order which the gentleman has made has already been decided by the Chair, because every one of the propositions here involved is identical with that upon which the Chair has already ruled.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit there? I wish to call attention to the fact that there is no present position known as executive clerk, nor is there any provision for an executive assistant, nor is there any provision for a superintendent of telegraphs.

Mr. LEVER. In answer to that I will say that up to probably last year there was no provision in this bill for an administrative assistant; and yet that place is lawfully created under the lump-sum appropriation, and has been transferred here. The Chair has held, very properly, in my judgment, that the point of order as to the executive assistant is not good, that the point of order as to this particular individual is not good, and it can not be good as to the other individuals against whom points of order have been made, because they are in exactly the same category.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it can not be right to hold that the Secretary of Agriculture or the head of a bureau can create a new office, and as many new offices as he pleases each year, by having the officials and clerks that he appoints put under the lump sum; that he can not, by transferring them to the statutory roll, make them statutory and permanent positions. If that ruling is to prevail, the Congress might as well acknowledge its inability in any manner or to any extent whatever to influence the number of positions that can be created in this department, and that the Congress has surrendered all authority and given up all attempt at exercising authority over the amounts of salaries to be paid to the clerks and officials employed by the Secretary of Agriculture. That is the inevitable conclusion that we reach and the position that we must take as a result of the Chairman's ruling holding these positions in order simply because the Secretary of Agriculture has employed some new man, created a new office, and after a time transferred him to the statutory roll with such salary as he may be pleased to pay if it does not exceed the limit provided by law, $4,500 a year.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. LEVER. I think, in fairness, it ought to be said that if there is any abuse on this proposition at all it is not the fault of the executive department of the Government. It is the fault of Congress, and we might as well take the blame and not try to shift it. If we do not desire one assistant executive officer, or if we do not desire five telephone operators, we can strike them out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. In just one minute.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was going to make that motion, but the Chair declared that it would not be in order at this time.

Mr. LEVER. If we do not desire to increase the appropriation in a lump fund of $100,000, we can reduce it. The executive officer does not pass upon it, and I think we ought to be fair to these men. It is the fault of Congress and not of the executive.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If Congress provides a lump sum of $100,000 in the proper department, and turns it over to that department, there is still no limit to the manner in which that $100,000 lump sum can be used. The Secretary can pay any salary he pleases, discharge all the low-priced men, and pay the money entirely to high-priced men. And I want to point out to the Chair that the practice has prevailed to some extent in the department of transferring men from the lump-sum fund to the statutory roll at high salaries, and later taking those same men and transferring them back to the lump sum and paying them higher salaries than they had received either under the lump sum before or on the statutory roll, and then transferring them back to the statutory roll at the original salary that was paid under the statutory roll. Clearly, it seems to me a violation of law and an abuse of discretion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina, will the Chair recognize me to make a motion to reduce the figures $3,000 to $2,500 where it applies to the administrative clerk and which shows an evident increased salary?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair could only do that by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's motion would be in order as soon as the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have passed over the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. But we passed it with the right of all Members to offer amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is not entirely clear as to how he ought to rule on this proposition. He stated a while ago that it is a somewhat new proposition; but the Chair recognizes this fact, that the Congress has given to the Secretary of Agriculture the right to make appointments and promotions, change of salaries, and so forth, and to pay these employees out of a lump sum. The Chair has no doubt that abuses may have, in all probability, grown up under it. The Chair thinks it is bad practice to make appropriations in that way, but that makes no difference in this ruling. The law recognizes the right to take a man from the statutory roll, pay him out of a lump-sum appropriation, with certain limitations, to wit, that it must not be at a greater salary than he received on the statutory roll. It seems to the Chair that if they can transfer to the lump-sum roll they may transfer back from the lump-sum roll. That this has been done continually and repeatedly for the last 14 years the present occupant of the chair thinks there is no doubt. That of itself would not be, perhaps, a sufficient reason for holding that it can be done; but there must have been an intention in the mind of Congress to give authority for that kind of transaction, or else the question, no doubt, would have been raised before this time. The Chair is going to hold that the point of order is not well taken. If any Member wants the judgment of the committee, the Chair would be glad to have an appeal taken and get the judgment of the committee on this proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the Chair predicate that on the fact that the positions have existed on the statutory roll?

The CHAIRMAN. Congress gave the right to the Secretary of Agriculture to establish positions, and so forth, under the lump-sum appropriation. We are informed by the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill that these positions were created, salaries fixed, and now they are simply being transferred to another roll at the same amount exactly that Congress gave the Secretary the right to fix, and which he did fix. Consequently it looks like the remedy of the House is on a motion to strike out these provisions by a vote of the majority if the committee are opposed to these items.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 11, page 78, the figures "$3,000" and insert "$2,500."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 78, line 11, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,500."

Mr. LEVER. Will not the gentleman make it two at $2,500 instead of one?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the motion should prevail in this instance, it would be in order to proceed down the line and reduce the increases.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in eight minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret having to help hold the House here at this late hour, but, appreciating the perplexity of the chairman in ruling on this very important question, and believing this to be one of the most important questions that confronts Congress, I feel that we ought to deliberate seriously before we get away from this item of the Bureau of Markets. What are the facts? The facts are that the Bureau of Markets was created about five or six years ago, with an appropriation of $50,000. By industry and activity during the last six years it has so developed that in the present bill it asks for an appropriation of about $3,000,000, a very significant increase. In this particular item for salaries, appropriations have advanced from $387,851 last year to $671,810 this year, almost double the amount allowed last year for salaries alone.

An examination of the list reveals the fact that we are paying higher salaries for these places created in the Bureau of Markets than we are to many others where corresponding work is done. For instance, we pay telephone operators at the Capitol $900 per annum. The Secretary of Agriculture in this bill pays his operators—and there are 20 of them in this bureau alone—$1,400, a very great disparity and an injustice to those who receive only $900. According to the argument and reasoning of the gentleman from South Carolina, now supported by the Chair in his ruling, there is nothing for Congress to do but accept the assignment of clerks in the Bureau of Markets at any salaries the Secretary may fix.

The statutory provision fixing the number of clerks, and their salaries, is brushed aside, and we are made to accept the conditions laid down by the Secretary of Agriculture, who may employ as many clerks as he chooses to employ at the salary he fixes, and Congress has nothing to do with it at all if this bill passes. That is what I rise to oppose. I am opposed to yielding all of the prerogatives of Congress to the departments. I am opposed to the creation of this horde of offices at salaries fixed by the chiefs in spite of the legislation which we enact. I am opposed to the subterfuge of putting men upon the statutory roll and transferring them by departmental authority to higher salaries taken from lump-sum appropriations. That is contrary to the will, contrary to the act of Congress, but by this bill we are brought to this position: The Chair rules that the point of order is well taken which opposes an increase of $500 in the salary of the chief of the bureau who under statutory law gets $4,500 and who in this bill is raised to $5,000, but when it comes to these hundred or more of clerks who have been created since the last bill was passed, who have been given jobs within a year, whose salaries have been practically doubled within a year, by the edict of the Department of Agriculture, the Chair rules that we are bound by the action of the department and that Congress has nothing to say about it. I shall take the Chair at his word and the committee upon its pretenses, and move to strike out the increases that are apparent in this bill. The one administrative clerk who received a salary of $2,500 under the act of Congress making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, passed October 1, 1918, is advanced in the bill now before us to $3,000, and my motion is to strike out the $3,000, which is allowed by the departmental dictum in this bill, and reinsert the $2,500, which we allowed last year. It is not a reduction but a restoration of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] complains that this appropriation for the Bureau of Markets has increased within the last two years. That is true. As I was proceeding to say some time ago when interrupted by some one, it has not been until within six or eight years that any attention whatever has been given to the matter of the distribution of farm products. In 1862 we passed the Morrill Act; in 1888 we passed the Hatch Act; in 1896, I think, we passed the Adams Act; and in 1914 we passed the Smith-Lever Act, all more directly dealing with the problem of production than with the problem of distribution. Yet there is not a man here who ever gave five minutes' thought to the economics of agriculture who does not agree with me in the statement that the bigger end of the problem of agriculture is the problem of distribution. The gentleman from Pennsylvania would hamstring and hamper the efforts of progressive agricultural thinkers in their desire to promote a better system of marketing farm products.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman answer me with his usual candor as to whether we are getting any substantial, good results from the huge expenditures in the matter of markets?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the best answer to that question is the resolution of the National Live-Stock Association on one item in this bill, passed in Denver, Colo., last week or the week before, not only indorsing the work of the Department of Agriculture in this respect, but asking for increased funds for the expansion of this work. And I take it that a great association, comprising the intelligent live-stock men of the country, would not go on record in favor of a proposition unless they thought it was a benefit to their great industry.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. For a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me to say that the business men in my city complain that the Bureau of Markets is a detriment to business?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I had a suspicion that somebody in Philadelphia was complaining about this Bureau of Markets, because the gentleman's activities did not manifest themselves until we reached this bureau.

Then the gentleman, with his usual eagerness, adroitness, and suavity, and all those other good things I might say about him, entered into the arena; and if there is a "nigger in the woodpile," I am glad to uncover him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for one more question? Does the gentleman think he has answered my proposition about the increasing of pay from $2,500 to $3,000 by his eloquence?

Mr. LEVER. Fully. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) there were—ayes 32, noes 52.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania and Mr. RUBEY) announced that there were—ayes 36, noes 56.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] A hundred and two Members are present, a quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 78, lines 12 and 13, the words "two executive clerks, at $2,000 each."

Mr. LEVER. And on that I ask that debate be now closed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to have five minutes on this.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed in six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 78, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "two executive clerks, at $2,000 each."

The CHAIRMAN. On this amendment the gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate be closed at the expiration of six minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems a duty to call the attention of our friends upon the other side, who are soon going out of power, to the political wisdom displayed by their Secretary of Agriculture in providing all the offices he possibly could for deserving Democrats before his retirement from his high station. The two executive clerks, at $2,000 each, whom I have moved to strike out, and against whom I have no personal feeling whatever and who will probably hold their jobs despite anything I may say, were evidently created since the last session of Congress. But they are not alone in the gentle art of being found when the finding was good and while the war was on. The two executive clerks have been provided. From what section of the country they come I do not know. Evidently they were useful to the Bureau of Markets for a kind of work that is more or less useful. Citizens in my vicinity claim that the work of the bureau they serve is useless and a waste of public expenditure and energy, but gentlemen who differ as to the two executive clerks probably feel that they are of great service to the community. But I call the attention of my Democratic brethren to the fact that while the funds were in their possession they have made the most of their opportunity. I do not know that we can find fault with them for that. They have had plenty of money in these appropriations and amongst others have provided for these extra clerks. I do not know whether these two executive clerks are going out by our action to-night, but if they do not the chances are they may go out when we have a real reform in governmental expenditures. I am quite sure, however, that those who have been in possession of the purse strings during the last six years since this Bureau of Markets has been created, and since it has grown from a little $50,000 bureau to a bureau that has the audacity and the power to come in here and ask for $3,000,000—I say, I am sure, that the lines may be a little more tightly drawn than they have been heretofore.

These two executive clerks have been created in spite of any legislation enacted by the Congress of the United States. They have been created because somebody wanted the places or because somebody who had possession of the funds desired to give them employment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My friend says that this bureau has not manifested its usefulness, which I think is quite true as a general proposition, but I understand that the great packing houses consider it a very useful bureau, and perhaps it is in one way. I understand the storage houses of the big packing establishments are filled to the top with provisions of every kind, which they are holding for high prices.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. People in my city are paying the highest prices that were ever paid for food in the history of the world, and are barely able to make money enough to buy sufficient to eat. And yet we have to provide in this bill for executive clerks, for teachers, scholars, and investigators, to go out and tell the farmers how to run their farms and the people in the large cities and around the markets how to do business. I am raising this question of increases in appropriations and salaries as a matter of duty, so that those in the galleries and those in the newspapers offices and those elsewhere outside of the Halls of Congress may know that there is at least one silent voice raised in protest against this saturnalia of extravagant expenditures that has been going on in the Department of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has disclosed his real purpose in this whole matter. He desires that the folks in the galleries shall hear him, and, if they can not hear him, that the people who read the newspapers may read about him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was afraid it would not get in the papers, and wanted the galleries to carry the news.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is very anxious to have that "silent" voice of his reach the four corners of the world. Oh, Mr. Chairman, do you not think we ought to go along here like Members of Congress. [Applause.] I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill, page 78, line 11, by striking out after the word "assistant" the figures "$2,500," and inserting "$1,980."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. If that motion is carried, would not the effect be to close debate instantly? That is to say, the gentleman offering the amendment would have no right to be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the inquiry again.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman's motion should prevail, the gentleman offering the amendment would have no right to be heard on this amendment under the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment would be voted on.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, the purpose of the motion is to gag those who desire to discuss this bill and to intelligently state the manner in which the Department of Agriculture prepares its estimates to hoodwink Congress. That is the purpose of it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina——

Mr. HAYES. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that under the rules a motion can not be made within five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a point of order that this motion is premature and not in order at all.

Mr. LEVER. I do not admit that it was premature; but I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close in nine minutes, the gentleman to have five minutes and myself four minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would shut out discussion on all the other amendments to this paragraph, which has been padded for the purposes of the Department of Agriculture. This is a padded pay roll, as comparison with the bill that was passed last year will demonstrate. It ought to be exposed.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman has not seen fit to be on the floor with the committee on this bill this afternoon——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is true. I have been busy elsewhere.

Mr. LEVER. Of course that is true. And yet he comes in here offhand and says it is a padded proposition.

I move that the debate close in five minutes' time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina that under the rules debate must have begun before that motion would be in order. There is no debate on this paragraph and, of course, the motion, under the rules, is premature.

Mr. LEVER. Let the debate go on, then.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am not only surprised but grieved at the petulance of my brilliant and distinguished, if not handsome, friend from South Carolina. [Laughter.] I have not known him hitherto, in his long experience of 17 years in this House, 12 of which I have enjoyed with him, to attempt to enforce what we know popularly as the gag rule.

He is the last man in the House to be suspected of invoking that rule. If it had come from a hot-tempered man or from one of the orators of the House who like to be heard after 8 o'clock in the evening, when the galleries are full, I would not have been surprised. [Laughter.] But coming from the amiable member of the South Carolina delegation, from one who might become a Senator from that State—and I hope he may some day—I am grieved beyond expression.

However, I know that the gentleman is hungry and tired and anxious to get to his bed, as I am to mine, and I forgive him. But the gentleman is also extremely anxious, I am sure, to accommodate the Department of Agriculture and get this bill through. He is anxious to circumvent the Republicans who happen to object to the padding of this bill to the extent of over $300,000 in this one item. I merely wanted to call attention to that fact. This is the only opportunity we have to do so.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Is the gentleman trying to carry out the charge that has been made in the press recently that the Democrats are inclined to think the Republicans are attempting to force an extra session? [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No. I am trying to pursue the even tenor of my way on this floor and secure the enactment of legislation that will be as interesting to the fair-minded Democratic Members as it will be to all Republicans. To-morrow we will find nothing in the newspapers about this talk on the Agricultural appropriation bill, as we have found scant mention in the newspapers of any talk on a bill brought in here in the last six years intended to take money out of the Treasury. Yet our friends on the Democratic side blandly demand that we close our lips; in fact, they now propose to put the gag on us so that feeble-voiced men like myself [laughter] can not be heard in protest against these padded salary lists.

I have moved to retain the salary that we fixed last year of $1,918, rather than advance it to $2,500, as proposed by the committee at the instigation and under the spur of the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary is one of the most modest of our high officials in his addresses to the public, in his speeches to the stock growers and the cattle raisers and the cotton planters, but he is one of the heftiest individuals we have in public life when it comes to taking care of the 17,000 or 18,000 people under his control, who have increased almost as rapidly under his administration—I am impelled to say, almost—as the "cooties" in France have advanced upon the Army of the United States. [Laughter.] He has given us lecturers and experts and investigators until we are prepared to teach the farmers' wives how to make cottage cheese, or to harry housekeepers in the large cities, who are already distressed by excessive food prices.

I do not want to hamstring the committee, but I do not want the business of the country to be hamstrung by hundreds and thousands of useless investigators, who simply take up the time of the man who is trying to do business and furnish food to the public. That is what I am afraid the Bureau of Markets is trying to do. It sends out reports of information that is already in the hands of business men, and it takes up the time of the man at the plow with advice that frequently uses up the bread-winning time at his disposal. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in response to the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I do not resent his statement that I am petulant to-night because I have had a long day, but I do resent the idea that I am pampered. That is not fair to myself or to my constituents. I am not attempting here to enforce a gag rule. I am undertaking here only to prevent a gabfest, so that the House of Representatives in the Committee of the Whole may do business. [Applause.] I therefore move that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 31.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on page 79, line 22, I move to amend by striking out the figures "$671,810" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$387,850."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 79, line 22, strike out "$671,810" and insert in lieu thereof "$387,850."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been closed upon this paragraph. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make studies of cooperation among farmers in the United States; to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information growing out of these studies, in order to provide a basis for a broader utilization of results secured by the research, experimental, and demonstration work of the Department of Agriculture, agricultural colleges, and State experiment stations, $15,780.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is under this paragraph that the department does its work in investigating rural credits?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; it is.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to know if the chairman can tell us how many men are employed in the division that has this subject under investigation?

Mr. LEVER. It was ascertained by the committee that the sum of $10,000 was being expended under this item for investigations into rural credits. The committee felt that inasmuch as we had a Farm Loan Board of five members employed at salaries of $7,500 a year each, they might very well be intrusted with the study of rural-credit problems, and that to continue this work in the Department of Agriculture—while recognizing the very great efficiency of the gentleman who is in charge of these studies—would be a duplication of work. So therefore the committee reduced the appropriation $10,000 and struck out the authorization for the continuance of the studies of rural credits by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman is aware, of course, that the Federal Farm Loan Board has no jurisdiction except over so-called land credits or farm-mortgage credits?

Mr. LEVER. That is very true, and yet we have five men on high salaries down there in the Farm Loan Board who are supposed to be big men, and I imagine that if they had the proper kind of enthusiasm and the proper kind of ambition they will be very anxious to work out something that will link themselves with the great system of personal credits.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I understand that the chairman of the committee, as well as the entire committee, have apparently taken from the Secretary of Agriculture all authority to make any investigations about rural credits?

Mr. LEVER. We have.

Mr. MORGAN. And as a matter of fact it is only by implication that the Federal Farm Loan Board will do anything along that line?

Mr. LEVER. If the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board are not studying rural credits, both land and personal, in all the aspects of that subject, they are not doing their duty.

Mr. MORGAN. Has the gentleman any knowledge that the Federal Farm Loan Board are making any study whatever of what are known as personal or short-time credits?

Mr. LEVER. I have not, but this will be a mighty good way to make them study the subject.

Mr. MORGAN. Then would it not be proper for this committee to make an appropriation in order to enable the Federal Farm Loan Board to make this investigation?

Mr. LEVER. In the first place, this committee would not have jurisdiction. In the second place, it seems to me that the Farm Loan Board ought not to wait to be directed by Congress to do their duty. They ought to be doing these things now.

Mr. MORGAN. The Federal Farm Loan Board can not make this investigation without money, without an appropriation, without being able to employ somebody to give their time to that question, can they?

Mr. LEVER. I take it that if the Federal Farm Loan Board needed the money for this purpose, if they are like other bureaus of the Government, they would not hesitate to ask for it.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw my pro forma amendment and offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment and offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 82, line 21, after the word "of," the words "rural credits," and in line 2 strike out the figures "$15,780" and insert "$25,780."

Mr. LEVER. I ask for a vote on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 82, line 21, after the word "of," insert the words "rural credits"; page 83, line 2, strike out the figures "$15,780" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$25,780."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I make a point of order on the amendment. I know of no law that gives the Secretary of Agriculture, or anyone in his department, authority to investigate rural credits.

Mr. MORGAN. I understood the chairman of the committee to state that the committee had intentionally dropped out the authority in this paragraph to investigate the subject of rural credits.

Mr. LEVER. It has been carried from year to year in the annual appropriation bills, but that does not make it in order. I rather the gentleman would withdraw his point of order and let us vote on it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am willing to do that, but I hope the chairman will not move to close debate too early.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not germane to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures in line 2, page 83, "$15,780," and insert the figures "$25,680."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MORGAN: Page 83, line 2, strike out the figures "$15,780" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,780."

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I am not only surprised but astounded to have the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture state that he and his associates on this committee have deliberately decided to abandon, in effect, the farmers of this country in so far as they are to be supplied with proper credit facilities. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture suggests that the Federal Farm Loan Board do the work of studying rural credits. The Federal Farm Loan Board has authority only over farm-mortgage loans. It has nothing whatever to do with short-term or personal credits. Back in 1912 both the Republican Party and the Democratic Party, in substance, declared that the farmers of the United States should have credit facilities equal to the credit facilities provided for commerce, manufacturing, transportation, and mercantile interests in this country. These pledges have not been redeemed. We passed an act providing for farm-mortgage credit, but we have not provided for short-term or personal farm credits. For six years the responsibility has been on the Democratic Party of the Nation, because it has had control of the legislative and the executive departments of the Government.

The Federal Government should continue to investigate and study the subject until we have given our farmers a complete system of credits. We should continue the study of the subject until we have finished our task, until we have made good our promise to the farmers, until we have given them credit facilities equal to the credit facilities enjoyed by the commercial, mercantile, and manufacturing interests. Until this is done we ought not to take this work and appropriation away from the Secretary of Agriculture.

Now, I confess I have not felt that the Secretary of Agriculture was pushing short-term farm-credit investigations very vigorously. I have read with a great deal of interest his reports on this subject. I have felt that he was not very enthusiastic on the subject. But I was not prepared to learn that the party in power in this Nation to-day, after all their pledges to the farmers of this Nation, now when they are about ready to go out of power in Congress, would say to the farmers of the United States, "We have practically abandoned you." Why, the Secretary's report of 1918 says that 60 per cent of the farmers in the Southern States have not access for credits at the banks, that 60 per cent of the credits they use is with the merchants on the "advance system." Are you Democrats of the South willing to abandon the farmers in that condition and say that the great agricultural department of this Nation shall cease to be interested in giving the farmers proper credit facilities? I am surprised. I had more faith——

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Just for a question.

Mr. QUIN. Tell me what more facilities outside of this banking system for the farmers, the loan banks, or, as we call it, the reserve banks, can the Agricultural Department give to the farmer in the way of money and credit?

Mr. MORGAN. Does not the gentleman know there are two systems of credit—one mortgage credit and the other personal credit?

Mr. QUIN. Does the gentleman want the Government to give him personal credit?

Mr. MORGAN. I want the Government to give him a system of credit at least as good as the European nations have given their farmers.

Mr. QUIN. What would the gentleman substitute in lieu of what we now have?

Mr. MORGAN. I have not the time in five minutes to say what I would substitute, but we have provided for nothing except for farm-mortgage credit. To secure short-term or personal credit the farmers must go to the commercial banks or merchants. More than one-half of the indebtedness of the farmers of the United States is on short-term loans. Indebtedness of this character amounts to $3,000,000,000. The farmers are paying high rates of interest on this large sum. We should provide a special system of short-term farm credits, which will not only reduce interest charges but give such credit facilities as will contribute to the expansion of agriculture. But by withdrawing the appropriation for the study of rural credits the party in power serves notice on the farmers that it will not redeem its pledge to give the farmers adequate facilities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has been fixed.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the words relating to personal rural credits having been ruled out on a point of order, there is no reason for increasing the appropriation. If it were made $25,000 there would be an invitation to the bureau to engage in some other activity, and it already engages in activities that are not proper for the Bureau of Markets to engage in. My criticism of the Bureau of Markets is not that they are paying too high salaries. I was not in sympathy with the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to reduce salaries. My objection is that the Department of Agriculture, this Bureau of Markets in particular, has been extending its activities too fast, and it has been taking up its work on a scale, enlarging and extending it so hastily, that it can not properly carry it out, and that it is taking up work that is not properly marketing work. All of the objections I have made to these appropriations or to any of the items are along these lines. As the chairman of the committee has said, there is a commission, composed of five men, well paid, who are carrying out a law relating to the lending of Federal money to the farmers, and they can very properly take up this work also. It is directly in their line. It is a good work, and I should like to see it carried on, but it is certainly not in line with the work of the Bureau of Markets. You might as well impose the duty on the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry or upon the Bureau of Chemistry as to put it in the Bureau of Markets. There are five men on this Farm Loan Board, big men—one of them weighs over 200 pounds—and it seems to me they ought to see that it is their duty, and they ought to perform their duty and make investigations respecting personal credits, give us information, and perhaps suggest legislation. If special legislation is needed to start the board to doing this additional work, it ought not to be carried in an item relating to the work of the Bureau of Markets in the Department of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORGAN), there were—ayes 62, noes 35.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven Members present, a quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the several States in the employment of agents to acquire and diffuse useful information connected with the distribution and marketing of farm products through investigational, demonstrational, or extension methods, $77,750.

Mr. MASON rose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DIES. I object.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I shall probably not take five minutes. I simply want to call attention while we are considering the Agricultural appropriation bill to the importance of restoring the man power on the American farms. I have offered heretofore a resolution asking for the appointment of a special joint committee, with power to take evidence, in order that provision may be made to protect the soldiers in this country and out of it. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting the resolution at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

Whereas it is now charged and believed that the matter of bringing American soldiers home and in demobilization of the Army and Navy, gross incompetence is being displayed by the present administration of the military branch of our Government; and

Whereas it is also charged and believed that certain military officers are declining to act promptly upon the requests of soldiers and sailors for discharge, simply to maintain their own organization; and

Whereas in some of the military camps the men are threatened with court-martial and punishment if they ask any assistance outside of military channels to secure their discharge, thereby denying to the American soldier the right to petition in times of peace; and

Whereas it is also charged and believed that it is the plan of the present administration in the control of the Army and Navy of the United States to continue the dilatory practice in failing to demobilize with reasonable promptness and to continue to punish those who seek discharge under the rules already prescribed by the War Department; and

Whereas if the present Congress adjourns without providing some remedy and protection for the soldier there will be no civil authority in Washington to whom the soldiers can apply for protection and relief: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a joint committee on demobilization be appointed as follows: Eight Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker, equally divided between the two leading political parties; and eight Senators to be appointed by the Vice President, equally divided between the two leading political parties, with power to send for persons and papers, administer the oath, and investigate and report within 30 days their investigations and facts in regard to the matters above charged, and with recommendations, by bill or otherwise, for laws to expedite the demobilization of the Army and Navy of the United States, and also by resolution or otherwise to plan for returning all American soldiers in foreign lands to the United States and for the demobilizing of same, retaining only such as may be necessary for the present emergency; and be it

Resolved further, That said committee shall have power to sit during recess or after adjournment of the present Congress sine die, with full power to investigate and report to the next Congress.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I am acting upon my own initiative in this matter, and no one else is responsible for what I do, so far as I know.

Many men are kept in the cantonments in the United States now, I believe, because the petty officers there desire to keep the organization for their own benefit. They are posting in camps, to my knowledge—and I have the information, but I do not desire to give the names of the soldiers complaining—that people will be punished by court-martial if they ask for a discharge, or ask, rather, any assistance from the outside.

Many of our boys are unfamiliar with the process of getting out of the Army. They are needed on the farms in this country and in the shops and in the stores and in the schools. They do not know how to prepare their affidavits. They write, perhaps, to their father or their mother, and they, in turn, write to the Member of Congress. The proposition now in some of the camps is to court-martial them. Notices have been posted that they would be court-martialed. I believe that is denying the right of petition to a soldier.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman's charge is a very serious one, and I wonder on what facts he bases it.

Mr. MASON. I have a statement from a soldier whose name I do not want to give, because I do not want him court-martialed, that in a camp down at Old Point Comfort they have posted notices to the effect that if the soldier applies for any assistance from the outside—his Congressman or anyone else—he will be court-martialed.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LEVER. I have had a number, as I presume other Members of Congress have, letters about discharges. I have referred those letters to the War Department and the Navy Department. I have never received any intimation from either department, the naval or the military, to the effect that this would bring on the soldier a court-martial, and I do not believe it is true.

Mr. MASON. I will say to my colleague that I simply wrote one request, offering a suggestion that I thought was for the good of the service. A young man was called up, but they finally determined not to court-martial him. The papers were returned to me, and I asked the Secretary of War whether I had lost my right as an American citizen because I had been elected to Congress, and whether I was debarred from offering suggestions for the good of the service of my country. Since then the armistice has been signed, and a number of petty rules and reasons have been applied. And they file away these applications by the score. In one case I had there was a man who had five sons in the service, four of them in France. One of the youngest, who had just been able to get in as a musician, had to be kept in camp for musical purposes since the armistice was signed, although the father's business was going to rack and ruin for the lack of one son, when five of his sons were in the Army and four of them in the trenches in Europe.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay anything in any way that will bring about an extra session. I have had no conferences with anyone else. But there should be a Congress sitting here unless there is some committee appointed to sit, and this resolution of mine provides for a nonpartisan committee of four Democratic Representatives and four Republican Representatives, four Democratic Senators and four Republican Senators, to sit during the recess after adjournment sine die of this Congress, to hear and take evidence and give us some place where we can go to get some action against the rules that have been applied by the little men who happen to wear shoulder straps, and particularly many of the Regular Army, to keep the boys that are needed elsewhere. They will not even give them a furlough. There is a simple plan. They could give them a revocable furlough for 90 days, but they are kept in camp for the purpose of keeping the organization.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have taken more time than I intended, but I simply want to say that I shall ask for the consideration of this resolution. Otherwise I shall ask the gentlemen who oppose it to take the responsibility of keeping a quorum here for the purpose of transacting public business.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Illinois is the first that I have heard touching this matter. If his statement is true there is absolutely no justification for it, and the miserable official who is doing that kind of business ought to be brought to the bar of justice quickly. I have not had the experience the gentleman has. As I said a moment ago, I have had a number of letters, and I have referred them to the proper departments and have had no intimation that the interests of the soldiers is, as is indicated here to-day, jeopardized.

Now, as to this paragraph, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the debate be closed.

In doing this, I desire to say this: It is getting late, and we are anxious to pass this bill to-night, and we are going to pass it, and I shall make objections to debate on any of these paragraphs, as we proceed, which does not relate to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LEVER. Then I move it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto now close.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating and handling, grading, and transportation of grain, including the grain sorghums, for the purpose of fixing definite grades thereof, $86,050.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I have not taken up any time of this House during the entire month of January [applause], but when I heard the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] make an assault upon the party to which I belong I can not let it go unanswered. The gentleman has gone so far as to make slanderous statements against the Democratic party——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. QUIN. In the face of what the Democratic Party has done for the great masses of the American people——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to do it, because the gentleman is one of the best friends I have in this House and one of the best Members also, but I just announced a moment ago that I should make points of order and I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing the paragraph.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the Agricultural Department has done much for the grain producers of the country. It now helps the farmer put the seeds in the ground, helps transport the grain not only to markets throughtout this country but across to Europe, and yet the gentleman from Oklahoma said that the farmers of this country had virtually no help from the Department of Agriculture. He said that the farmers could not borrow money. This mighty Democratic Party, after the Republicans had for many years burglarized the farmers of this country, came into power and gave the farmers of this Nation the splendid farm loan bank system wherein they have borrowed in the short time since it has been in operation $158,000,000 at a low rate of interest, from 4 to 6 per cent. [Applause.] And yet the gentleman from Oklahoma says that the farmers of this country have not had any help from the Democratic Party. The Republican Party allowed the farmers to hustle around and pay banks 10 and 12 per cent interest.

The Democratic Party has done more in this little time for the farmers of this country than the Republican Party has done since the Civil War. [Applause.] The Democratic Party is trying to put this Agricultural bill through right now for the farmers of our country, and the gentleman from Oklahoma made the point of order that there was no quorum present, and the Chair counted seven Members above a quorum on this floor. He and some of his Republican colleagues have been filibustering to-night. That is evidence of what the Republican Party is doing against the farmer when we are trying to put this great Agricultural bill through here to help the wealth producers. The gentleman and his crowd will make points of order that there is no quorum present just to delay the passage of this bill. The farmer of this country to-day is getting 17½ cents per pound for his hogs, and when the Republican Party was in power he could only get a market at 3 cents. More than that, when the Republican Party was in power corn was being burned—used for fuel because it was so cheap—while to-day it is selling at $2 a bushel. Not only this, but this party of the people, the Democratic Party, has given the wheat farmers $2.20 a bushel for their wheat, and yet the gentleman from Oklahoma says the Democratic Party has done nothing for the farmer. Most of the prosperity among the farmers of this country has been brought about by legislation which organized Democracy has put in force. Some of you Republicans have helped to do it, and I want to say that when a man gets on this floor from your party or any other party and says that the Democratic organization in Congress, the Democratic Party, has not done its full share and its full duty toward the farmers of the American Republic, he is saying something that the records will show to be false. Gentlemen, I thank you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DIES rose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture will object.

Mr. LEVER. The debate on this paragraph has been closed, and I suggest to the gentleman that he address the committee on the next paragraph.

Mr. DIES. It has not been closed. I did not object to the gentleman's request.

Mr. LEVER. I may be mistaken about that. It may have been on the other paragraph.

Mr. DIES. Then the gentleman will not object on the ground that I am not speaking to the question.

Mr. Chairman, when Members talk about loaning money to the farmers of this country, and talk about Democrats and Republicans, it makes an honest nonpartisan man laugh. The best thing you can do for the farmers of this country is to let them alone and quit spending their money and taxing the eternal life out of them. [Laughter and applause.]

I wish the farmers of this country and the taxpayers of our land might have a return of the old democratic and republican theory that Government is not created to support the people, but that it is a creature to be supported by the people.

The great mistake we are making, my friends, here now is that we are practicing hypocrisy upon the people. We are leading them to believe that the Government can support them and lift them by their boot straps out of their financial difficulties when, as honest men, we should say to them that all that the Government can do is to protect their life and their liberty and tax them to support the Government.

I have been here 10 years, and I am going out now——

A MEMBER. And voluntarily, too.

Mr. DIES. Yes; and I will tell you what you have done, and I hope you will take it in good part: You have taken the fairest and best Government ever known among men and you are making it into the most despicable socialism. You took the American people at a time when they believed they could support themselves and their Government, and you are teaching them hour by hour and day by day to expect that their Government shall support them. Instead of telling our magnificent Army, when the boys are coming back from France and are being demobilized, to go back to their jobs and engage in their former industries, you are leading them to believe that the Government shall take it upon itself as a duty to support them.

My friends, you are tearing down the greatest Government, the greatest democracy, the world has ever seen, and you are building up in its stead the poorest fabric of socialism that history can record.

Is it your intention to help the people? No. You will not help the people unless you tell them that the Government has but one duty to the citizen, and that is to protect his life and property and give him an equal and fair race in this world. [Applause.] And you are teaching him that the duty of the Government is to help him. My beloved country! I do not know; we are losing the greatest Republic the world has ever seen. Talk about international democracies! It is being swamped amidst nebulous phrases and unintelligible jargon. Would to God the President of the United States would get on the Tennessee and come home and preserve this Republic [applause] rather than meddle longer with the politics of Europe. We are casting the lot of the people of America, the peace and destinies of our country into what? Into the hotchpotch of the quarrels and poverty and woe and destruction of Europe.

You know, when this is all over, my friends, I will be out home farming, and you who are left here will read Washington's Farewell Address with more respect than you have ever read it before. [Applause.]

There is not anything new to be said. Human nature is just the same as it was when our fathers made this Republic. The President of the United States, representing what has been the greatest Republic the world has ever seen, may speak of justice, and of the league of nations, and the end of the sorrows of mankind; but the best hope of this Republic and of this people is upon our own shores, defending the Constitution of our fathers, protecting the liberties of the people and independent self-government, a representative democracy. And I wish, O God of Nations, that our President would come back home, and that we might leave upon this hemisphere a great democracy, unentangled and unengaged with all the European broils that exist abroad to-day. [Prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general administrative expenses in connection with the lines of investigation, experiment, and demonstration conducted in the Bureau of Markets, $20,635.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMNERS: Page 83, after line 21, insert the following:

"For establishing and operating a farm produce exchange, the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be required, and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to establish, at as early a date as practicable, a farm produce exchange, with such branches thereto as may be necessary, in order to afford a medium through which the economic and systematic sale and distribution of farm products may be effected.

"Such exchange shall be divided into four sections, designated, respectively, as the grain, cotton, fruit and vegetable, and miscellaneous sections, and such additional sections as Congress may from time to time provide for by specific appropriation.

"The commissioners of agriculture of the several States may select, and are requested to select, an advisory committee for each of said sections, other than the miscellaneous section, composed of three of their number, to act with the Secretary of Agriculture in connection with the sale of the farm products to be sold through the section for which they may be respectively selected, provided, however, the members of said committee shall have been selected by a majority vote by such commissioners based upon the average value, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, of the production of their respective States during the five years preceding such selection of the product or products to be dealt in through the section for which they may be selected. Nothing herein shall prevent an individual commissioner from being selected for the advisory committee of more than one section.

"It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to determine the time the first selection of advisory committees shall be made, and to notify the commissioners of agriculture of the several States of his action with regard thereto; and upon request by a majority vote, based upon production as herein provided, of the commissioners of agriculture shall designate the place where the selection of the several committees shall be made: Provided, however, That upon request of such majority vote the Secretary of Agriculture may provide for such selection otherwise than by a meeting of the several commissioners entitled to make such selection.

"In the operation of such exchange the Secretary of Agriculture, as far as practicable, shall cooperate with the several States and the various agencies therein which may be utilized and may formulate plans and regulations for exchange of service between them and such exchange.

"It shall be the duty of each of the departments of the Government to furnish the Secretary of Agriculture with such statistics and data as may be acquired which would be useful in the operation of such exchange and to render such other service in the sale and distribution of farm products through such exchange as it would be practicable to render.

"The Secretary of Agriculture, as rapidly as possible, shall provide standards as to quality, and, where practicable, as to containers of agricultural products not heretofore standardized and subject to subsequent standardization by Congress.

"The Secretary of Agriculture shall keep advised as nearly as practicable of the details of the quantity, quality, location, and price at which held of agricultural products and the volume and location or demand in the United States and abroad and the price at which such products may be sold, and shall make such information available to producers and purchasers of such products and to the general public, and shall endeavor to bring about such system in the sale and distribution of farm products as shall eliminate the waste and extremes in prices resulting from the present lack of system therein and from the undue influence of price manipulation in relation thereto.

"Those desiring to offer products for sale through such exchange may do so by grade or by sample, delivered to such exchange under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe. Those desiring to purchase farm products may in like manner submit offers to purchase, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to endeavor to establish trading relationship between those desiring to purchase and those desiring to sell, and to procure the transfer of title and possession under such sales as may be effected at points along the natural line of movement of farm products moving to points of consumption, and to direct such movement so that such products shall move as nearly as practicable from the first point of concentration to the point of ultimate need by the shortest and most economical route and in quantity and quality in accord therewith. And to this end may designate points for inspection and of delivery, and shall exercise such intermediary inspection and supervision of delivery as shall inspire general confidence in the integrity of transactions consummated through such exchanges.

"The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to require such deposits in money, such bonds, or other guaranties of compliance with the obligation to deliver according to tender, or to receive and pay according to offer, as in his judgment may be necessary to insure compliance with the contracts made through such exchange.

"All information furnished by such exchange shall not be at a higher cost than that necessary to pay the expenses of transmission.

"No charges shall be made to individual producers or to producers' organizations for services rendered in effecting sales of products grown by them or by their members, as the case may be.

"The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish such additional rules and regulations governing transactions through such exchange and the service rendered by such exchange as in his discretion may be deemed necessary."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chariman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman let the Clerk read it through?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman had it inserted in yesterdays' RECORD.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of the United States grain standards act: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States grain standards act, including such rent and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $598,600: Provided, That section 6 of the said act is hereby amended, effective on and after the passage of this act, by striking out of the last sentence the words "made after the parties in interest have had opportunity to be heard."

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the proviso.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I will reserve it.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to take just a moment to say something in reference to the reservation of the point of order on the proviso in this paragraph. Of course, there is no question but that if the point of order is insisted upon it will go out. It is clearly subject to a point of order.

In 1916 when we passed the grain-standards act, in that part of the bill which refers to an appeal, with a desire to be as absolutely fair as possible and for the purpose of giving everybody connected with the appeal every possible opportunity, we inserted the following language. I will not read it all, but only that part which is referred to in this bill. It says:

The findings of the Secretary of Agriculture as to grade, signed by him or by an officer or officers, agent or agents of the Department of Agriculture as he may designate, after the parties in interest have had an opportunity to be heard, shall be accepted as prima facie evidence, etc.

Now, what are the facts in regard to it? Since this act went into effect in the neighborhood of 3,500 to 4,000 appeals have been taken, and no person has ever taken advantage of the opportunity to be heard; not one. As long as the provision is in the law the Secretary of Agriculture must go through the trouble and take the time to send out notices in order that every man who desires to be heard may be heard. It is practically a dead letter so far as those in interest are concerned.

What are the facts in the case? Here is the sample of grain that is to be graded; the supervisor passes upon the grade of the grain. An appeal is taken to the Secretary of Agriculture or to the agent who represents him. There should be no question of hearing in the matter; the grain speaks for itself. It is or is not of the grade as given by the inspector. The Secretary of Agriculture, the grain trade, and everybody else wants this language eliminated in order that the grain business of the country may be expedited. If you will strike out this language, which has never been made use of by the parties in interest, you will expedite the business of the grain trade in every part of the country. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order.

I want to call attention to one other thing. There are three reasons which I want to emphasize why this language should go out. The first is to avoid delays in handling grain involved in the appeal. The second is to avoid delays in the settlement of transactions, and the third is to cut out that part which is termed on the exchange "the red tape of the proposition."

There is no question in the world but what the language ought to go out, and I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I regret to rise in opposition to a single provision in the bill. We spent several weeks in hard work in preparing it. Although the bill is a good bill, it is not altogether what I would have it in every respect. With regard to this provision, it crept into the bill when I was not present. The proposition is not as stated by the gentleman from Missouri. If the gentleman will read the testimony, he will find the purpose of this is to break down this standard act. I will read to the gentleman——

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. I think the gentleman is under a misapprehension. There are two amendments proposed by the Agricultural Department. The other amendment does what the gentleman thinks it would do, but this amendment does not.

Mr. HAUGEN. I asked this question:

Mr. HAUGEN. The purpose is to eliminate the board of three supervisors and to go direct from the one man to the board of review?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the idea, and also to eliminate the numerous papers which have to be made up and submitted in order that the parties may have a hearing under the terms of the act.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is not one a check upon the other?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Why do you propose to set aside this board?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Because we are placing upon this board men whom we believe will give it a faith and credence that could not be given to any board of three supervisors made up from three field supervisors.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the supervisors are on the spot?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No; only in the largest markets are they on the spot.

Mr. HAUGEN. In a number of the important markets?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. In about 6 out of 35.

The act of August 11, 1916, provides that an appeal may be taken to the board of three supervisors, and if the interested parties are not satisfied an appeal lies to the board of review.

It is now proposed to do away with the board of appeal and go direct to the board of review, which would delay the findings. For instance, we have a board at six of the most important terminals, and under this provision only one board of review will be provided for, and that in Chicago. If an appeal is taken, for instance, in the city of Minneapolis, instead of having it determined there the appeal will have to go to Chicago, which, of course, will cause a delay. That is the very thing we tried to avoid when the bill was passed.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely mistaken in the matter.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman from Virginia either make his point of order or withdraw it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will ask that the gentleman not do that. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON] reserved the point of order and everybody else has been speaking under it except the gentleman from Virginia. He ought to have the right to say something about it. He could have made the point of order and shut off the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

Mr. LEVER. The only objection I have is that under the guise of the reservation of a point of order we may speak here all night.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That may be; but it would be a hardship not to permit the gentleman from Virginia to speak after he has given opportunity to the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Iowa. Certainly the point of order will not be insisted upon until the gentleman from Virginia is heard.

Mr. LEVER. I shall make the point of order myself if nobody else does.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make this point of order because under the operation of the Bureau of Markets the greatest hardship to the southern wheat grower has been worked. By adopting a standard which was prejudicial to the southern wheat grower, the price on the grain has been lowered by at least 10 or 15 cents a bushel during the whole period of the time the price has been fixed by the Food Administration. The way in which this Bureau of Markets has used its power to fix the grade of wheat has been an outrage. Southern wheat brought as high a price in the market before the war as spring wheat, and its food value is as great, and yet under the standards of the Bureau of Markets it was given a low grade. Arbitrarily southern wheat was excluded from a first grade, although the millers were as anxious to get the southern wheat as they were to get the spring wheat. The price of the southern growers has been reduced at least 10 or 15 cents per bushel. After many protests some relief was reluctantly yielded by these bureaucrats, and it is now proposed that this Bureau of Markets, after having operated their system of gradation to the prejudice of the southern wheat grower, shall be authorized immediately upon the passage of this act to reestablish their ridiculous standards and grades without a hearing, without giving an opportunity to southern wheat growers to be heard. The bureau will be in a position to fix the grade of wheat to the prejudice of the southern wheat grower. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. The proposition in this amendment has nothing to do with the fixing of the standard.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. It allows them to fix the standard without a hearing.

Mr. RUBEY. It only has reference to appeals taken.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes; but it allows them to go ahead without giving anybody an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. RUBEY. Does the gentleman understand that there have been 4,000 opportunities given and not one accepted?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. If they have not been accepted it is because they have not been given the opportunity. I know that after they operated their system of grading for about six months they realized themselves that they had been operating their system to the prejudice of the southern wheat grower, and after an insistence on the part of the southern wheat grower they finally agreed to change the grade, and now they propose to go right back to the old system without giving anybody a hearing. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Was the point of order made to the whole paragraph or to the proviso?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Just to the proviso.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in line 12, I move to strike out the figures "$598,600" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$400,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 84, line 12, strike out the figures "$598,600" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$400,000."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the waste of money involved in lump-sum appropriations like this. Last year this particular department or bureau that was attending to this matter spent, I think, something like $456,000. They had some 2,874 appeals. Ordinarily, as I understand, for inspection it would cost about 35 cents for inspection and the total cost in case appeal was taken under the State authorities would be about $1. There is no reason I can understand why this whole proceeding ever ought to cost at the outside more than $50,000, and last year they managed to spend something like $456,000. Even this is too much, and I have moved to cut it down to $400,000.

Mr. LEVER. I am sure the gentleman does not want to go on record as making a ridiculous statement like that. I say it in all candor. I am sure the gentleman is misinformed about this whole situation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The truth is I have studied it a little too carefully to suit the gentleman from South Carolina, and being from a State which raises as much grain as his I know something about it.

Mr. LEVER. This pays the salary of the inspectors, traveling expenses, and so forth.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly; and if the gentleman will let me go on I will show the gentleman the difference between having a thing done through Washington authorities and having it done where it ought to be done. That is the trouble. Of course, if you are going to send an inspector back and forth every time you take an appeal to Minneapolis or Chicago, why, you are going to have $100 expense or more before you get through on each appeal.

Mr. LEVER. I wondered if the gentleman voted for this act.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes, I did; but I never anticipated that money was going to be squandered on it in this kind of manner. Now, if the Committee on Agriculture, including its chairman, whose ability I greatly admire, would get down to brass tacks and fix what these gentlemen are allowed in the way of salaries instead of permitting these bureaucratic officials to determine just what they think they should have, they would save a great many thousand dollars, and I am inclined to think some millions of dollars, before they got through. Instead, they are so wrapped up with this great purpose, and it is a great purpose, and the great objects of this bill, to develop agriculture in this country, that they become so enthusiastic about it that they let these gentlemen put in these lump-sum appropriations, out of which they pay whatever salaries they want and increase the totals of this bill beyond all reason; and this is only one illustration. In the next paragraph below is an appropriation of $35,000. As I understand, they granted some two or three licenses.

Mr. HAUGEN. They have granted three licenses, and it carried an appropriation of $52,000 last year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman will yield, this seems to be one of the lump-sum appropriations; does the gentleman happen to know how many officials are appointed under this appropriation and what is the average salary they are getting?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not know how many are appointed, but I know there are altogether too many.

Mr. HAUGEN. They are getting much higher salaries than they were paid before, and about all we could get out of the chief is they are paying about $240 over what they were to receive from the State. Of course, they get $240 under the legislative bill, and we have no way of estimating the number and increase that will be made during the year under the lump-sum or under the statutory roll, because Congress has no control over it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Therein, as my friend points out, lies the great evil of these lump-sum appropriations. Men can be transferred from one roll to another under the operation of these lump-sum appropriations. Then their salaries are increased beyond anything Congress ever intended, and eventually they are put back on the statutory roll at an increased salary.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I just made an inquiry of my colleague here whether that statement is accurate or not, and the reply was that it is. Members do not understand why this subterfuge.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The reason for the subterfuge is to get around the intention and purpose of Congress, which does not intend that these salaries shall be raised, and notwithstanding the legislative authority does not intend they shall be raised, they are raised.

Mr. FESS. Are we going to tolerate that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We seem to have been tolerating it, for it is permitted to go on under this bill, but it is a gross abuse, which ought to be stopped.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have had an official ruling to-night that it must be tolerated in the case of an agricultural bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My friend corrects me to that extent, and I accept the correction.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Have we not had enough votes on the other side to prove it will go in whether we approve it or not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; they have the majority. Now, these appeals have cost something around $150 or $160 each, when $50 would have been a great big allowance, and perhaps $5 to $10 would have been nearer what it should have been. My amendment would allow all and more than is necessary to carry on this work. Four hundred thousand dollars was once an immense sum. Whole departments were carried on for less. Now, this little bureau chief wants over half a million to carry on a work that ought to be done for less than half the money.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] to have 5 minutes and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, the gentleman from North Dakota to have 5 minutes and the gentleman from Missouri 5 minutes——

Mr. LEVER. Make it 15 minutes, so that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] may have 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, it is now quarter of 10. Does the gentleman expect to pass this bill before midnight?

Mr. LEVER. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only this: In 1916, after long debate and after careful consideration, the Congress of the United States passed the grain-grades act. It is now the law of the land. If there ever was a time when that act ought to be enforced it is now. It is not a question to-night for us to consider whether or not we are for the law or against the law. If you do not like the law, then introduce a bill to repeal the law. But just as long as it is on the statute books we ought to appropriate sufficient money to carry the law into execution.

Now, then, we are confronted with this situation: We have a guaranty placed upon every bushel of wheat raised in this country in 1918 and on every bushel which will be raised in 1919. That price guaranteed to the farmer by the Government is based upon these identical standards which have been adopted in accordance with the law passed by the Congress of the United States. It will be necessary for the Department of Agriculture to use these grades, to act quickly upon them. They will need every cent of money they have asked for in this appropriation, and possibly more, because under the guaranteed proposition the demands upon the Department of Agriculture for passing upon these grades will be stronger than it ever was before.

In the last Congress we appropriated $456,580. There was remaining over from the appropriations made in 1916 about $42,000, so that the department had $42,000 more to use in this work than they will have in this appropriation. That will be exhausted when June comes around, and it is absolutely necessary to increase this appropriation.

Not only that, but the law provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall establish grades not only upon corn and wheat, but also upon oats and other grain, and the Department of Agriculture is ready to promulgate the grades on oats and rice and other products, and it is necessary absolutely to have additional money in order to put this into force and effect and to comply with the law passed by the Congress. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Administration of the United States warehouse act: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States warehouse act, including the payment of such rent and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $35,000.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to correct a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RUBEY: Page 84, line 22, after the word "and," strike out "els" and insert in lieu thereof the word "elsewhere."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of April 26, 1910, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded Paris greens, lead arsenates, and other insecticides, and also fungicides, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," $94,790.

Total for enforcement of the insecticide act, $123,940.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to correct a typographical error. I think we may have passed over it, but if so, I ask unanimous consent to turn back to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LEVER: Page 86, at the beginning of line 12, strike out the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of August 20, 1912, as amended, entitled "An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests; to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes, $47,700;

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There has been a complaint coming from nurserymen about these quarantine orders, particularly with respect to bulbs and plants coming in from countries like Holland. Is there any reason why that embargo should be enforced at this time?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this matter was called to the attention of the committee on yesterday by the minority leader [Mr. MANN], and this morning he put into the RECORD a memorandum furnished by the Department of Agriculture covering the whole situation. I have not had a chance to see that memorandum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it has been explained.

Mr. LEVER. I assume it has been.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I do not ask the gentleman to go over a matter that has been gone over.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to make an inquiry on the same matter. Who has charge of this particular division?

Mr. LEVER. Dr. Marlatt.

Mr. FESS. I had an inquiry about the matter. I took my inquiry to a member of the gentleman's committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], who referred me to Dr. Marlatt. I wrote to him what I thought was a courteous letter, inclosing the letter from my informant, and asking whether he would care to state why this regulation had been made and whether it might not be avoided. Up to date I have received no word from him at all.

Mr. LEVER. How long ago was that?

Mr. FESS. Ten days ago.

Mr. LEVER. I would be very glad to make a note of it, and see what the trouble is. Dr. Marlatt is a very fine gentleman and a very courteous man, and I am satisfied that there must be some mistake about it, probably in the receipt of the letter.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have had some protests from local florists about the enforcement of the recent order prohibiting the importation from Belgium and other foreign countries of generally used plants, bulbs, and flowers. I took the matter up with Mr. Palmer and received immediate replies to my letters, explaining the reasons for the order at length. Mr. Palmer is the executive officer who has charge of the work of the enforcement of this new order.

Mr. LEVER. I am having the clerk make a note of this, and we will find out what is the trouble.

Mr. FESS. I thank the gentleman, because, as a rule, these matters are attended to quite expeditiously.

Mr. LEVER. Dr. Marlatt is a very, very fine gentleman. I wish the gentleman from Ohio might know him.

Mr. FESS. I was wondering whether there was any suggestion of discourtesy on the part of these experts toward the Congress.

Mr. LEVER. I am sure there is not in this case.

Mr. FESS. As the gentleman knows, I am not inclined to make complaints of this sort, but I have felt that there is a little fretfulness in the attitude of some of the members of these expert bureaus in reference to inquiries that are legitimate. It is not a matter of mischief, but simply to get information, so that we can intelligently answer our constituents without simply saying the matter will be considered. I do not like that sort of an answer.

Mr. LEVER. I am very glad the gentleman has mentioned this, and I am sure Dr. Marlatt will be very glad of it, too.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a number of the gentlemen of the House have spoken about this order of the Federal Horticultural Board, evidently thinking it is oppressive and wrong, and they would like to have Congress take some action looking to the rescinding of the order. I would suggest that they be very careful in expressions of opinion or in the attempt to influence the action of that board. It was with the greatest difficulty that we secured action by Congress respecting that matter. It was only after a long delay and a great deal of effort that we were able to secure the passage of the act that provides for the organization of the quarantine board and for its activities, and during the delay the country was suffering untold loss. That law was enacted generations too late. Almost every disease and pest that besets the crops of this country was brought from abroad, and its entrance into this country might have been prevented if we had had on the statute books such a law as was placed there a few years ago and if it had been administered as efficiently as that law is now administered. The brown-tail moth, the gypsy moth, the cotton-boll weevil, the pine blister rust, the San Jose scale—I might name a large number of them—were all brought from abroad, and their entrance into this country might have been prevented, and the loss that has been sustained by reason of their presence here might have been avoided. That loss the country has sustained is absolutely incalculable. Millions and hundreds of millions of dollars have been provided by appropriations of Congress to fight these pests after they reached this country. The losses of crops that the country has sustained, the expense that has been incurred by farmers and gardeners and orchardists throughout the country from these pests are simply beyond calculation, and much of the loss and expense might have been avoided.

To the gentlemen who would interfere with the operations of this particular law I may say that when the bill that became a law and is on the books was before the Committee on Agriculture many nurserymen appeared before that committee and opposed the bill strenuously. It was learned afterwards that shipments of fruit trees and shrubbery from some of the nurseries owned or represented by the men who sat in the committee room protesting against the passage of this act were found, on inspection on arrival at the destinations, to be literally alive with brown-tail moths and gypsy moths and other very dangerous pests—the very kind of insect pests that Congress was then and for years had been appropriating large sums of money to control or to limit their ravages.

This law provides only for the inspection of nursery stock brought here from foreign countries. The amount and value of it is insignificant. The value of the importations is insignificant as compared with the amount of money appropriated each and every year in the Agricultural bills for taking care of these troubles. I suggest to these gentlemen that they be careful not to interfere with the operation of that law or the work of the officials under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the establishment of the potato wart in eastern Pennsylvania, and to provide means for the extermination of this disease in Pennsylvania or elsewhere in the United States in cooperation with the State or States concerned, including rent outside the District of Columbia, employment of labor in the city of Washington or elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $50,000, which shall be immediately available.

In all, for general expenses, $97,700.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. May I inquire whether the next paragraph may not be considered in connection with the present paragraph? The following paragraph is really the mandatory provision of the act.

Mr. LEVER. It might be. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the following paragraph may be considered in connection with the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the following paragraph be considered in connection with the paragraph just read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the plant quarantine act approved August 20, 1912 (37 Stat., p. 315), is hereby amended by the addition of the following section:

"SEC. 15. That in order further to control and eradicate and to prevent the dissemination of dangerous plant diseases and insect infections and infestations no plant or plant products for or capable of propagation, including nursery stock, hereinafter referred to as plants and plant products, shall be moved or allowed to be moved, shipped, transported, or carried by any means whatever into or out of the District of Columbia except in compliance with such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture as hereinafter provided. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture, after investigation, shall determine that any plants and plant products in the District of Columbia are infested or infected with insect pests and diseases and that any place, articles, and substances used or connected therewith are so infested or infected, written notice thereof shall be given by him to the owner or person in possession or control thereof and such owner or person shall forthwith control or eradicate and prevent the dissemination of such insect pest or disease and shall remove, cut or destroy such infested and infected plants, plant products and articles and substances used or connected therewith, which are hereby declared to be nuisances, within the time and in the manner required in said notice or by the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture. Whenever such owner or person can not be found, or shall fail, neglect or refuse to comply with the foregoing provisions of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required to control and eradicate, and prevent dissemination of such insect pest or disease and to remove, cut or destroy infested or infected plants and plant products and articles and substances used or connected therewith, and the United States shall have an action of debt against such owner or persons for expenses incurred by the Secretary of Agriculture in that behalf. Employees of the Federal Horticultural Board are hereby authorized and required to inspect places, plants and plant products and articles and substances used or connected therewith whenever the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine that such inspections are necessary for the purposes of this section. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions and requirements of this section and of the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture made hereunder, and the notices given pursuant thereto, employees of the Federal Horticultural Board shall have power with a warrant to enter into or upon any place and open any bundle, package or other container of plants or plant products whenever they shall have cause to believe that infections or infestations of plant pests and diseases exist therein or thereon, and when such infections or infestations are found to exist, after notice by the Secretary of Agriculture to the owner or person in possession or control thereof and an opportunity by said owner or person to be heard, to destroy the infected or infested plants or plant products contained therein. The police court or municipal court of the District of Columbia shall have power, upon information supported by oath or affirmation showing probable cause for believing that there exists in any place, bundle, package or other container in the District of Columbia any plant or plant product which is infected or infested with plant pests or disease, to issue warrants for the search for and seizure of all such plants and plant products. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is hereby required, from time to time, to make and promulgate such rules and regulations as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section, and any person who shall move or allow to be moved, or shall ship, transport or carry, by any means whatever, any plant or plant products from or into the District of Columbia except in compliance with the rules and regulations prescribed under this section, shall be punished as is provided in section 10 of this act."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this proposal seems to be necessary, because of the fact that the plant-quarantine act does not apply to the District of Columbia. This is simply to extend the plant-quarantine act to the District of Columbia, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the plant-quarantine act applies to every part of the country, why would not the District of Columbia be immune?

Mr. LEVER. It seems to have been omitted; I don't know why.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not get my point. If the plant-quarantine act extends to all parts of the country save the little spot in the District of Columbia, why is not the District of Columbia immune?

Mr. LEVER. I see the force of the gentleman's suggestion, but let me read what the department says:

There is at present no law under which the movement of disease and infested nursery stock and other plants and plant products into the District of Columbia from surrounding or other States, or from the District of Columbia into surrounding or other States, which can be adequately controlled, nor is there statutory authority for control and extermination within the District of Columbia of plant pests and diseases. Such control is exercised under State laws in practically all the States in this country.

The immediate need of this legislation is evidenced by the fact that the oriental fruit moth which threatened seriously to affect the fruit industry of the United States gained entrance in large part through importations of ornamental stock into the District of Columbia, and there has been now within the District thousands of peach, cherry, plum, apple, and other trees infested with this insect, affording breeding sources from which the insect has spread into the adjacent States of Maryland and Virginia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has any estimate been made of the cost to the Government by extending the provisions of the quarantine act in the District of Columbia?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that there has not been. I judge that there will not be a great cost, because the appropriation is not increased.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bureau seeking increase of activities never asked for an increased appropriation at the time they asked to enlarge their powers; that comes afterwards.

Mr. LEVER. I would not think it would amount to very much.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I realize the critical condition that may arise in exceptional situations, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question with reference to a line which has been passed, but which has very peculiar phraseology. I refer to line 12, page 87, to the language—caused by the establishment of the potato wart.

The word "establishment" would indicate that there has been some governmental activity. Does it not mean the appearance of the potato wart?

Mr. LEVER. It means the coming in of and the fixing of itself. It has been here for some time; he has established himself in these little towns in Pennsylvania. It is a rather peculiar expression, I admit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Department of Agriculture, for routine and ordinary work, $29,847,162.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 91, line 4, at the end of line 4 add the following:

"Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay the salary or compensation of any official or employee of the Department of Agriculture in excess of the salary or compensation he is now receiving in the office or position in which he is now engaged or for the work he is now doing if he shall be entitled to an increase of salary or compensation or additional allowance of pay under or by virtue of any other act of Congress: Provided further, That this limitation shall not apply to persons employed outside the District of Columbia."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think it is not subject to the point of order. It is a limitation, and it is calculated to reduce the appropriation. It limits the right of expenditure of money. I think it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I am inclined to think that the amendment is not subject to the point of order, and I withdraw the reservation and ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close in 10 minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is an important matter, and I think that at this hour of the night no one is going to speak unnecessarily. If the gentleman will accept the amendment, I shall not debate it at all.

Mr. LEVER. No; I can not do that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was about to ask if the gentleman from South Carolina was going to oppose this amendment?

Mr. LEVER. I am.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Because this amendment would satisfy several gentlemen upon this side of the House who have been critical of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, the gentleman from Michigan to have 7 minutes and I to have 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto shall close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, as Members present know, points of order have been made to items carrying increases of salary and to increases made by way of transfer, and so forth. Some of the points of order have been sustained and others have not. There has been considerable criticism, and I think the opinion prevails generally that there have been wholesale increases of salaries in the Department of Agriculture, and that the policy of employing officials and others in the departments and of fixing their salaries and raising their salaries, authority to do so resting entirely with the Secretary and the heads of the bureaus, is a vicious practice, one over which Congress apparently has no authority whatever. I think everyone is impressed with the fact that that state of affairs exists, and that something ought to be done to correct it. There has been considerable discussion as to the allowance of additional compensation to Government employees and of how much increase should be allowed. Many of the committees of Congress that frame appropriation bills have had the matter before them. It is a matter that has been quite fully discussed. The Committee on Appropriations has considered it, and that committee finally brought in, in its legislative bill, a provision increasing by $240 the salaries of all clerks and other employees whose salaries are not now above $2,500 a year. That provision was adopted by a very large vote in this House, and we now learn that it has been approved by the body at the other end of the Capitol, practically without division, so that it may be taken as the sense of the Congress, expressed by a very large vote, that the increase of $240 per year is reasonable and as just as any flat rate of increase can be.

Now, one who is familiar with the Book of Estimates, especially one who has heard the testimony of bureau heads and other officials of the department as they have testified before the committee, knows that there are a very large number of increases arbitrarily made by the Secretary or by the heads of bureaus, increases of $100, $200, $300, and, as far as we are able to learn, no particular reason for such action existed, except that in the opinion of the Secretary or the head of the bureau some increases ought to be given. Now, in some cases an increase larger than $240 may have been proper. I am one who believes in paying good salaries and good wages, but if Congress is to exercise any influence or control over salaries in any respect whatever, unless Congress is willing to admit that it has no control, unless it gives it up and washes its hands of it entirely and is willing to let the heads of bureaus do just as they please, it must adopt some such provision or plan as is embodied in the amendment I have offered.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And I suggest that on the average the $240 per year will meet the requirements. There may be some injustice. We may make some mistakes; we may not be able to meet the situation as it applies or relates to some or a few employees in the department, but we will cure a great big glaring, inexcusable mistake and omission and failure of duty that we have been guilty of in years past. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Does this practice obtain in any department other than the Agricultural Department?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think it does, but I do not know to what extent.

Mr. LEVER. I will say it does.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. An amendment similar to this was offered by me in the committee and I think it met with general favor, but a representative high up in the Department of Agriculture came there and objected to it strenuously, saying we were making an exception of the Department of Agriculture and that we were taking away from the Secretary and the heads of the bureaus discretion to fix salaries just as they pleased. They wished unlimited and unrestrained discretion. They wished no interference by Congress.

I should dislike very much to be responsible for a provision that will prevent any employee or official getting all he is entitled to, but I feel sure if the amendment shall be adopted there will be little injustice, and I feel also very strongly that failure on our part to take action in this important matter will be unjustifiable; we must do something of this kind. We have neglected too long.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by my friend from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] is probably a very much more important amendment than Members of the House who are not familiar with the situation may think. The question of the control of lump-sum salaries was fought out on the floor of this House some six years ago. I think it was when I first became chairman of the committee. The fight that is now being made by the gentleman from Michigan and others was inaugurated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Paige], a very influential member of the committee. By the action of the House itself this policy or plan of controlling lump-sum salaries was agreed upon. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, acting with individual members of the committee, has tried repeatedly to find some remedy for this situation. I would not want at 10.30 at night, without a very, very thorough consideration of an amendment of this importance, to have it attached to this bill. The policy of the Department of Agriculture is not different from the policy in other departments. I do not want this proposition of absolutely shutting out the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to promote some worthy scientific research man who has performed a great service, who has made a great discovery. I would not want the Secretary of Agriculture, and I do not believe my friend from Ohio would want him, to be foreclosed from giving that man a reasonable promotion.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Men who are capable of making some great discovery, a little different from the post-office clerk and the rural carrier and the ordinary clerk in class 1, class 4, or class 2. You must hold out some incentive for these men to work and sit up at night and figure, think, look, and inquire, if you are going to have any progress in research work, in scientific work.

If you are going to fix these salaries hidebound, so that the Secretary has no discretion at all to encourage these men, you will throw a wet blanket over the entire research force of the Department of Agriculture; and that is true of every other department of the Government. And my hope is that you will not be carried away by the idea that you are going to save a great sum of money by undertaking to do something in haste that has not been considered carefully by any committee of the House. I think the best policy would be to allow this matter to go over in the hope that this Congress before it adjourns will create a joint committee, which was suggested by the Committee on Appropriations in the legislative bill, to go into the whole matter of salaries and see if some way of adjusting them can be found that will be equable and will not tend to retard the progress of our research workers.

I hope the amendment of the gentleman will be voted down.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina has made a very good speech. There is only one trouble with it, and that is that it does not relate to the situation which the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is intended to remedy. The scientific employees of the Government, practically all of them, receive salaries in excess of $2,500 a year, and the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan does not relate to those employees at all, because it is restricted by its specific terms to those employees of the Government who are affected by the provision granting an increase of salary of $240 per year, and that provision is limited to employees receiving less than $2,500 a year. And, I think, every member of the Committee on Agriculture is impressed with the idea that some way must be found by which Congress can exercise some control over the fixing of salaries of that bureau. It has been perfectly evident in the debate here to-night that there is not any way now to do it. The salary of men employed under the lump-sum rolls are fixed by the Secretary, and those men are automatically transferred to the statutory roll. Under the decision of the Chair no point of order lies against that procedure. There is not any way at all that it can be done, except in the way in which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] undertook to do it, and that is by making a motion to reduce each specific salary. And that will only apply in those cases where salaries are fixed in the statutory roll.

The amendment of the gentleman from Michigan may work some injustice. Perhaps it will. But it will not generally prevent what seems to me to be a very great abuse, and one of the ways in which that abuse comes about is by increasing the salary of the top man and then moving everybody up a peg without any reference to whether or not the individual or individuals have done anything which justifies the increase. It is a purely automatic proposition that goes on under these lump-sum appropriations, in an endless circle, to which there is neither a beginning nor an end, and no way to make a beginning or an end. It seems to me if Congress is to have any control at all over this situation it is bound now or at some time to indicate its intention to have that control, and the sooner it does the sooner the department will realize that it is up to the department to pay some attention to the enactments of Congress.

I think there is a very great tendency in the department, grown up largely from the war and the necessities of the war, to disregard the express enactments of Congress. I asked one of the gentlemen who came before our committee if he could suggest any language by which we could get done the specific thing we wanted done in the way we wanted it done. He could not suggest any, and I am frank to say I can not. That is the situation all up and down the line. We pass these laws and we undertake to fix the specific way in which a thing should be done, and we find when it has been done by the department it has been done in a way in which we least intended.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman confesses he can find no remedy for this situation and no language which will cure it, and in that connection I wish to say there is no man in this Congress who can draw language to fit a situation more accurately than the gentleman from Minnesota. Now, that being true—I do not ask the gentleman to confess it—does the gentleman think it wise, at 10.35 o'clock p. m. here, to undertake to remedy a situation which has been going on from time immemorial with an amendment offered to the House?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am greatly obliged to the gentleman for his compliment, but this amendment does not seek to remedy any situation except to recommit it this year, and this year we have provided all the increases which men are automatically entitled to. This amendment does not go beyond this year. It seems to me it only meets the situation with which we are confronted now. If the $240 provision did not apply, I think I would not support his amendment, but as long as it does apply I do think his amendment is justified.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will recall that in the urgent deficiency bill approved on October 6, 1917, more than a year ago, when we were providing a lump sum——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for two minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then I ask recognition, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The debate has closed.

Mr. LEVER. No. The debate has not been closed. Does the gentleman from Michigan want two minutes?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in two minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, no. If the gentleman is going to prevent debate in that way, I shall object.

Mr. LEVER. Then I move, Mr. Chairman, that the debate close now.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that if he does that he will have to have a quorum here to-night.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know that I can conclude in two minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I entirely agree with the gentleman from South Carolina that this is an important matter. The difficulty is that the gentleman from South Carolina does not want to spend any time on it.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina and the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] and the attention of the committee to the fact that this is not an unheard-of proposition that the gentleman from Michigan is offering. The gentleman seems to think that the Department of Agriculture is being discriminated against. Nothing of the kind. In the urgent deficiency bill approved October 6, 1917, when we were beginning to provide these great emergency funds for the great work of carrying on the war, we included this language, and it seems to have worked well and it seems to have been satisfactory, because it has been continued in the bill since. Section 7 provides:

> That no civil employee in any of the executive departments or other Government establishments, or who has been employed therein within the period of one year next preceding his proposed employment in any other executive department or other Government establishment, shall be employed hereafter and paid from a lump-sum appropriation in any other executive department or other Government establishment at an increased rate of compensation.

No matter how great an expert there may have been in the Department of Agriculture or in the Department of Commerce that the Shipping Board wanted, they could not take him and give him a salary commensurate with the work he was to perform. I read further from that section:

> And no civil employee in any of the executive departments or other Government establishments or who has been employed therein within the period of one year next preceding his proposed employment in any other executive department or other Government establishment and who may be employed in another executive department or other Government establishment shall be granted an increase in compensation within the period of one year following such reemployment: Provided, That the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be considered a Government establishment for the purposes of this section.

Some cases under it came to my attention, and it seemed to me to be a hardship; but notwithstanding that, the department has gotten along. We won the war, and nowhere did the machinery break down by reason of that provision.

I want to repeat that the Department of Agriculture is not to be discriminated against, but its employees are to be paid on the same basis as those employed under other lump sums that we have appropriated.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Does not this statute apply to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. CRAMTON. This is to cover cases of transfer from one establishment or department to a new department created by reason of the war, but the principle is just the same.

Mr. LEVER. That applies to the Department of Agriculture and has to do with transfers entirely, and does not hit this thing within 40 feet.

Mr. CRAMTON. A man transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Shipping Board could not receive an increase of pay, although his duties might be more responsible in the Shipping Board than those in the Department of Agriculture. The principle is the same. There is more justice in the provision suggested by my colleague than in the provision that has been the law now for something over one year and three months.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LEVER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 53.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is rejected, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. LEVER. I ask that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] take my place as a teller.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes 58.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To make surveys to determine the actual distribution of the pink bollworm in Mexico and to exterminate local infestations in Mexico near the border of the United States, in cooperation with the Mexican Government or local Mexican authorities, $25,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee why it is necessary to divide into five parts this appropriation for the eradication of the pink bollworm?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman's inquiry, when the estimate for the eradication of the pink bollworm was submitted a year ago it was in a lump-sum item, just like the foot-and-mouth disease item which has just been read. The committee, however, felt that Congress itself was desirous that these large sums should be as far as possible segregated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the total amount of the five items?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is $595,800.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then that is the amount divided into these various items?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is a special kind of work to be done under each item, or is it all of the same general character?

Mr. LEVER. Each item sets out the kind of work that is to be done, but it all goes to the proposition of getting rid of the pink bollworm.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This being a lump-sum appropriation, who will fix the salaries?

Mr. LEVER. The salaries will be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There will be no legal limitation on him at all?

Mr. LEVER. None except the limit of $4,500, which is the maximum that can be paid to any employee of this character.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Four thousand five hundred dollars for taking in the experts and those gentlemen who have ideas, to whom the gentleman from South Carolina referred a moment ago?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So, in order to encourage the $4,500 men, the Secretary will probably advance those who are paid the lower salaries, as their ideas develop from time to time in the work of eradication?

Mr. LEVER. I think the Secretary of Agriculture is a decent, honest man, and I do not believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania would like to lay that charge at his door. I believe that if one of these men should make a discovery that would be worth while in reference to this very dangerous pest, the Secretary of Agriculture would be warranted in making some kind of a promotion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want the gentleman to think that I am reflecting upon the honesty of any man who takes an appointment under this paragraph, but I do reflect upon the system by which the salaries are fixed without the knowledge of Congress.

Mr. LEVER. And yet the gentleman for 12 years has been here and has not revised this system. Part of the time his party has been in power and part of the time out of power.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes; I have criticized the system. I never wanted to interfere with the work done by the department, but I have always criticized the system of the department in assuming jurisdiction that Congress did not confer upon it.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman realizes, of course, that it is very easy to criticize. It is very much more difficult to construct an affirmative proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am of the opinion that if the gentleman from South Carolina would accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], proposing that hereafter salaries should be kept within the legislative limitation, we would all be satisfied, those of us who have been criticizing and those who have been defending the department.

Mr. LEVER. I expressed my views on that proposition a moment ago, and I have not revised them since.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know the gentleman expressed his ideas, and I have simply taken this time to bring out these few additional points in the hope and expectation that a motion to recommit may be made that will give gentlemen of the House an opportunity to vote on the question whether we shall continue a practice which some of us think is objectionable, a practice which holds only in the Department of Agriculture, or whether we want to keep all of the departments, including the Department of Agriculture, within the limitations set by Congress.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman realizes that this appropriation is exactly on a par with the appropriation of $1,000,000 which has just been passed in the preceding paragraph, for the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman did not raise any objection to that; I wonder why.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Because the total appropriation seems to have been divided in a way that is susceptible of explanation. It is all for the purpose of eradicating the boll weevil.

Mr. LEVER. The other was the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the difference between the two appropriations, so that the Secretary of Agriculture will have five distinct ways of employing people and expending the money, and that is what I wanted to inquire about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When did the Mexican pink boll weevil first appear?

Mr. LEVER. About 18 months or 2 years ago. The current law is the first act of Congress that carries any appropriation for its extermination.

Mr. FESS. That has not been carried very long?

Mr. LEVER. No; and I will say to the gentleman that the situation is in very good shape.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion and under such conditions as he may prescribe, supply to any municipality or public institution not more than one American bison from any surplus which may exist in any herd under the control of the Department of Agriculture; and, in order to aid in the propagation of the species, animals may be loaned to or exchanged with other owners of American bison.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I suppose it is the purpose that the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe and require the payment of any expense to the Government by municipalities or institutions that receive the bison.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; that was the intention.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman have any objection to an amendment expressing the intention of the committee by inserting after the word "discretion" "without expense to the Government"?

Mr. LEVER. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order, and offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 96, line 17, after the word "discretion," insert the words "without expense to the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whenever, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that the expenses of travel can be reduced thereby, he may, in lieu of actual traveling expenses, under such regulations as he may prescribe, authorize the payment of not to exceed 2½ cents per mile for a motorcycle or 7 cents per mile for an automobile, used for necessary travel on official business.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. The paragraph is subject to a point of order, and I concede it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter in carrying on the activities of the Department of Agriculture involving cooperation with State, county, and municipal agencies, associations of farmers, individual farmers, universities, colleges, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, or other local associations of business men, business organizations, and individuals within the State, Territory, district, or insular possession in which such activities are to be carried on, moneys contributed from such outside sources, except in the case of the authorized activities of the Forest Service, shall be paid only through the Secretary of Agriculture or through State, county, or municipal agencies or local farm bureaus of like organizations cooperating for the purpose with the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I wish to inquire what is the real purpose of this new legislation?

Mr. LEVER. Some three years ago an amendment was inserted in one of the bills—the legislative bill, probably—in the Senate, to the effect that none of these contributions could be made, except through county, State, or municipal authority. That would eliminate the contribution of private individuals in the matter of farm administration or county agent work; it would eliminate the proposition of a market association contributing anything to the salary of the Federal employee, the man in charge of the work. For the purpose of avoiding that situation this amendment was suggested. The act carrying the prohibition did not go into effect until two years after its passage, so that the various departments might ascertain just what effect it might have on the activities.

Under the administrative work connected with the boll weevil, States cooperate with individuals, with farmers and corporations, with agricultural colleges and various institutions within the State that they may be permitted to make these contributions and help the work along. The truth about the matter is, various institutions, firms, and corporations within the State are supplementing very largely the work of the Federal Government. We feel that in these activities we need the cooperation of these various individuals and corporations that I have mentioned. This was aimed primarily at the general education board, as the gentleman knows. The Department of Agriculture is not and was not at that time in any alliance with the general education board. Unless the amendment is agreed to, it will greatly hamper the work of the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the purpose of the last or next to the last paragraph of the bill aimed practically so as not to permit governmental funds to be used in payment of persons employed under State or municipal authority?

Mr. LEVER. Next to the last?

Mr. STAFFORD. I refer to the paragraph following the one under consideration. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order, and will make my inquiry upon the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

The officials and employees of the Department of Agriculture engaged in the activities described in the preceding paragraph and paid in whole or in part out of funds contributed as provided therein, and the persons, corporations, or associations making contributions as therein provided, shall not be subject to the proviso contained in the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1917, in Thirty-ninth Statutes at Large, at page 1106; nor shall any official or employee engaged in the cooperative activities of the Forest Service, or the persons, corporations, or associations contributing to such activities be subject to the said proviso.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on this I reserve the point of order. This is the paragraph about which I sought to obtain information in respect to its effect in exempting certain employees from the effect of the limitation as carried in the legislative bill of a year ago.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], who was largely responsible for this draft, I will call upon to answer.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would say that the proviso in the legislative act to which this provision refers contained a prohibition against any employee or official of the Government receiving a contribution to his salary except from a State, county, or other municipal corporation. That prohibition was so broad that it would totally disrupt and to a certain and considerable extent prevent the carrying on of the cooperative activities of the department, carried out under items, for instance, as the farmers' extension or demonstration work item. The provision to which the gentleman has reserved the point of order only extends the proviso in the legislative act so as to permit contributions to be made not only through State, county, and municipal agencies, but also through farm-bureau associations and similar associations. Under the proviso to which the gentleman has reserved the point of order it would not be legal for a contribution to be made directly to a Government employee as a part of his salary, nor would it be legal for any organization to make a contribution to the salary of a Government employee, except in the manner and method provided in this particular paragraph. It is only to that extent that an exemption is made of the employees of the Department of Agriculture in respect to the proviso in the legislative bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 52, line 23, which was passed over, being the paragraph in respect to experiments in the manufacture of rare chemicals.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin will make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to return to page 62, line 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to page 62, to the paragraph beginning with line 24. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, this is the proposition we discussed this morning—the superintendent of distribution. The gentleman from Iowa reserved the point of order on that, and he has investigated the matter——

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say upon investigation I find that the gentleman now holding this position is a very worthy and deserving clerk, also that the one who is to take his place, the $2,000 place, is also deserving of promotion, and for that reason I shall not insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15018—the Agricultural appropriation bill—and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill, and it is not here.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my reparks in the RECORD on the subject of the problems of the peace conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. Consent not having been granted to these gentlemen, I wish to reserve the right to object to inquire whether the remarks of the gentlemen are on the bill just passed?

The SPEAKER. Yes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania extending his remarks on the problems of the peace conference. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of the Seventy-seventh Division of the Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. KNOX as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ZINC MINING INDUSTRY.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I present a resolution of the House of Representatives of Missouri and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator have it read?

Mr. SPENCER. There is no need of reading it unless some one calls for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., January 31, 1919.

Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER,
Care Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Am instructed by the Missouri House of Representatives to inform you that there has been offered into and adopted by the house the following resolutions:

"Whereas the zinc-mining industry of southwestern Missouri is the greatest metal-mining industry in the entire State; and

"Whereas that industry is now crippled to the extent of the closing down of 95 per cent of all the mines in said district, said closing down of the mines being occasioned by the vast importations of zinc ore into the United States from foreign countries, amounting in the last four years ending June 30, 1918, to 825,000 tons, being approximately three times the normal prewar production of the entire Joplin district, including Kansas, Oklahoma, and Missouri; and

"Whereas there are now approximately 350,000 tons of zinc ore on the docks in Australia awaiting shipment; and

"Whereas Mexico has a potential power of production of at least 150,000 tons annually, which must find its market in the United States; and

"Whereas zinc ore concentrates have also been imported into the United States in the last three or four years from 15 different countries, representing every continent and grand division of the world: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Missouri, That we believe it to be the patriotic duty of the Legislature of the State of Missouri to memorialize Congress of the United States by special resolution asking that there be at once incorporated into the pending revenue bill a provision providing for a protective tariff of 2 cents per pound on the metallic contents of zinc ore in order to keep out further importations of zinc ore and allow the zinc-mining industry of the United States to live and be again built up to its normal condition; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to our Senators and Representatives at Washington, and that they be asked to protect the mining industry of the United States, and that they support and vote for a bill providing for a tariff of 2 cents per pound on the metallic contents of zinc ore imported into the United States."

W. G. KITCHEN,

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN TEXAS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I am in receipt of the following telegram, which I desire to read to the Senate:

AUSTIN, TEX., January 22.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington:

I have the honor to transmit to you, with request that you read the same in the Hall of the Senate, the following joint resolution adopted by the house and concurred in by the senate of the State on Monday, January 20, 1919:

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Texas (the Senate concurring), That—

"Whereas the thirty-fifth legislature in its fourth called session, in response to the unmistakable sentiments of the voters of Texas, awarded to the women of Texas the privilege of suffrage in the primaries; and

"Whereas in the Democratic primaries of July 27, 1918, the women of Texas spoke clearly and emphatically in behalf of civic righteousness and honor in its public servants, thus giving trustworthy proof of their eminent fitness for the ballot without any limitations whatsoever except such as may apply to all voters alike: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved (the senate concurring), That the United States Senate is hereby respectfully but urgently requested to act immediately and favorably upon the woman-suffrage amendment, which has already received proper recognition by the House of Representatives; and be it further

"Resolved, That such action is in full accordance with enlightened sentiment that sees no reason why further delay should ensue in this regard; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the presiding officer of the United States Senate and to the Senators representing this State therein."

C. D. MIMS,
Acting Secretary of State.

Mr. President, the progress of suffrage sentiment in Texas has been remarkable. In 1916 the Texas State Democratic convention adopted a resolution opposing the nation-wide suffrage amendment. In 1917 the Texas Legislature declined to submit an amendment to the State constitution for suffrage. About a year thereafter the legislature adopted an amendment granting to Texas women suffrage in the primaries. In the primaries last year 386,000 women voted, and an overwhelming majority of the precinct and county conventions declared for the national suffrage amendment. The State Democratic convention in 1918 declared in favor of State and National suffrage.

In January of this year the Texas Legislature submitted an amendment to the State constitution for suffrage, and a vote will be taken on its adoption at an early date. I believe that a similar process is taking place, or will take place, in every other Southern State, and I want to express the earnest hope and the conviction that before this session adjourns the Congress of the United States will submit the suffrage amendment for ratification.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. I have a few minutes left in which to discuss this measure, but I am compelled to be absent from the Chamber for a few moments, so I yield to the Senator from Colorado, and will take the floor upon the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, with regard to the pending amendment, I am not disposed to indulge in any criticism. Personally I think the proposed experiment which the appropriation in that amendment is designed to enable the department to make is a highly desirable one. The expansion of aviation is one of the subjects which the Government should encourage in every direction. The three leading nations of Europe are applying their experiences in the war to the promotion of aviation not only for the carriage of the mail but for its utilization in every possible commercial way. If we fail to pursue the same course, we shall very soon find ourselves as far behind in modern aviation as we were when Germany declared war against France. I believe that the development of aviation will, if properly pursued, result in the creation of an offensive and defensive system of warfare that will largely obviate the necessity of a continued coast defense and of a large Navy. Hence this particular appropriation commends itself very strongly to my judgment, and I wish it were possible to be as well disposed toward other items of the bill.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet I propose to discuss for a few minutes the good-roads amendment, and then, so far as I am concerned, I shall be prepared, as usual, to vote with the minority.

A point of order was yesterday raised against section 5 of the bill upon the ground that it proposed general legislation to an appropriation bill. The point was not sustained. The reasons assigned for the ruling of the Chair have added to my humble store of knowledge; I have gained something in the way of experience and feel, therefore, compensated for the effort to secure the excision of the section.

I have learned, Mr. President, that to expand a law is to limit it, and doubtless upon the theory that the more debts a man contracts the more money he owes. I have also learned that if an appropriation otherwise objectionable is appended to an amendment which amounts to general legislation, the existence of the appropriation cures the objection and makes the amendment perfectly legitimate under the rules.

The rules of the Senate, Mr. President, are the most cumbrous and fossilized body of ancient procedure, but subject entirely to the will of the majority, that can be found in any other legislative assembly. The application of the rules depends entirely upon the pleasure of or the interests of a majority of the Senate. Therefore they might just as well be swept, as they should long ago have been, into the limbo of the past and give way to a series of modern regulations having the merit of possible consistency and free from the complicated and irreconcilable series of decisions which have construed them in every possible way, the construction being, for the most part, directed and determined by the interest which a majority had in the particular subject of discussion.

I will address myself at the outset to the effect of section 5, which will, I presume, be enacted into law. This section my distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is pleased to call a limitation upon the method of expenditure of the $200,000,000 which are provided for in the succeeding sections. It amends section 2 of the existing law by the substitution of a very simple phrase, consisting of five words. I read:

The term "rural post roads," as used in section 2 of said act, shall be construed to mean any public road which is now used, or may be made suitable.

If this becomes a law, it commits the United States to the improvement of every cattle trail and every cow path and every right of way in the United States. It makes the alleged appropriation for the construction and improvement of post roads one of the most expensive fictions in Federal legislation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that, in view of the fact that every proposition to which the Federal Government appropriates money must originate in the State, must have the approval of the State authorities, of the State highway commission, and until the road has been located and surveyed and an estimate of its cost made, the Government of the United States has no concern about it; and when they have done that the proposition must be by them submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture, and if he approves it half of the sum provided to be appropriated by the Government may be available, I ask the Senator if he thinks that there is any State highway commission or any State authority that is going to undertake to build a road for the construction of which it must furnish half of the money, while the Government furnishes the other half, of the character which he indicates in his remarks, and provide that such road shall be built anywhere and everywhere, along pig trails in every section of the country?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this legislation will inevitably be followed by other legislation relieving the States from any responsibility in the matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But there is no suggestion like that in this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, there is no suggestion like that in this bill, and there was no suggestion of this amendment in the act of 1916. We proceed by natural law of progression in our advance upon the outposts of the United States Treasury. To storm it in the open daylight would be impossible. Consequently we reach it by a system of sapping and mining.

The Senator from Alabama has correctly stated the proposition; there is no doubt about that. These projects must originate with the State authorities; but my experience is that every State project having a sufficient amount of political influence behind it, every project capable of commanding a respectable number of votes, will receive favorable consideration by the State authorities, and especially so when, as the law is, 50 per cent of the money required for the improvement comes from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I wish to ask the Senator, for information, if it is true that some of the States have already petitioned to be relieved from their share of the contribution for this purpose?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know; but I do know that a few citizens of my State suggested sometime ago the propriety of my making the effort, their view then being that, inasmuch as these roads were post roads, and post roads being under the sole jurisdiction of the United States, it was wrong to ask the States to bear any part of the burden of improvement.

Mr. President, I do not care how preposterous one of these propositions may be, it can be supported before the State authorities upon precisely the argument made by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] in support of this appropriation. Good roads mean prosperity; good roads mean better schools; good roads mean more intelligent neighborhoods; in fact, it is difficult to imagine what good roads do not mean in moral, social, financial, and intellectual improvement and development. Of course, I am not gainsaying the fact that good roads are a great asset to any community and to any State; there is no doubt about that; and I would be in favor of constructing good roads and aiding them with Government appropriations liberally if we had the money at present to devote to that purpose. But I will refer to that feature of the subject later.

The theory upon which the Government of the United States is to interest itself in road construction and the basis of the act of 1916 was that under the Constitution Congress, being authorized to establish post offices and post roads, is justified in making these appropriations for that purpose.

That is a doctrine which we all know historically was successfully controverted in the early days of the Republic, when State rights really amounted to something, when the people were too jealous of them to trade them off for Federal money, and when it was the opinion of a majority of the people of the United States that the language of the Constitution was not sufficiently broad to justify the use of the public funds in the making of public improvements. Of course, as the Treasury expanded and the cupidity of the people was enlarged by an occasional appropriation here and there, they gradually forgot the rights of the States and of constitutional limitations in the mad race for the portals of the Treasury, so that now the doctrines then so ably asserted and maintained by our forefathers we at present regard with a sort of good-natured contempt.

I accept the proposition in its entirety that the power to establish post offices and post roads carries with it the power to make these appropriations, but this amendment leaves that situation entirely behind, and it is now proposed to devote the public money to the construction of any road that may be recommended by the local authorities. I do not think we need apprehend that if the highway commission of my State, or of the State of South Dakota, or of the State of Tennessee, makes a recommendation to the Department of Agriculture that department will turn it down. Those things may occur, and so may miracles, but it is safe, I think, to say that any project which passes muster with the people of a State will be accepted by the Agricultural Department or by any other department having jurisdiction of the subject. That department is no worse and no better than the others. I do not know any element of economy that can be discovered in a single department of the Government with a 10,000-power magnifying microscope. In other words, it is as scarce there as it is here. These improvements give employment to additional numbers of men; they bring money to the doors of the taxpayers; they are a good thing for the community, and hence why limit them to post roads? Why not make them applicable to any old road, or any old trail, or all of them together?

That is what this amendment means if it is adopted. It may be that the committee place another interpretation upon it; I am not impugning their good faith; but if I am mistaken about that, then it is perfectly legitimate for me to characterize this little clause of section 5 as a "joker."

Mr. KENYON. As a what?

Mr. THOMAS. As a "joker"—a term which in modern times has received a technical definition that has virtually superseded the broader and original one.

I am not accusing the committee of inserting a "joker" in this bill—far from it—but the effect of the phrase, if crystallized into a statute, will be the same as though it were put in by some interested party and, because of its harmless appearance, escape detection. If we are to have it, let us take it with our eyes open; let us harbor no delusions concerning its practical operation.

But the Senator from Virginia says that the amendment reported by the committee is a limitation upon the appropriation and not an expansion of it. It is true that it has a limit, which is the blue sky; and in the trackless highways of the atmosphere now traversed and soon to be more frequently occupied by fleets of airships it is possible to argue that the limitation being to things terrestrial, there is something beyond, the noninclusion of which makes the term one of limitation and not one of expansion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he would not accept an amendment like this, which I think will meet his views, if they can be met at all: Strike out the words "which is now used," in line 22, page 36, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "the major portion of which is now used or forms a connecting link in any road now so used"?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think that helps the situation, but it does not entirely cure it. I am satisfied with the existing law, and I do not want to say to my friend, the Senator from Alabama, that I would accept it, because I am opposed to the appropriation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that; but I thought perhaps the Senator might be less opposed to it if this amendment were adopted.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that suggestion modifies it. It is an improvement upon the phraseology of the section; but the old law, Mr. President, states the situation as it ought to be. That confines these appropriations to post roads, and that is where these appropriations should be confined.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not necessary. I will answer the Senator in my own time.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want the Senator to feel that I have the slightest objection to his doing so at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; that is all right. I do not feel that way.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I stated yesterday that the trouble is that there might be a post road of 25 or 30 miles over which rural delivery is going, and there might be a little link in it of 2 or 3 miles or 1 mile which the Government can not improve on account of the narrow interpretation put upon the word "may." They say you must get an agreement or an assurance from the Post Office Department that you are going to run the mails there.

Mr. THOMAS. I know that the Senator so stated.

Mr. SWANSON. The only desire is, in the case of those small links of road which for short distances connect up rural routes or post routes or star routes, to permit those to be improved like the rest of them.

Mr. THOMAS. I know that the Senator stated that yesterday, and that, no doubt, is the purpose which he has in mind and which may need legislation to meet it; but I want to know why the Government of the United States must use its Treasury for the purpose of perfecting little fragments of roads in the counties and communities of the States. Is there not enough local enterprise—there used to be a little with the people of the United States—is there not enough left in the communities through which these roads are to run to meet the expenses of taking care of these little patches?

The chairman shakes his head. I am inclined to believe that he is not overpessimistic. I am afraid that is the case, because we have reached the point where if a man's family gets the colic he wants the Congress of the United States to make an appropriation under which the Agricultural Department can inquire into the cause of the malady and recommend a cure at the Government expense. From the cradle to the grave, from the beginning of the teething process until man pays the debt of nature, we are now coming to the Government of the United States for financial aid. Our initiative, our independence, our enterprise—those qualities which made the Anglo-Saxon the ruler of the world and by which men of independence everywhere in the past were able to get along—are either dormant or disappearing. If anything happens now, let us run to the Government. Only make the appropriation big enough; let it cover enough territory, and there is no question whatever about what Congress will do.

The question was asked day before yesterday by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] where the money was coming from. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], with that candor which has always distinguished him, said, "That is the business of the Finance Committee." That is true. I happen to be an unfortunate member of that committee. I do not exaggerate when I say that I have a pile of protests, as a humble member of that committee, bulking equivalent to the cubical contents of this desk, protesting against every item of taxation in that bill. To use a homely expression, the whole country is kicking like a steer against it, and yet they have not enterprise enough to organize and demand that their rights be respected in the matter of appropriations. But we may be sure that those desiring the appropriations are organized. There are eight hundred and sixty-four thousand organizations in the United States, and I think eight hundred and sixty-three thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine of them want appropriations from the Treasury, and get them, Mr. President, either through threat, persuasion, entreaty, or all of them combined.

The governor of Pennsylvania, in his inaugural the other day, called attention to the fact that if the revenue bill became a law the taxes of the State of Pennsylvania for the year 1918 would exceed one thousand millions, or more than it has cost to run that State since the days of the Revolution down to the present time; and that is true, Mr. President, of practically every State in the Union. But what do we care? What have they property for if it is not to give it to the Government of the United States? [Laughter.] We want it, and we are going to have it, and we are going to build roads so as to give employment to poor people who have no employment; and from now on we shall build all kinds of roads, at all times, everywhere.

Mr. President, I am not criticizing this bill only. What I say applies to the great bulk of the legislation that is now pending.

Now, let us come to section 6. The Chair held yesterday that inasmuch as section 6 was not subject to a point of order, therefore section 5 was not subject to a point of order. I do not exaggerate. Let the Chair read the RECORD. I suggested that section 6 was subject to a point of order, and I still think so; but a point of order against it, made before a Senate two-thirds of which want this appropriation for their constituents, will simply be a waste of time and of breath.

Section 6, Mr. President, appropriates two hundred insignificant millions of dollars to carry out the provisions of section 5. The act of 1916 appropriated a comparatively insignificant sum—only seventy-five millions—for the same purpose, to be expended in the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920. This adds to that appropriation by 266⅔ per cent. In other words, the appropriation of seventy-five millions, before the second installment has been used, is increased by 266⅔ per cent. Puzzle for the schoolboy: If the public-roads system, beginning with seventy-five millions, requires an increase of 266⅔ per cent in two years, how much will it cost in 10 or in 5?

Of course, Mr. President, roads build schoolhouses. We must not forget that. They uplift the neighborhood. We must not forget that. They are an evidence of progress. We must not forget that. They do not affect anybody adversely except the man who pays the money; and what the devil do we care for him? Let him kick. It is good for him. He needs the exercise. What do we care, as long as we have the money? [Laughter.]

Mr. President, my good friend, the Secretary of the Navy, is one of the leading pacifists of the world and an advocate of the league of nations, based upon the doctrine that it means perpetual and everlasting peace, restore the brotherhood of man, and inaugurate the dawn of the millennium, not for a thousand but for a hundred thousand years; but he proposes that Congress shall give him twelve hundred and fifty billions to build more battleships.

Mr. SMOOT. Twelve hundred and fifty millions.

Mr. THOMAS. Twelve hundred and fifty millions; yes. I am so accustomed to talking about billions that it is difficult to rid myself of the habit. That is what it will be after a while, anyway.

Mr. SMOOT. It is now.

Mr. THOMAS. I know, but this appropriation is twelve hundred and fifty millions; and here arises another query: If a pacifist Secretary wants to increase the Navy at the rate of twelve hundred and fifty millions, in God's name what would a belligerent Secretary of the Navy want? [Laughter.]

Now, we have a pacifist Secretary of War—one of the best friends I have and a man who deserves a great deal more credit than he has received for his management of affairs during the progress of the greatest war the world ever knew. He also believes that a league of nations means perpetual peace, but he wants a trifle of nine hundred or one thousand millions for Army equipment, vigilant, active, and disciplined, evidently to fight the powers of heaven and of hell, because no others are to interfere with this coming age of perpetual peace, and, of course, that costs this additional sum of money.

Our air development will be expensive. Some of us who are not entirely of the view that wars have disappeared forever believe that we should have a development of those more modern implements of war, which I think are the best things in the world to insure peace. That will cost a lot of money.

Mr. President, to show how our natural expenses are to increase let me refer to a letter a day or two ago informing me that a new worm had made its appearance. [Laughter.] It is called the corn borer. It is a sort of a first cousin to the Treasury borer [laughter], except that the Treasury borer has claws and teeth, while this seems to be equipped only with a mouth and with an insatiable appetite for tender corn. This letter informs me that it is necessary to secure a large appropriation, to be crystallized into the Agricultural bill, for the purpose of dissuading the corn borer from proceeding with his ghastly and damnable work, and that unless a great army of greenbacks is soon marshaled in formidable military array against this corn borer he is going to become as invincible as the German Army, and instead of there being a plethora of corn we will have none whatever.

Mr. President, that is a dismal prospect to everybody except those like the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I can understand how they would regard with philosophic equanimity the disappearance of corn from the products of the world, because whisky is made of corn, and if there is no corn there can be no corn whisky; and I wondered, when I read that letter, whether there might not be some sort of a conspiracy between those distinguished Senators and this infernal corn borer. [Laughter.] I have no doubt that the Senator from Texas, who always supports everything that is in the Agricultural bill, will declare war against the corn borer in the shape of an appropriation, notwithstanding that he seems to be an unconscious but powerful prohibition ally.

Seriously, Mr. President, when we take all the proposed appropriations now pending and add them together and look at them in cold blood, we will probably, like Lord Clive, stand astonished at our own moderation. They amount to thousands of millions. And they will pass, because it is said the country needs them. It will make money plentiful and give employment to returning soldiers. These seem to be the chief arguments for them if arguments be needed.

Yesterday's Post contained this item:

WAR COST CONTINUES—$1,600,000,000 IN JANUARY, EXCLUSIVE OF LOANS—PRODUCTION BEING REDUCED—BOND ISSUE OF FIVE OR SIX BILLIONS NECESSARY, AS PAYMENTS ARE MADE BY BORROWING AGAINST FUTURE—$26,356,000,000 AGGREGATE EXPENSE DURING WAR MONTHS.

Although nearly three months have passed since the signing of the armistice, the American Government's war expenses show no signs of decreasing materially except in loans to allies.

In January the Treasury paid out $1,600,000,000 for ordinary war expenses, exclusive of allied loans, or only $70,000,000 less than in December, $55,000,000 less than in November and considerably more than in any month theretofore.

It is not necessary to read the remainder. Our expenses are over $50,000,000 a day, and which will not fall below that figure for a long time. In the face of that situation at this time, we propose, among other things, to increase our previous and unexpended good roads appropriation 266⅔ per cent by an addition of $200,000,000.

Mr. President, if any measure of legislation in the past has encountered public criticism which, however, has been wasted as to results, it is what we call the rivers and harbors bill. That has heretofore been regarded as the quintessence of the pork barrel. But what pikers the advocates of that bill appear to be when confronted with this good-roads proposition! It discloses all the difference between $35,000,000 and $200,000,000.

Does it not appear that the good-roads propaganda is not only distancing the public buildings and grounds propaganda and the rivers and harbors propaganda, but augurs such a fruitful field for exploitation in the future as to tempt those conservative gentlemen hitherto engaged in the delightful process of getting money for these other projects to strike and join the good-roads union as soon as possible, not, of course, abandoning their own pet appropriations, but adding to the joys of the Nation by their enthusiastic approval of something absolutely beyond all their enterprising efforts and their consummate genius for securing public funds for local expenditure.

Mr. President, I do not want to take up too much time in the discussion of a project that will doubtless command a large majority of this body, but in view of the large number of telegrams and letters which I have received from my own constituents who are, like all other constituents, urging me to support this measure, I felt bound to give the reasons in public why it would be impossible for me to support it. So much, then, for the general proposition. I wish now to call attention to a proviso which occurs in section 6 and also in section 8, which I will read:

That in the expenditure of this fund for labor preference shall be given, other conditions being equal, to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Let us not forget that this is a Democratic measure and it comes from a Democratic committee, elected by a party whose shibboleth is anticlass legislation and which demands equal rights for all and special privileges for none. How many times, Mr. President, have I repeated that sublime and beautiful doctrine on the stump before Democratic audiences? How many times have I, with others, insisted that it should be blazoned upon the front page of every National Democratic platform? How often have we told the Republicans, the representatives and embodiment of privilege, that ours is the only party wrapped in the apparel of special privileges for none and equal rights for all? How often have I seen them shrink from our terrific denunciations of their class tendencies and privilege dispensation? I make bold to say, Mr. President, that during my six years' service in the Congress of the United States we have, Democrats and Republicans, enacted more class legislation than had been placed upon the statute books in all the period of the history of the United States before that time. And we are only beginning. Both parties are alike in proposing and enacting it. I know of men in this city who, when some particular species of class legislation is pending, will appear in the gallery, and their appearance indicates how the majority vote will go.

We have exempted farmers, we have exempted union-labor men, we have exempted all classes and conditions of men when the occasion requires from the operation of general laws, and we have done it so often we are getting fond of it. Of course, there is no sweeter thing in the world for an appropriation than love for the soldier. Oh, Mr. President, how that sentiment does gild and enamel arguments for securing millions from the Treasury! Let us give work to the returned soldiers. Let us see to it that they are rewarded for their sublime sacrifice. Let us make their lives hereafter one long holiday season. They have offered the supreme test of civic duty and have discharged that duty like the heroes they are. Nobody doubts it.

Mr. President, I would be the last to detract one jot or tittle from the honorable and glorious record of the American soldier, notwithstanding which I recognize that he has done the duty and only the duty which American citizenship imposes upon every one of us, and has done it well. I recognize, too, that the man who stayed at home and tilled the soil and ran the factory and the man whose physical deficiencies made it impossible to wear his country's uniform have done their part, and have always done their part, in the crises that have overtaken the Nation in its onward progress.

I would like to ask my Democratic friends in all seriousness, independently of the class nature of this legislation, is it fair to take $200,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for a public purpose and then say to the great majority of our citizens, "You shall have no right to enjoy any of the benefits flowing from the expenditure of this money until a certain class is first satisfied"?

I have sons. One of them is in the war; he is still in the service and in uniform. I have another who pays a very considerable amount of taxes, and who has devoted himself to war work. The one is privileged by this law, the other is not. I merely mention that as illustrating the general principle. Mr. President, it is absolutely wrong, and I believe that every man wearing khaki who stops to reflect for a moment will agree with me. But it is in the bill. The query may well be asked, Will you vote against this appropriation and by that means deprive our noble boys of the privilege of handling pick and shovel on the roads? They have preference in the administration of the Federal statute. They are a select class under this law. Speaking to a Senator the other day about it, he said that appears in all the State bills, hence we should insert it also; which, I suppose, means that two wrongs make a right.

No, Mr. President, this is the commencement. The fact is that there are three or four million men wearing the uniform of the United States who will doubtless organize, as other armies have organized, and become a potent force in governing the destinies of the Republic; Democrats and Republicans want to see which can "beat the other to it" and secure the favor of a great organized host of voters.

Let us not undeceive ourselves about it. These species of special legislation, humanitarian in form, are at bottom prompted by a desire of political influence. The Democrats want these votes, the Republicans want these votes, and in the race, of course, there being no overbalancing incentive, the boys vote as they ought to vote, just as they please, and doubtless laugh in their sleeves at our tremendous efforts each to overtake the other through the aid of gifts from the Public Treasury in securing their political favor.

Mr. President, I have no doubt I will be taken seriously to task—I do not mean here, but in other parts of the country—for objecting to legislation of this kind as an evidence of my nonappreciation of the services and the valor of the greatest Army the world ever knew. I can not help it. I believe it is my duty to call attention to it, to the end that, if possible, it may be obviated, else we shall have a flood of similar legislation, because, once begun, the parties emulate each other in carrying it to extremes, and always upon the theory that patriotism and a desire to reward worthy men stand behind them.

Mr. President, one word and I am done. The question was asked yesterday by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], What is to be the end of it all? Our bonded debt by the end of this year, in all probability, will be $35,000,000,000. At 4 per cent a year that imposes a standing burden upon the people of one and one-half billion dollars. That is the interest only. Outside of the Post Office appropriations, that is about twice as much as the ordinary expenses of the Government amounted to prior to the war. It is evident that our annual expenditure list from now on, particularly if these huge appropriations are to be made—and once they get upon the statute they reappear in all succeeding bills—will not be under $3,000,000,000, or an annual charge of four and one-half billion dollars.

This must come from the consumer ultimately, with here and there an exception, and from 100,000,000 of people. In other words, in addition to the profits they must make to live, the people in the aggregate must raise and pay, exclusive of local taxation, into the Treasury of the United States between four and five billion dollars per annum, while the principal of the bonded debt suffers no diminution.

On the other hand, as the article which I have read states, production seems to be falling off. Hours of labor are decreasing. Wages, though not rising now, are said to be stationary, and we are warned by the laboring men that under no circumstances will they peaceably consent to a reduction, even though that means resistance to a commercial law of nature.

How long will the taxpayers endure it? I concede that they are more patient and long-suffering than I supposed possible. Suppose they do not resist, how long will they be able to endure it as a matter of fact? In other words, how long will the Government remain solvent? I do not know. Perhaps I ought not to care; I have not very much more time to spend upon this earth, and the problem is one for others rather than for myself.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, it is a subject which gives me the most serious concern. If I read history correctly, revolutions are born and governments are overthrown because of the enormous burdens placed upon people through public extravagance. As the pressure of taxation increases the element of discontent spreads, and justly spreads, until it finds expression somewhere in a local explosion which is the signal for widespread insurrection. We are headed, in my judgment, directly for the rocks of national insolvency, and the Congress of the United States with serene indifference is entertaining bills for appropriations that exceed anything in the past, unmindful of the enormous burdens of the war and apparently indifferent to anything and everything except to satisfy the local demands of their constituents.

Mr. President, the time has come when Congressmen and Senators must be Congressmen and Senators for all the United States instead of Congressmen and Senators from the States and the districts. The time has come when we must perceive our duty in terms of the interest and welfare of this mighty Nation as a whole, subordinating all local and State requirements to those mightier and greater problems upon the solution of which depends the ultimate destiny of the Republic. That is the solemn obligation imposed upon us by our constituents and by the Constitution we have sworn to support. Let us become sensible of it. Let us respond to it. For if we fail there are none others to discharge it and the Nation, disregarded by its representatives, will be rent in twain by its despoilers.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want the remarks of the Senator to be taken by the people at large as a positive statement that the expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, will be only $5,000,000,000. I wish to say to the Senator now that the expenditures of our Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, that is, the coming fiscal year, will be nothing less than $10,000,000,000. After that I am quite sure the figures that have been mentioned to-day by the Senator will be about right.

Mr. THOMAS. I thought it expedient to give the situation to the country in homeopathic doses.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to address myself very briefly to the proposition which is before the Senate. Before doing so, however, I want to say that I am not in dissent with what the Senator from Colorado has just said to the Senate. No man of financial responsibility, no legislator, certainly, ought to doubt for a moment the serious financial burden which this country has undertaken. As the Senator has very truly said, not only is there great local pressure for all kinds of expenditures, but that pressure comes from every department of the Government, and there is only one place where the interests of the people who pay the taxes can be protected, and that is in the Halls of Congress.

We are seeing on every hand the attempt of every bureau in the Government to increase the usual expenditures with which we have become familiar, and that is particularly so in connection with our military and naval establishments. The recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy for an increase in the Navy for the next three years is, to my mind, an astounding proposition. I have for 14 years in Congress urged over and over again larger expenditures for the Naval Establishment.

I think I have been a consistent preparedness man, and yet under the conditions that prevail to-day an expenditure anything like what has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and which has been recommended to him, I have no doubt, by his advisers in the Naval Establishment, is an astounding proposition, and one which, in my judgment, should not be imposed upon this country.

I went to the Secretary of the Navy the other day about another matter, and, as an indication of the desire of regular officers of the service to augment the Military Establishment, the Secretary told me that officers of high rank in the Navy had objected to taking a part of the crews from the second and third class battleships, which are now being used as transports in order to bring our men home from Europe, but desired to keep not only the dreadnaughts and the destroyers and other craft, which were quite up to date, on a war basis, but every ship of the Navy. That means an actual expenditure, without any construction policy, of four or five hundred million dollars a year. Those who are at all familiar with the recommendations to the Military Committee, having the desire to finish the great number of propositions which have been undertaken as war measures, must recognize the desirability of stopping somewhere in making these unusual expenditures.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; for a question.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact, I ask the Senator, that the same arguments are being made now by the officers in the Army and Navy for a large Army and for a big Navy that were made in Germany by the military party there, and under which contention militarism ruled Germany and was responsible for this titanic conflict through which we have just passed?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I do not wish to agree with that proposition. Militarism is a mental disease; it is a disease that had been gradually gotten into the minds of a people; and it is only possible to have militarism in a country where the military caste is higher than that occupied by the average man. There are really only two countries in the world where militarism existed, and one of them was Germany. I do not believe that the people of this country are going to put the Military Establishment in a caste higher than that occupied by the professional and industrial elements in this country, and therefore there is no danger of militarism.

It is the duty, however, of the officers of the Army and of the Navy to recommend what they consider an establishment which may meet every military and naval requirement. It is not their duty to consider the expenditures which may be involved; they should tell Congress and tell the country what they think is a satisfactory estabishment. Then it is the duty of Congress to determine whether or not the finances of the country will warrant the undertakings which they recommend.

But what I wish, Mr. President, to say is a word about the proposition which is now before the Senate. I think that Senators sometimes forget that the appropriations made for the post-office service are supposed to be returned in the receipts of that service. If we had a post-office service that was just exactly what was contemplated, and what it should be, the receipts would exactly offset the expenditures, and we would extend the service wherever it was necessary to give the people better facilities whenever receipts from the service warranted those expenditures. Now, we have come to a new proposition in connection with the postal establishment, that relating to the carrying of mails in the air, and, in my judgment, it is a promising undertaking.

That service was not satisfactory, Mr. President, in the experiment that was made last year. There was a loss somewhat larger than has been quoted on the floor; I am not sure that those carrying on that experiment know exactly what the loss is. I think the returns are to some degree experimental, as is the service. By establishing routes for long distances, it seems to me, it is almost conclusive that at a proper rate charged for the service a return can be made which will benefit the business and professional men of this country. I do not want to stop in this new undertaking until we have given it a thorough investigation. I think that almost everyone will admit that the airplane, which has been a great military accomplishment, may become as great in industrial and other ways. Indeed, if we had been as wise as was the Government of Great Britain, we would months and almost years ago have undertaken experiments relating to this service and relating to every other kind of service which may be used after the war. They appointed, as everyone knows, I think, committees to investigate the conditions surrounding every kind of industry; the airplane service was one of the matters which they, as early as the beginning of 1917, brought to the attention of the Parliament; and that was included in the general scheme to make recommendations for conditions after the war.

I have in my hand the final report made by the committee on the airplane service. There was an interim report, even more voluminous than this. The members of the commission included officers of the army and navy, several men of high rank in the Parliament of Great Britain, and many men who were more or less familiar with the industrial phase of this question. I want to take the time to read an extract from this report, because it will indicate to the Senate what is being done in Great Britain to prepare for what was the inevitable and what has come to pass in regard to such matters as the airplane service. The report states:

1. The terms of reference under which we, the civil aerial transport committee, were appointed are as follows:

To consider and report to the air board with regard to—

1. The steps which should be taken with a view to the development and regulation after the war of aviation for civil and commercial purposes from a domestic and imperial and an international standpoint.

2. The extent to which it will be possible to utilize for the above purpose the trained personnel and the aircraft which the conclusion of peace may leave surplus to the requirements of the naval and military air service of the United Kingdom and overseas dominions.

3. As explained in paragraph 2 of our interim report on international questions, the subjects covered by these terms of reference were of such a wide character and required so much detailed investigation that we thought it advisable to divide them into five headings, which were referred to five special committees. Those headings were broadly as follows:

1. Questions of law and policy.

2. Technical and practical questions as to the possibilities of performance of aircraft and as to the requirements of aerial services.

3. Business questions relating to the position of the aircraft manufacturing industry after the war, the probabilities of the establishment of aerial transport services, and the steps which would be necessary for the maintenance of this industry and for the development of these services.

4. Questions of labor arising in the aircraft manufacturing industry and in aerial transport services.

5. Problems of scientific research and the special education of expert designers, engineers, and pilots. The successive chapters of this report follow the above headings.

That simply indicates, Mr. President, what has been done by those with whom we are going to be brought in rivalry in the conduct of the affairs of the world now and in the immediate future, and I think, as this is the only place where we are making any experiments relating to aircraft service, that we can ill afford to fail to adopt the recommendation by the committee.

It is true that the route from Washington to New York is not quite a satisfactory route. While the Government dispatches a great amount of mail from here, Washington is not a business locality, and the Government would not ordinarily use the additional rates which are required for this service. We would get a much better result as a matter of experiment if we carried this service a longer distance and between two great commercial communities.

It was suggested in the committee that the route to be adopted be from the city of Boston to New York, possibly with a stop at Providence, which is a city of nearly 300,000 people; thence to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and to Norfolk. That would cover practically the eastern coast or the thickly settled portion of the Atlantic coast, and would be, I think, a route which would more definitely determine the desirability of conducting this service than the route between Washington and New York. It may be concluded to send airplanes by a similar route, omitting Norfolk, to Atlanta, Ga. In any case, however, we are going to get back substantially the amount of money which is appropriated in this item. It is not proposed to appropriate $800,000 or thereabouts, which is going to be charged against the Treasury, for, even if we do no better than we did with the experiment made last year, there will not be a loss of more than $100,000 or $150,000 in conducting the route. Perhaps it may be necessary to increase the charge for carrying the mail in this manner. If it is of sufficient importance to those who are being served by it, they will undoubtedly stand that additional charge in case it becomes necessary to make the service self-supporting.

I hope that Senators will view the subject from that standpoint. In order to get something that I think will be more definite than the report which is before the committee, and which is now before Congress, something more valuable as an indication of what may be expected in the future in connection with this service, a report which will indicate to some degree whether this service can be used in commercial pursuits advisedly and wisely, I think it would be unwise to fail to adopt the committee recommendation.

Mr. JONES of Washington obtained the floor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to some figures with reference to the statement that the Post Office Department is practically self-sustaining. Last year the Post Office Department collected from stamps and in other ways $332,631,000. In addition to that—and this is the point to which I wish to call the Senator's especial attention—$166,315,000 was paid into the Treasury as the result of the extra 1 cent that was paid upon first-class matter, so that the total amount which was covered into the Treasury was $498,946,000. I thought it might be well to call the Senator's attention to those figures in connection with the statement which he has made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I did not hear all the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] yesterday, but I understand that, as a general proposition, he urged that all of our airplane activities be placed under the control of one central organization. With that idea I am in hearty accord. I think it ought to be done; and I think the sooner it is done the better it will be for the development of aerial service. I think there should be special attention given to the development of this service, not only as a military arm of the Government but also as a commercial or business proposition. The availability of the airplane for these various lines of activity is beyond the experimental stage; there can not now be any question about that. Our activities should be along the line of developing the airplane for special purposes and special uses.

In considering the practicability of using the airplanes of the Military Establishment for the Postal Service I think we should not overlook the fact that our activities and energies during the last two, three, or four years in airplane development have all been directed along war lines. Airplanes have been developed with the special object and purpose of making them available as military machines and military instruments. I can see that this would lead to the development of machines that might not really be very serviceable in connection with the activities the Post Office Department must carry on. So it seems to me that, until we get this central body, this central organization, the Post Office Department should be encouraged and aided in experimenting along the line of developing an airplane, an "airship," as they call it, that will be especially suitable for the carrying of mail rather than for high flights and doing special "stunts," as they are called, in the air, and all that sort of thing. I can see reasons for the construction of a machine in a different way, especially the body of it, for carrying mail than for carrying a man up in the air whose duty and business it is to find somebody else and try to overthrow him. So I am inclined to favor the provision in the bill; and the only reason I asked to have it go over the other day was to have an opportunity to examine its terms and to ascertain whether or not, under the terms of the amendment proposed by the committee, the Post Office Department would have the authority to make some experiments in southeastern Alaska.

I remember last year when the proposal was made to appropriate money for experimental purposes in connection with the development of the airplane service it was said by some of the members of the committee that the purpose was to use this money in developing airplane service in Alaska, and it related largely to the interior of Alaska. I can not see how it could be very well used in the interior of Alaska, especially where the settlements are; but in southeastern Alaska the conditions are such that it does seem to me that we could very profitably use the hydroplane; that is, the airplane that lands on the water. There would be abundance of landing places; they would be available everywhere and anywhere where they were wanted, and all of the towns of southeastern Alaska could be served in this way, it seems to me, very profitably and very well.

The mail service in Alaska now is in a very deplorable condition. It has practically broken down. I have here an editorial from the Pacific Fisherman, which I wish to read to the Senate, describing the condition of the mail service in Alaska. I thought I had the date of it here; I have not, but it is of recent date, and is as follows:

ALASKA'S NEED FOR EFFICIENT POSTAL SERVICE.

Since the termination of the old Alaska mail contracts last summer the postal service of the Territory has suffered a lamentable breakdown, resulting in general complaint in all parts of Alaska.

Note how the mail is carried in Alaska now:

The present system, under which the mail is handled as express or freight in southeastern Alaska, and by a small boat to points to westward along the Alaska Peninsula, is not only unsatisfactory but altogether inadequate, and if continued will greatly hamper and retard the development of the fisheries, as well as of other Alaskan resources.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. KIRBY. About what is the population of the southeastern part of Alaska, that which ought to be served with airplane mail service, according to the Senator?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it is the most thickly settled and the most substantial and permanently located business part of Alaska. I do not know just what the population is. I know that there are several very substantial towns there—Ketchikan, Wrangell, Skagway, Juneau, Sitka, and quite a number of other points.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the entire population of Alaska, aside from the natives—that is, what we might call the white population—does not exceed 25,000, does it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The governor of Alaska was before the Appropriations Committee a short while ago, and he testified that the white population of Alaska has been reduced to about 20,000 or 25,000 people. That probably is true.

Mr. KIRBY. The natives would not care so much for the mail facilities.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know, however, that the reports now are that the people are starting back to Alaska, and that the indications are that the coming year will see a great addition to the white population of Alaska. There are many reasons for the diminution of the population of Alaska that I am not going to go into now. This is one of the reasons for a diminution in the population of Alaska. Their business and mail facilities are simply breaking down, and that discourages a great many; but the points that I mentioned and have in mind are the real, permanent localities in Alaska.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think the national land policy has had a great deal to do with the decrease of population there?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that has had a great deal to do with it.

Mr. THOMAS. I may say, while I am on my feet, that I am in hearty sympathy with the Senator's idea. I do not think the small population is so important as the necessity of giving them a proper mail service.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is right.

The result of the present policy in southeastern Alaska has been irregular and infrequent service, long delay in the delivery and distribution of mail at points even a short distance off the main lines of steamer travel, and general inconvenience. With no special obligation as to the handling of the mail, instead of going on a regular schedule it is delivered whenever a boat happens to have sufficient freight to warrant a call. On arrival it is often among the last freight to be discharged, and if landed at night has to wait until the next day before being distributed and forwarded; while outgoing mail from Alaska points, instead of being received up to the time of sailing, must be posted many hours in advance. Many communities on the Alaska coast, open to transportation throughout the year—

And that is true of these points that I have mentioned in southeastern Alaska. They are open to transportation at all seasons of the year—are now often entirely without mail for weeks at a time, where it was formerly received every few days.

Then the editorial goes on to discuss the matter. I will ask that I may insert in the RECORD the remainder of the editorial without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The remainder of the editorial is as follows:

Freight and passenger service also has suffered greatly on account of the present system. Where formerly regular schedules were maintained in accordance with the mail contracts, steamer service is now dependent on the accumulation of enough freight to pay for the trip. Thus both passenger travel and the shipment of freight to and from many points in Alaska, where calls were formerly made with some regularity, have become exceedingly difficult and uncertain.

The result of these conditions to the communities along the Alaska Peninsula, among the adjacent islands, and in Bering Sea has been far more serious than in southeastern Alaska. The mail steamer was formerly the sole reliance of these communities for freight and passenger service during the winter months; but the boat now handling the mail for this district is without freight or passenger facilities and has been unable even to maintain mail service with regularity through the winter. When this condition arose many communities to westward were short of food and other winter supplies, and while this condition has been partly relieved through private effort, with the cooperation of the Pacific American Fisheries and the Revenue Service, further service is needed to prevent serious hardship in these communities before spring.

This country in former years took just pride in the universal and efficient service rendered by the Post Office Department, which was of incalculable importance in the early development of the West. The carrying of the mails with promptness and regularity was regarded as a vital function, to be fulfilled to the limit of possibility. At the same time the placing of mail contracts often made it possible to furnish regular means of transportation, which otherwise would have been lacking. Such pioneer countries as Alaska are peculiarly dependent upon such facilities, and the only practical way in which they can be provided is through the maintenance of an efficient Postal Service, with a liberal policy on the part of the postal authorities. Mail in a frontier country like Alaska can not be successfully handled on the basis of the lowest possible cost. Service, rather than economy, is the proper aim of the Post Office Department; and the service must be maintained on an efficient basis—without extravagance, indeed, but if necessary even at a cost greater than any immediate return—if the development of Alaska is to continue.

Mr. JONES of Washington. A few days ago I received a communication from the representatives of the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle, who are especially interested in Alaskan matters, stating that mail is now taken to the boats, thrown down into the hold, where freight is piled on top of it, and then, of course, when it gets to the points where it should be delivered, it can not be delivered, as this editorial says, until the freight has all been taken off. In other words, it is handled as any other freight package is handled. Now, you can not have good mail service in that way.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether you get it as soon as you get your freight?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They get a good deal of freight sooner than they get the mail.

Mr. REED. Do they get it right after the freight is delivered?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. REED. Is not that a better mail service than we have been having between here and France?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I rather think it is. I know that the mail service to which the Senator refers is very deplorable. I receive a good many letters from people of my State, saying that they have sent letters to their boys for the last four, five, or six months, and they have not received any of them; and their boys send mail to them, and they get their letters maybe once every month, or every two months, or every three months; but that has nothing to do with this particular situation.

Mr. President, as I said, there are open waterways connecting with Seattle and all of these southeastern Alaskan points. The hydroplane has been developed to probably as great a state of efficiency as the ordinary airplane. At Seattle, for instance, there is a manufacturing plant that manufactures a great many airplanes for the Navy. These airplanes fly all over that country out there and land anywhere that they desire in Puget Sound. They made a trip a short time ago from Seattle to Tacoma, a distance of 30 or 40 miles, and back in 40 minutes without any stop. With the development that has taken place with reference to these machines, it seems to me there is no reason in the world why an airplane route should not be established from Seattle, touching all of these points in southeastern Alaska, making a round trip at any rate in two days, and furnishing ample mail facilities—for first-class mail at any rate.

Mr. President, if the Post Office Department desires to establish an airplane mail service that will be of real, substantial benefit, it seems to me there is the place to do it. It may be desirable to get mail between Washington City and New York in half the time that the train takes it—five hours. That may be desirable, but there is not very much inconvenience suffered by having a letter delivered from Washington to New York or New York to Washington in five hours instead of two and a half.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. REED. I should like to inquire whether, as a matter of fact, they save any time on the mail carried by airplanes? I mean, now, whether they save any time counting from the time the mail leaves the post office at one destination to the time it reaches the post office at the other?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have not investigated that particular phase of the matter, but it does seem to me that it looks reasonable that if we can start mail from Washington City, say, at 9 o'clock in the morning, and it gets to New York by 11, it ought to be distributed there a little more promptly and a little bit sooner than mail leaving here at 9 o'clock and getting there in five hours.

Mr. REED. I do not want to interrupt the Senator——

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is no interruption at all.

Mr. REED. But the question that occurs to me is this: At the present time, when the mail goes through the post office, it goes either by direct automobile route or by tube to the station. There is very little loss of time. If that occurs in Washington on outgoing mail, when it gets into the city of New York it is handled with the same machinery, the same dispatch and rapidity. Now, when they undertake to carry it by airplane, the mail has to be carried down to the airplane station, and the machines there have to be trimmed up or cranked up, and they carry it to New York; and the question that occurred to me was whether the loss of time in going to and from the post office with the new method does not fully absorb all the difference between train time and airplane time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It must absorb considerable of the difference in time.

Mr. REED. I do not believe it will save a minute. It may be all right to work along this line for the purpose of development, and I am not criticizing it, but any claim that up to this date it is a practical thing that has resulted in any saving seems to me absurd.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will yield to the Senator from South Dakota in just a moment. Referring to the particular point of the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, I will say that the mail landing place for airplanes at Philadelphia is at what is known as the Bustleton Field, and that is clear outside of the populated area, really, of Philadelphia; and in order to get the mail down, of course, it must be met there at that field, which must be at any rate 3, 4, or 5 miles from the central part of the city, and then taken down to the post office or wherever it is to be distributed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the landing point in New York is 20 miles from the post office.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was going to say that I did not know how far it was in New York. I did not inquire as to where they landed there.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from South Dakota rose first. I yield to him, and then I will yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I just rose to ask the Senator a question as to the distance from Seattle to the farthest interior point into Alaska that his proposition would involve?

Mr. JONES of Washington. What I have in mind now is especially to serve such points as Ketchikan, Skagway, Haines Mission, Juneau, Sitka, and any other points between—my recollection is that in going to those different points you must retrace your steps along some of the routes—a trip of about 1,100 miles.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. The inquiry of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] prompts me to suggest to the Senator from Washington that the aerial mail is delivered by special delivery, and in view of that fact sometimes it is delivered quicker. Then, again, our mail service has been so very poor of late that in the case of an ordinary letter going from Washington to New York it takes about 24 hours before it is delivered, and I have observed that in the case of some document mail I have sent out it takes three days to deliver it, so that with aerial mail going over in two hours, and then being distributed by special delivery, I think under existing conditions perhaps it is a little quicker.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Those conditions exist everywhere. My experience in the last few months in Washington City has been that it takes about two days and a half to send mail from one point in Washington City to another. At least, I have had that experience myself; but that does not affect what I am anxious that the Post Office Department shall look into, and I want to have them given the authority if we are going to give them this money to carry on these experiments to see what can be done in sections of the country where hydroplanes can be used, where they will not have to pay anything whatever for landing places, and where there is practically no mail service now.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for just a minute?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. I have here the report of the Postmaster General regarding the expedition of mail from Washington to New York and from New York to Washington, which I should like to read.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well; I will yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. SWANSON. The report says:

> The aerial mail route between Washington and New York was inaugurated on May 15, 1918. One round trip daily except Sunday is being made without fail. The trip from Washington to New York is performed in an average of 2 hours and 30 minutes, and from New York to Washington in 2 hours and 50 minutes, the difference in time being due to the resistance offered by the prevailing winds, which are usually from a westerly direction. A stop for the exchange of mail on each trip is made at Philadelphia. An average of 7¾ tons of letter mail is being carried each month. The cost of the operation of the service since it began, including development of new routes, is at the rate of $108,223.41 per year, or 79 cents per mile operated. The cost per ton-mile of mail carried is $5.35. By this service, mail between New York and Washington is advanced from two and one-half to three hours over the train service. In addition to the aeroplane mail carried there is dispatched daily from Washington to New York letter mail from southern connections made up to carrier districts in New York City, which mail is thereby delivered to all parts of New York the same afternoon instead of the following morning.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the Senator a question, too, because he has given this matter much more careful study than I have and knows more about it. I want to know whether or not the department is experimenting with any machine specially constructed for carrying mail or whether it is using the ordinary military or naval machine.

Mr. SWANSON. I think they have been equipping machines that they have obtained from the Government. I do not think they have yet constructed any special machines for this purpose. All of the development, as the Senator has well stated, has been in connection with machines for war purposes; and these are being used, as far as they can be, now for mail service.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not believe they can fully demonstrate the possibilities of aerial service in mail carrying without having machines that are constructed with a view to that service, and when we talk about carrying on experiments in the mail service we are not carrying on the experiment in the right sort of a way unless we are trying to get and use machines that are adapted to that service and that work, and not machines that are suitable for scout and military operations.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. I think probably in the final analysis there is a good deal of truth in what the Senator from Washington has just stated, and yet we have the other machines; they can not be used, all of them, and quite likely they will be out of date within the next two or three years. The Senator must remember, too, that every manufacturer of machines is going to be advancing every conceivable argument why the machines owned by the Government should not be used. We ought to segregate the wheat from the chaff in those arguments and have a care that we are not led into purchasing machines when we have something which may be fairly satisfactory.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I agree entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts; but, nevertheless, if we have machines on hand and if those machines are not suitable for the purpose we want to develop we are not making very much headway by using them for that purpose. I am simply giving my views from what little experience I have had in connection with these matters. I have not talked with any of the manufacturers of these machines, or anything of the kind; but it hardly needs the experience of a manufacturer or of anybody else to know that a machine especially constructed and developed for special war purposes in the air is not likely to be suitable for the purposes of peace, the carrying of mail, and things like that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There was a representative from the Post Office Department who stated before the committee that the engines and everything of that kind were all ready and that all they desire is an additional small amount to be used in reconstructing the machines, suiting them to this particular work, which was entirely feasible and which would be very much cheaper than the purchase of entirely new machines.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is true.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Some of these machines cost $25,000, and it would probably cost $6,000 or $8,000 to repair them and fit them for this service, which he hopes to do. The machines are of no value now; they do not need them for war purposes. It is a very wise economy, I think, on the part of the Post Office Department to utilize them as far as they can, and that is what they are doing. They have the power and all that, and they will serve every purpose just as though the machines were constructed originally for postal service.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is true, and what I was trying to bring out is that I think the Post Office Department ought to experiment along the line of developing the machines as mail carriers rather than as scouting machines. It is true, the engines, and no doubt a great part of the machines, are all right as to the power they need, but the body of the machine will need to be changed in some way.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That was the purpose, the representative of the Post Office Department stated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all right.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is what they are going to do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all right, and that is one reason why I am in favor of giving them this money, so that they can use it along those lines.

I had the pleasure some time ago of making a trip to New York and back in one of these machines. Of course, in the cockpit, as they call it, in which I rode they could dump a lot of mail sacks if it were necessary, but I could see how the body of that machine could well be modified so as to make it much more suitable for carrying mail than it is now. I hope that experiments and investigations and work along those lines will be carried on under this appropriation.

Mr. President, I am going to ask permission to embody in the RECORD a statement that I myself prepared with reference to that trip in answer to the many questions that were propounded to me in regard to it. I could have asked another Senator, probably, to request permission to put it in the RECORD, but I have no hesitation about asking it myself. I ask the privilege of printing in the RECORD the article I prepared in reference to this matter which appeared in the Star some time ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed as a part of the Senator's remarks.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Star, Jan. 12, 1919.]

UNITED STATES SENATOR TELLS OF FLIGHT IN AIRPLANE TO NEW YORK AND RETURN—AFRAID BEFORE STARTING, BUT ENJOYED TRIP—EXPECTED TO BE DIZZY AND SEASICK, BUT ESCAPED BOTH—EVEN "STUNTS" IN THE AIR NOT SO TERRIFYING AS EXPECTED—RELIEF, WHEN THE TRIP APPEARED IMPOSSIBLE, SOON SHATTERED—GLOOM OF FRIENDS MADE EXPECTATIONS OF DISASTER SEEM NATURAL.

(By WESLEY L. JONES, United States Senator from Washington.)

"'That man is a fool or crazy!'

"I made that statement a year and a half ago as I looked toward the Washington Monument from a window in the Capitol at a French aviator turning somersaults, flying sidewise, and doing the falling leaf in a flying machine. Had anyone told me that I would be doing the same thing I would have asked him if he thought I was going crazy; and yet I have done it and liked it, and I hope no one thinks I am crazy, if they may think me reckless.

"I watched from day to day the planes soaring through the air over the Capital like great birds. My confidence in their safety and stability became greater as the days went by. I weighed the dangers of the aeroplane with the dangers of the automobile and convinced myself very easily that a good aeroplane in charge of a well-trained driver is not so dangerous as an automobile.

ASKED COL. LEE FOR RIDE.

"When Col. Lee, the Englishman, came from the front to show the people of the Capital what could be done with an aeroplane I decided to ask him for a ride. I called him on the phone. He said he would be glad to take me up at 4 o'clock the next day.

"That rather took away my breath. It was a little sooner than I expected, but it was settled. I was to go up. My mind, however, began to wander from the beauties of the machine soaring through the air to the effect it might have on me. Would I get sick? Would I be dizzy? What would happen if something should go wrong? Would I come safely through? Things looked a little different now that I was to fly. The thought that I ought to arrange my personal affairs for anything that might happen came into my mind. Things took on a different hue. I began to feel as I thought a man might feel who was going to be executed the next day.

"Three o'clock came very quickly. I started to the aviation field. When I reached it I was told that Col. Lee was at Alexandria with his plane, which had been injured in the high wind the night before and therefore could not go up.

"Really, I felt relieved. Things looked brighter. I was glad. I thought I could enjoy seeing the other men fly, so stayed to watch them.

WISH TO FLY COMES BACK.

"As I watched and saw how gracefully they soared through the air and how safely they came back the bug to fly began its work again, and in a few minutes I wanted to go up. I asked Lieut. Dodge, of our Aviation Corps, who was flying, if he could take me up. He said, 'No; not without a permit from Capt. Salmon.' I was sorry, but was told that Capt. Salmon was expected any moment. I waited for an hour, but he did not come, and I went home disappointed.

"The bug was busy, however, and afterwards I went up with Capt. Salmon, Col. Lee, and Capt. Resnati. We turned over, went sidewise, careened toward the earth like a falling leaf, took the nose dive, went through the air like a wave on the face of the sea, and did all the other stunts learned by the men on the battle front. I did not get sick or dizzy. I was not afraid. I liked the sensation. The rides were too short. We came down too soon. I did not care so much for the stunts. I wanted some straightaway flying. I wanted to soar through the air and watch the earth go by and think.

"Some time ago I met Lieut. David Logg. He is an aviator instructor at Bolling Field and a Seattle boy. That in itself is a fine recommendation. He is a bright, vigorous, stalwart young fellow. His very appearance inspires confidence, and I thought this might be my chance to take a trip. I hinted that I would like to ride to New York. He took me up just as quickly as had Col. Lee, and said he would take me at any time I wanted to go. We set the date and the hour for 10 o'clock Saturday, December 28.

FRIENDS NOT ENCOURAGING.

"Again I began to weigh the possibilities of the trip and to think not so much of the beauties of it as about what might happen. I did not get very much encouragement from those with whom I talked. The day before we were to start I asked Mrs. Jones if she would like to go down and see me off.

"'Well, I guess I will go,' she said. 'It may be your last ride.'

"That cooled me off considerably. The next morning the first thing I saw in the paper was the headline, 'Two aviators killed.' I was in no hurry to start. Some zealous friends who were going urged that we start early. They seemed to be afraid I wouldn't make connections. On the way to the field I didn't have much to say. It seemed a long way to New York and I didn't know about landing places. We reached the field a little after 9. Ten o'clock came and Logg hadn't arrived. Half past 10 and he wasn't there. Secretly I was rejoicing—something had happended, maybe he wouldn't come. Eleven o'clock and still he hadn't come. I was sure he had the 'flu.' And then I saw him coming. Down went my spirits, and nothing was said to raise them. When I was fitted out I said to the adjutant, 'I will see you again in a day or two.' 'Well, I hope so,' said he, with peculiar emphasis on the word 'hope.'

FORMALITIES NOT CHEERFUL.

"Everybody insisted on shaking hands and expressing the wish, in a sad sort of way, that we would reach New York all right, but plainly showed they had doubts. To cap the climax I was asked to sign a paper answering certain questions. 'What is your full name?' 'What is your home address?' 'Where do you keep your bank account?' 'Have you made your will?' 'Where is it?' 'Whom do you want notified if anything should happen?'

"I began to look for the question that was asked the old darky when he went to seek employment in one of the munition plants and was asked, 'Where do you want your remains sent?' and thought that if that question was asked I would make about the same answer as he made—I would 'sho' stay with my remains' and let the flying go.

"You can imagine the kind of happy feeling that I had when I got into the cockpit of the Curtiss training plane 56 to start on the journey from which no one really seemed to think I would get back safely. I looked like an Eskimo or deep-sea diver. I had put on over my regular suit a union suit of khaki, lined with plush, and buttoned up tightly about the neck, ankles, and wrists. On my hands I wore a pair of gauntlets, fleece lined. On my head was a leather hood, plush lined, and over that a helmet that I could pull over my face if desired. I wore a pair of heavy goggles to protect my eyes.

OFF ON LONG FLIGHT.

"Everything was ready. The nose of the plane was turned toward the field. The motor was running fine. Logg was in his place. I climbed into the rear cockpit as gracefully as possible. After much grunting and tugging the 4-inch belt was strapped around me, it being just barely long enough by my shrinking up as much as I could. We waved good-by. The plane started running on the ground. When it reached a speed of about 60 miles an hour, and it actually seemed to be going that fast, it left the ground and took the air like a bird. That is the speed that must be attained on the ground before an aeroplane takes the air.

"Within 15 minutes Washington was nearly out of sight and we were 3,000 feet above the earth. We were going 85 or 90 miles an hour, but looking at the earth, the only object by which we could gauge our speed, we did not seem to be moving more than 10 or 12 miles an hour. The earth looked perfectly level. Hills and hollows had disappeared. Forests looked like carpets of green or black. Division lines, roadways, streams, and farmhouses were remarkably distinct and the country looked like a huge map before and below us. The roar and crackling hum of the motor would have been deafening if I had not had the hood and knitted helmet over my ears. As it was, I could hear the crackling of the motor the next day after our ride was ended. To put my head or hand above or outside the windshield was to feel the wind like a hurricane rushing by, and as it was several degrees below freezing I did not do this very often. Those who have been up on a mountain three or four thousand feet high in the middle of the day know that it is not much colder there than on the level, and so it was with us.

GOT FULL BENEFIT OF COLD.

"The thermometer did not indicate it much colder than when we started, but going through the air as we were and with the thin walls of the aeroplane our only protection, we got the full benefit of the cold, and had we not been clad as we were we would soon have been numbed and chilled through. As it was, we did not suffer, but my feet were rather cold at the end of an hour and a half, not having on any overshoes.

"I had no unusual or peculiar sensations; no dizziness or seasickness. It was a surprise to me not to be dizzy. I have never been seasick, but I can not look over the edge of a high building or precipice without getting dizzy and feeling like I want to jump off. I have no such feeling in an aeroplane. I can look over the side of the cockpit at the earth and objects below without any discomfort. Others say that their sensation is the same. We sailed along at an altitude of from 3,000 to 3,800 feet, reaching 4,000 feet as we went over New York Harbor and Brooklyn, preparatory to landing at Hazlehurst Field, near Mineola. In cross-country flying, I am told, they usually fly at an elevation of from 3,000 to 5,000 feet.

"We passed over Camp Meade, half way to Baltimore. The buildings, streets, and drill fields were very distinct, although the men on the ground looked like insects. We passed over the heart of Baltimore. The buildings seemed like toys and all of the same height, except in the business section, where the very high buildings seemed larger toys overtopping the others. The parks looked like a network of paths, by-paths, driveways, small mirrorlike lakes, streams, and Christmas green. We could get some idea of our speed from the fact that it was but a few moments from the time Baltimore came into sight until it was left in the rear.

AIR BUMP OVER BALTIMORE.

"You will hear aviators talk of air bumps. These are very noticeable. The machine will be going along apparently on a perfectly level course, when suddenly there will be a more or less distinct drop or rise. This is called an air bump, and probably is caused by a different air stratification. While passing over Baltimore we felt an unusually hard bump. It really made me jump, and my heart beat faster. When I mentioned it to Logg he said it was probably caused by the extreme wetness of Baltimore.

"Havre de Grace, Wilmington, Chester, and Philadelphia were passed in rapid succession. Time passed quickly. After the novelty wore off the sameness of the scene below palled and I began to take my eyes from the country to look at the machine. I soon noticed the many wires stretched from wooden brace to brace and plane. As I looked the wires seemed to get tinier, the braces smaller, and the planes thinner. I began to speculate as to what might happen if one should break; then on the chances of two wires breaking at once. I thought I would better watch the scenery, and so I dismissed these things from my mind. This is no new way with me. I do it when I am in an automobile. I never go 25 or 30 miles an hour without wondering what would happen if the steering gear should fail to work, a wheel come off, an axle or a brake rod break. I have always been able to figure out better chances with an aeroplane than an automobile, and on this account, I suppose, I have no fear in an aeroplane.

NO SPEED LAWS IN AIR.

"There are no telegraph poles to hit; no embankments to topple over; no cross streets to watch; no speed rules or traffic regulations to be broken by the other fellow and observed by you; no drunken, reckless drivers to shun. Short of a broken plane or tail, the chances of getting down all right are good. The serious problem is a landing place if anything does go wrong, and that is not so serious in a prairie or farming country, and the higher you are when trouble occurs the better. I am not speaking as an expert, but this is what I am told, and it seems to be very reasonable to me from what little experience I have had.

"The Busselton Field, where the post-office planes stop, is just beyond Philadelphia. We had to land there to take on gasoline, our machine carrying only about 14 gallons of gasoline, and making about 8 or 10 miles to the gallon. As we reached the earth I saw a plane on the ground that had turned over and was pretty well smashed. That didn't look so good. When I got out and went into the hangar while our gasoline was put in I saw three or four more machines that seemed to be pretty badly smashed. This did not add much to my peace of mind, but when the fellows said no one had been hurt I felt better.

"We came to Busselton Field with the sun shining. We had hardly landed till the clouds seemed to come from nowhere. Big snowflakes began to fall and toward New York it looked quite squally. I called this to Logg's attention and suggested we might have to go through a snowstorm. 'Yes,' he said, in a thoughtful sort of way, 'and I have never been through a snowstorm,' but he has a way about him that inspires confidence, whether you think he knows what he is doing or not, and I didn't worry.

PLANES LACK SELF-STARTERS.

"We were delayed at Busselton at least a half hour by difficulties in starting. They don't have self-starters on many of the planes, and they seem to get as contrary as a Ford and you can't crank them so easily. The machine is cranked by turning the propeller to a certain point. A man on the ground gives it a jerk, jumps out of the way, and the fellow in the cockpit gives it the gas or something. It seems to start when it gets ready and not before. After a half hour's work the machine started. We got off past the broken machine and up into the clouds.

"I was surprised at how plainly we could see farms, houses, roads, and streams through the clouds. It is when you get above them that you can not see the earth. In a few minutes we sighted Trenton and the Delaware, and we crossed the Delaware much easier than did Washington. One thought that makes my chest swell out when I am flying is that I am doing something that the fathers and heroes of the past did not and could not do.

"We passed through several snowstorms. It looked to me as though we were passing above them. We could see ahead and below us the snowflakes flying almost horizontal, but we could not see any hit the plane or pass right by us. Logg said we went so fast we could not see them when they were close. Maybe he is right. I won't dispute it, but I 'hae me doots.'

"We passed over Princeton, or, rather, to one side of it. The stadium looked like a great dry dock and the campus like a part of fairyland. In a few minutes the waters that we had been hovering over were covered with boats, big and little, going here and there and yonder, and many of them apparently at anchor. We were passing over and up New York Harbor. The Statue of Liberty showed shadowy in the distance as Logg pointed off to the left. Over Brooklyn we were 4,000 feet high. The skyscrapers of New York appeared in the distance like shadowy giants towering over the small houses below.

DOWN LIKE A GREAT BIRD.

"We passed over Brooklyn and came to the farms of Long Island beyond. The motor stopped, and we began to circle downward. I knew we had reached Hazelhurst Field. We came down like a great bird circling to its nesting place. We neared the earth, skimmed along its surface till the rear shock absorber gently touched the ground, bounded up, and then the machine gently settled on the ground, ran rapidly along it, and came to rest in front of a hangar. The 250-mile trip was safely completed in 2¾ hours, at an average speed of 85 miles an hour.

"Monday came bright, clear, and cold. After a hard time cranking the engine we started back at about 2 o'clock. The trip back was not specially eventful. One spark plug was missing as we passed over Brooklyn, although I did not know it, and Logg thought of turning back, but decided to go on to Philadelphia. There we found one spark plug out and three or four loose. In passing over Brooklyn I happened to look off to the left and saw a big machine, a little higher than we, going in the opposite direction. It was a beautiful sight, but I could not enjoy it long, as we were going away from each other at the rate of more than 200 miles an hour. A little farther on we passed a smaller machine. It looked like a beautiful bird, but was going faster than any bird I ever saw fly.

BUCKED A HEAD WIND.

"We were told when we started from Hazelhurst that we would have a head wind, and that it would be pretty strong at an elevation of 3,000 feet and stronger as we went higher. We found this to be true, and it held us back very considerably. We came in sight of Washington about 5.30 o'clock, sailing along at an elevation of 5,000 feet, the highest of the trip. The Dome of the Capitol was lighted, the bright lights of the avenues formed triangles and rectangles, and the semicircle in front of Union Station shone brightly, while the multitude of other lights twinkling in the darkness below made a most beautiful sight.

"When well over the city Logg stopped his motor, and there we floated with our machine quietly resting in space. He turned around, shoved up his goggles, and we had a short conversation as if sitting in a wicker chair on the front porch at home. It was wonderful, sublime, awe inspiring, and a scene and experience never to be forgotten.

"Logg stopped his talk, pulled down his goggles, let out an Indian warwhoop, turned on his motor, and made that machine act like a young colt out of harness at the end of a warming-up drive. It turned over backwards and forwards; circled with its planes vertical; nose-dived up and down like a bark on the waves of the sea; imitated a falling leaf; took a tail spin and twisted and turned until I did not know whether I was head up or down.

LANDING AT BOLLING FIELD.

"Untying itself, the machine started on a long, straight dive. I breathed a sigh of relief. I knew we were going down to Bolling Field. In a minute we came to the level of the lights on the buildings, skimmed along, settled slowy, touched the ground gently and stopped. A man came out and told us to turn and go to another hangar. Logg tried to start his engine. It did not go. 'Gasoline out,' he said. My heart jumped; my hair began to rise. Just imagine what I was thinking.

"The engine started. We turned and came to another hangar. He had used his emergency tank, which I did not know he had. We had finished our 500-mile trip in about six hours' flying time. We were home safe and sound, and I am more than ever sure that air riding is not reckless.

"I do not care to make this trip every day. It would get monotonous. You hear nothing but the hum and roar of the motor, which is so loud that you can not hear yourself shout. I tried it, and my voice seemed to stick in my mouth, and the words of Virgil, 'vox faucibus hæsit,' were literally true to me. You get tired sitting in an unchangeable position on a hard seat for an hour or more, although I did not get nearly so tired coming back as I did going.

FUTURE OF THE AIRPLANE.

"What the future of airplanes may be I can not say. The world's energy has been expended during the last four years in developing the aeroplane for war purposes. That development has been wonderful. If now directed to peaceful pursuits, passenger and commercial machines may be constructed so as to make their use for such purposes very desirable and economical.

"I see by the papers the other morning that machines carrying 30 or 40 people are to be put on regular flights between Munich and Berlin. It looks like the practical German is going to put his war experience to commercial use, and I see no reason why we should not do the same. I understand a machine has been built in this country that will carry 50 passengers. Such a machine could certainly be made comfortable, and ought to be of considerable use in commerce aside from passenger travel.

"About the only exciting experiences on the trip were the races we had with Pennsylvania passenger trains. We would see the smoke of a train in the distance right ahead of us, and it was very interesting to note how we overtook and passed them. The race didn't last long and the result wasn't uncertain."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Alabama an amendment that I should like to have put in the bill when it is in order. It is in line 14, page 18. It reads now:

The Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $850,500 for the purchase of aeroplanes and the operation and maintenance of an aeroplane mail service between such points as he may determine.

The first part of the paragraph reads:

For inland transportation by railroad routes and aeroplanes.

That language would probably exclude their use in Alaska, as it stands now. After the word "points" I wish to insert the words "including service to and between points in Alaska, such as he may determine."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am glad to hear that from the Senator, and I will offer it when I have an opportunity. There is another amendment to the amendment pending now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is now pending an amendment to the amendment, and the amendment of the Senator from Washington can be offered later.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Before I sit down I am going to take the time of the Senate for just a few minutes on another matter that I consider of considerable importance.

I have a letter from one of my constituents about the water-power situation. It is a pointed and rather harsh letter, but has a good deal of real sense in it and, I expect, expresses the views of the average citizen. I am going to read it to the Senate, that we may "see ourselves as others see us." It is as follows:

SKYKOMISH, WASH., January 21, 1919.

Hon. Senator JONES,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The headlines of an article I read in to-day's Seattle Post-Intelligencer would make a fine subject to write on. It is as follows: "Water-power bill reaches deadlock." For years we have been reading just such rotten stuff. The House says we want it one way; the Senate says it won't do. Now, any blame fool knows that some kind of contract could be made satisfactory to both sides, and it would not take 10 or 15 years to do it, either; but a few hundred of what is supposed to be the smartest and best-posted men of our country can't reach an agreement.

I think likely you fellows just sling a note like this into the waste-basket and declare the writer a crank. I guess we are, but if I had the whole bunch of our Senators and Congressmen out here where they were on an equal footing with me I would tell them a few things that would make this cranky note look like 30 cents.

Most arguments one hears now for the failure of many kinds of legislation is the political war that's being waged against the administration, which is my opinion all right, but all the people one hears—or nearly all—making those remarks are only stronger for our administration for it.

The majority of the people nowadays are reading for themselves. We know what you fellows are paid for and we know when we get value received, so the time has come that some of this old political fight should be dropped. Three cheers for Wilson.

Yours, respectfully,

A. J. WATKINS.

Mr. President, the suggestions in my friend's letter as to politics and the "Three cheers for Wilson" are rich in unconscious humor to those who know that the only politics played in connection with this subject has been attempted by the administration and that the House and Senate would long ago have settled their differences except for the interference and domination of the President.

Mr. President, the people know the importance of the passage of water-power legislation.

Engineers of high standing estimate that the passage of the water-power bill now in conference would result in the employment of at least 100,000 men in the very near future and that within one year water-power developments would be undertaken in 25 States of the Union to replace steam plants now operated by coal and to furnish cheap power for many new manufacturing purposes. These hydroelectric developments would have an ultimate aggregate capacity of about 2,000,000 horsepower, requiring an investment of $250,000,000. The industrial plants erected to use this vast amount of power would give permanent employment to fully 500,000 operatives.

The passage of the bill would also result in the development of many now-wasting water powers in connection with the electrification of railroads and for the operation of pumping plants to raise water to millions of acres of now barren, arid western land that with water would support a great agricultural population and tend toward the reduction of the cost of living and add greatly to the wealth of the State and Nation.

I call your attention to these Government water-power maps. Map No. 1 shows the location of the 54,000,000 water horsepower contained in the United States and of which 5,000,000 horsepower, or but 10 per cent, has yet been developed. You will note that while great quantities of power exist in the streams of the Eastern and Southern States, yet that 72 per cent of all the water power of the country is contained in the 11 far western States of Washington, Oregon, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Wyoming, and Colorado. You can imagine the profound interest that I as a western man take in the enactment of water-power legislation on behalf of the people of my section of the country.

The water powers of the above-named 11 States are their greatest asset, though at the present time mainly a sleeping and profitless asset, due solely and entirely to the inaction and inertia of Congress in turning a deaf ear to the voice and cry of the West, praying for the passage of laws under which its people can develop the energy contained in our falling waters. I will confess that the voice of the West as to the form of legislation which should be enacted, as expressed through its Senators and Congressmen, has been one of discord, but necessity for action is bringing us closer together, and I believe that the fundamental principles of the water-power bills which have passed both Houses of Congress and which are now in conference can easily be harmonized so that the development of our water power may be brought about with the respective powers of the State and Nation observed and the interests of the people fully conserved.

These bills give to the Federal Government, to the States, and to municipalities the preference right to develop, but also provide fair terms under which private capital may undertake the utilization of the water powers of the country when the privilege is not desired by Government agencies.

If further provision with reference to this important question should be deemed necessary, the subject matter is before the conferees, and they could, it seems to me, unite upon some proposal that would provide ample assurances that if any State or county or municipality desires to utilize these water-power resources it could do so.

Nature has mainly secreted her falling waters in mountain fastnesses, far from civilization and from power markets, where development means pioneer work, means shouldering "the white man's burden," means difficulties in securing capital for construction purposes and in securing a market for the power. Surely men and capital should not be warned away and discouraged if they have the nerve to undertake this great work, which if unsuccessful places all the loss on them and if successful means that while they will enjoy their reasonable and just reward, yet their work will benefit the public a thousand times more than it does themselves.

I rather think the public sometimes overlooks the tremendous benefit that comes to the public itself from the development of these great water-power resources. I know that in my State there are power possibilities which, if developed, might bring a very substantial return to the men who put in their capital, but the benefit to the community and the benefit to the State that would come from this development would be many, many times greater than any possible pecuniary benefit that might come to those who would put in these works.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is not the principal defect of the water-power bill that is before the conferees the fact that there is no way provided in the bill by which capital can be raised? We have had the situation as to the Alaskan coal fields, where it was supposed capitalists would eagerly lease coal lands; but when the people who were to advance the money found that there was nothing but a leasehold estate offered they said, "No; we may have all our rights forfeited under many provisions of the lease, and for that reason we will not lend money on such security."

Mr. President, it seems to me that there ought to be an alternative, and I have presented to the conference committee an alternative proposition, stating that when, upon the declaration of the commission itself, they shall determine that water-power sites can not be leased they shall offer them at public auction for sale.

The difficulty is that when you go to build one of these water-power sites you find enormous capital is required, sometimes as high as twenty or thirty or forty million dollars. When you go to New York for the purpose of raising that capital and getting the loan, they ask, "What title have you," and when you confess to them that you have simply a lease and that that lease may be forfeited, they decline and assert that no financial institution is going to lend money upon a title of that kind.

What I am trying to impress upon the conference committee is that, while giving all the power to the water-power commission to lease, yet when the commission discovers that they can not lease the site they ought to be permitted to sell the site to those who will agree to develop it. That resource being unused makes a terrible loss to the people of the Rocky Mountain region.

As the Senator has said, we can hardly comprehend how much a million horsepower is in productive ability in a State to manufacture anything that might be desired. I heard it stated at one time that each horsepower in the United States produces, on the average, $1,150 worth of products. Now, take a million horsepower and multiply it by 1,150 and you will have $1,150,000,000 as the product that comes to the State in the way of manufactured products for the 1,000,000 of horsepower. I have understood that $524 of that $1,150 goes to labor. You can readily see, if that is true, it means a pay roll in the State that has a million horsepower of $524,000,000 a year. That is on the theory that the horsepower for manufacturing goods pays, on the average, the same as those in the other portions of the United States. If that is true, it means an enormous loss each year to the people of the West from failure to develop water power.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am glad of the interruption of the Senator. He has gone more into detail, emphasizing the importance of the work, than I intended to do.

I think Senators would get a more comprehensive view of the situation if they would just notice these maps [indicating three maps on the wall]. They present the situation with reference to developed power and possibilities very vividly, it seems to me.

On map No. 1 each black spot represents so much horsepower possibility, and you can see how the possibilities in the great western country compare with the possibilities in the eastern country.

Then, the second map shows the actual development of water power, and there you can see the wonderful possibilities, compared to the other sections of the country, of the great eastern industrial section and the small development in the western part, where the first map shows there are great power resources.

Then map No. 3 shows very vividly in one map the water-power resources and the actual resources. The black spot shows the power development in a certain district and the white spot with a black spot in the center indicates the possible development of water-power resources. You will see in the district represented by Washington, Oregon, and California over 20,000,000 horsepower possible of development and not 2,000,000 developed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that in Colorado, according to the estimate of the Geological Survey, we have between one and two million horsepower possible from flowing water, and the amount that has been developed is less than 5 per cent; it is 4.6 per cent of the amount of the possible water-power development of our State.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Now, on this map Colorado has 4,450,000 total possibility and 1,697,000 developed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think the amount developed is much less than is indicated on the map.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That indicates all the power—steam, gas, and water power.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh!

Mr. McLEAN. Will the Senator state what is the percentage of water power represented in New England?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I did not go into that.

The Senator from Colorado suggests that water power has not been developed because we impose many restrictions on it, and capital will not go into it. That is true, and that seems to be one difficulty in getting legislation, but I think it would not be very difficult to harmonize the two bills that are now in conference and make them so that capital would be ready to invest. But outside of that phase of the question come one or two questions that are largely legal over which Congress has divided and is divided now. That really prevents legislation. I will refer to that later. It would not be difficult, in my judgment, if we would leave out the legal proposition, for the conferees to agree upon a measure under which capital would be available.

A man who has long desired to develop one of the wasting powers of the State of Washington told me the other day that if the development of the water power was all that was to be considered he would not give it 20 minutes consideration, because the business is not primarily attractive, on account of the physical risks, which the Senator has just pointed out, attending the building and operation of water-power plants, and because of the small margin of profit allowed by the public authorities who name the rates that must be charged. This man said he was only interested in developing the water power he has in mind because of the things collateral with it, and out of which a fair return might be expected. He seems to have the desire strong within him to help create something in his day and generation to do his part toward the development of the Northwest, to see our silent valleys fill up with a prosperous agricultural population, to see industrial plants and towns and villages built, and the rivers and railroads teem with freight and traffic.

I know the particular proposition he has in mind. It involves not only the construction of a dam for the development of water power that could be used for great industrial enterprises, but it also means the making available of water to irrigate and reclaim 150,000 acres of desert, sandy, unproductive land that, with water upon it, would be as productive as any upon the face of the earth. He would like to see that desert producing; he would like to see homes built there; he would like to see the cities and towns that would grow up if it were developed. He would like to feel and know that he has had something to do with a work of that kind. I believe he would get far more satisfaction out of doing that and seeing that done than he would out of the pecuniary profit that might come from the development of the water power.

We of the 11 far-Western States have progressed about as far as we can go without the development of our water power. The State of Washington uses 1,190,000 horsepower, but of this 860,000 horsepower is produced from steam through use of coal and but about 330,000 from water power, though the State contains water-power resources of 8,647,000 horsepower. Our supply of coal is limited and fast being mined out, and we daily import trainloads from Canada. The State of California has no coal whatever, and is using up her oil for power purposes. She has available water-power resources of 7,813,000 horsepower, of which less than 10 per cent has thus for been developed.

Given the right to develop their water powers, the Pacific Coast States would go forward with leaps and bounds. It is not too much to say that as a result our population would double within the next 10 years. It would bring us capital as well as population. It would enable us to develop our other manifold resources; and principally it would bring about an agricultural development so great, a production of food so much larger than required to feed the local population, that it would help materially to cheapen the cost of living and thus be of tremendous benefit to the whole country.

Let me call your attention to map No. 2. It represents the location of the use of the 42,000,000 primary horsepower used in the United States, including all power produced from coal, oil, and water power. Of this amount 5,000,000 horsepower is derived from water power and 37,000,000 horsepower from coal and oil. Of the total power in use, 23 per cent is used west of the Mississippi River and 77 per cent east of the Mississippi.

Map No. 3 shows the distribution of hydraulic resources and of primary power of the United States by sections. It will be seen that if all the water power located east of the Mississippi was utilized it would not meet all the power requirements of that part of the country; but with the passage of the water-power bill great hydroelectric developments could be undertaken in the Connecticut and other New England Rivers, in the St. Lawrence, the Delaware, the Susquehanna, and other rivers of the Middle Atlantic States, and in the South in the rivers of Virginia, West Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Arkansas. Thus it is shown that the development of our water powers is of paramount and vital importance to every section of the United States, and it will be nothing short of criminal to delay longer their utilization.

One of the very first things on the program of after-war activities of France, Italy, Norway, and Sweden is the further development of their water powers. New York financial houses are receiving requests from these countries for American money for water-power development purposes. I am informed that the terms offered are most attractive, based upon long-term franchises and liberal terms. If the water-power bill is not passed at this session, foreign water power will be developed with American capital and great industrial plants, which will employ thousands of operatives, will be built which might have been secured for the United States.

In this connection let me call attention again to a matter I mentioned in the Senate a few days ago. Foreign capital seeks the construction of ships in our shipyards. We will not let them do it, and so the foreign capital that could be used here goes elsewhere, to other countries, and employs their labor and gives activity and energy to their industry. Here is one of our own great resources, and our capital wants to invest in it. We do not provide the way by which it can do it, and our own capital is going to foreign countries, developing their water powers, when it ought to be used in this country. How can our country prosper if we will not let foreign capital that seeks investment here be invested, and if we will not let our own capital that would like to be invested here do its work here, but drive it somewhere else?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is there any law that prevents American capital from building ships in our own yards?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; I said foreign capital is seeking to build ships in our yards and can not do it; it can not get a permit to do it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Upon what theory is it denied?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know why it is not done. I got a report a few days ago from the Shipping Board stating that they have been directed by the President not to permit the construction of steel ships in our shipyards for foreign account, and they are prohibited by his order from permitting it to be done. I am glad to say that I hold in my hand a report, authorized by the Commerce Committee of the Senate, directing that hereafter no permit shall be necessary for it. But it is not legislation. We have lost since the armistice was signed practically half a billion dollars in contracts for the construction of steel ships for foreign account in this country by reason of that order.

The speedy development of our water powers is absolutely necessary to our industrial and agricultural development and to enable our manufacturers, through use of cheap hydroelectric energy, to make cheap goods for export and to enable us to secure and to hold our share of the world's trade.

Congress has been considering water-power legislation for many years. Our differences have been very largely over legal questions relating to the respective powers of the State and Nation. We discuss these and differ over them while the water powers are unused, our fuel resources in effect wasted, and great wealth lies undeveloped. The people are getting tired and disgusted at our inaction. They are looking at the big things rather than legal differences or technicalities. They want something done that will conserve our fuel supply, furnish ample and efficient power, develop great industrial enterprises, and give employment to labor, make lands available for the homeless, and add to the wealth of the county, State, and Nation.

The bill passed by the Senate and amended in the House is now in conference. The committee has been appointed, composed of certain Members of the Senate and certain Members of the House, to harmonize the differences between the two Houses. Concessions must be made on both sides and ought to be made in the interest of legislation. I can see no excuse for this not being done at this session. There are only three real differences in controversy, and only one of these goes to the fundamentals. The House favors a commission of three to act on water-power permits. The Senate is opposed to such a commission. This is a mere matter of detail, however important it may be otherwise. The House favors one method of recapture, the Senate another. This is also a matter of detail that ought not to be difficult to adjust. The House favors giving to the executive or administrative branch unlimited power over charges to be fixed on the power, and the Senate opposes such a provision. This is fundamental and important. I myself do not believe this power should be given to the executive. It is a legislative power. But why can not this be adjusted by giving the executive or administrative branch the power to impose a charge not exceeding a small amount. It seems to me this would be proper, in view of the tremendous benefits to come from legislative action.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, is not one of the fundamental differences which have been involved in the fight which has been continually going on as to the water-power bill that an executive department or even the Government of the United States has no power over the flow of water in nonnavigable streams?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is embraced in this proposal to fix the charge.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes. It seems to me there has been a general concurrence of opinion in the position that the State water commissions or the proper authorities of the State, or later the public utilities commissions, should pass upon and determine what rates for hydroelectric power should be charged in the State.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That, Mr. President, I think is largely the view of the Senate; it is the view of a large majority of the Senate, but that apparently is not the view of the entire body, for there has been inserted in a bill which heretofore passed a provision giving to the commission unlimited discretion and power in the matter of fixing charges. That, as I say, has been one of the great differences between the two bodies.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me that that is very fundamental, for I do not believe that the United States has any more right to regulate the rates for water power on the Mississippi River or to make any grant with respect to the waters of the Mississippi River than have I, and I have no such right whatever. That, as has been declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, belongs to the States, and it is an infringement of State rights when the Government undertakes to regulate such rates. The power possessed by the Federal Government even as to navigable streams is only a negative power to prevent obstruction to navigation. As to nonnavigable streams the Federal Government possesses no power whatever.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If we can ever settle that proposition, in my judgment there will not be very much delay in reaching a conclusion as to legislation. I did not intend to discuss it in detail, but merely pointed out what it is and what I would be in favor of in the interest of getting practical legislation. As I have said, I would be in favor, as a last resort, of the proposal of a provision that would permit the commission to fix a certain charge, not exceeding a definite amount, and that rather nominal.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] to the fact that the view which he holds so strenuously, and which he has just expressed, has prevented affirmative legislation that will permit the development of the water power of the country. So long as he and others in the Senate feel as he does, I do not think that affirmative legislation is possible.

I remember that seven years ago the Committee on Commerce reported in favor of a charter for a water-power plant to be located on the Connecticut River near the city of Hartford, which would have accommodated some 200,000 people within the area of its operation; but the Secretary of War imposed upon that company a small charge to be paid into the Treasury of the United States. The company was perfectly willing to develop the water power subject to that condition, but when the charter came into the Senate the Senator from Colorado and other Senators who agree with him immediately interposed objections and insisted that they never would consent to the granting of a charter that in any way permitted a return from the income of that company to the Treasury of the United States. So that effort was abandoned. Others have been tried in the meantime, but unless the Senators from the Western States are willing that these water powers should be developed under some Federal system it is not the fault of the Eastern States, certainly, that the water powers in the West are not developed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I know what this controversy will develop. I did not intend to go into a discussion of the matter. It has been thrashed out in the Senate time and again, but I dislike to refuse to yield to the Senator from Colorado, and I will yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I merely want to say a word or two. I shall not occupy more than a few minutes.

The trouble with the position which is taken by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] is that such legislation proposes to deal with a subject which the Supreme Court of the United States has stated is beyond the power of Congress.

Whenever we take the waters that belong to a State and apply them to such uses and purposes as the Government of the United States may desire, we violate the rights of the States. Besides there is great objection to the proposition, for we know that the administration of these matters 2,000 miles from where the great water powers are located, is going to result in great detriment to the people of those States. So we hope that by a discussion of the matter and the reading of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States the people of the East will conclude that they will let the Western States develop their own water power.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield a moment to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. The opinion of the Senator from Colorado is that the Federal Government has no power under the Constitution to interfere with the development of these water powers by the States; but there are other Members of this body who do not agree with him. And when the question comes up, it is because the Senator from Colorado and those who feel as he feels object, as they do, that we can not get any affirmative legislation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator from Washington will permit me for a moment, I desire to ask, Does the Senator from Connecticut recognize that the Federal Government has any jurisdiction whatever over the waters of Colorado, which State does not contain a single navigable stream?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut takes the position that that is a question for the Supreme Court of the United States to have the last guess in answering.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We are very glad to let them guess, and they have guessed.

Mr. McLEAN. My position is that they have not guessed as yet. The Senator from Connecticut is willing to agree to any proposition. He is willing that Congress shall permit the development of these powers, subject to State regulation or Federal regulation. All that the Senator from Connecticut cares for is to have the water wheels turned and to leave the question of regulation to be settled by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Senator from Colorado will not do that; he will not consent to any legislation that permits the Federal Government to exact a charge or exert control over these water powers.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think I will resume the floor now. I think the position of both the Senators is very plain, and it merely emphasizes what I said a moment ago, that the real delay and difficulty in the enactment of this legislation is because of legal differences of opinion in Congress. The people of the country do not pay much attention to such things. They are looking to practical results. They want results; they want these water powers developed; and it seems to me that it is the duty of Senators and Representatives to harmonize these differences just as soon as possible so as to get legislation.

The Senator from Connecticut said that we had this proposal a few years ago, and that those who wanted to develop the water power were willing to pay the charge. Of course, they are willing to pay the charge. They do not care particularly what the charge imposed is, because they pass it on to the consumer, and he has to pay it. Yet the people throughout the country seem to overlook that fact in their radical conservation views, that we should invest administrative officers with unlimited discretion. As one of the western Senators, in the interest of practical results, I am willing to put into the law a provision that the Secretary or the commission—if we should finally adopt a commission—may impose a charge. But I propose that it shall be limited in amount and that the discretion shall be limited. Personally, I would rather see no charge at all. I do not see any reason why any charge should be put in; but in the interest of legislation, I would be perfectly willing to provide that the Secretary or the commission, if we agree to one, may have authority to impose a charge on the horsepower developed up to and not exceeding a certain amount—say 25 cents a horsepower. I should like to see not more than that charged. That would cover the expense of administration if it is deemed necessary to have the National Government collect money to do that, but that would be a concession in the interest of legislation that I think is imperatively needed by this country.

Mr. President, when I was interrupted I was pointing out the differences between the House and the Senate and referring to the proposition to invest the commission or the Secretary with the power to impose a charge.

Mr. President, I have here an editorial from the Rocky Mountain News, of January 22, 1919, which expresses the same sentiment as my correspondent whose letter I read. It expresses it a little bit more diplomatically, probably, than does he, and it expresses, in my judgment, the very strong sentiment that now exists throughout the country. The editorial says:

A NATION IN ATROPHY.

Yesterday's Washington dispatches stated that Congress was in a deadlock over the water-power bill. The truth of the matter is that Congress and the executive departments have ceased to function on all great issues involved in reconstruction. The sooner the country knows the plight it is being placed in through this failure the better it will be for the country in the long run. Congress is rudderless and pilotless. The water-power bill that is deadlocked has been before Congress since the first Wilson administration took office. In every session it has been fought over and deadlocked. The ultraconservationists take one side, the reactionaries another, and the Nation is left to hold the sack. The West is standing still, due to the inability of Congress to pass such measures as the water-power bill and the oil and coal leasing bill. Development of our water powers would put thousands of men at work, but the soldiers who are home and are coming home in greater numbers every week can not, it seems, rely upon Congress to enact legislation to help give them employment. If a bread line comes, it will be a severe reflection upon the lawmaking authorities of the Nation.

The employment of labor at this time makes it vitally important that we should pass water-power legislation at this session. The progress, development, and prosperity of the Nation demand it. Surely Congress will not allow this great piece of constructive legislation to die upon March 4 next.

Mr. President, I did not intend to take nearly so much of the time of the Senate as I have done, and I should not have done so had I not been interrupted; but I want merely to ask a question of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who has charge of the Post Office bill, and who, as I understand, is the ranking member on the conference committee on the water-power legislation; at least, he is the ranking member who is present. I ask the Senator if he will give the Senate such information as he can as to the progress that is being made by the conference committee and the prospect of our getting legislation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am very glad to give the Senator from Washington and the Senate the information the Senator desires, so far as I am able to give it.

The Senator from Washington and the Senate understand perfectly well what my attitude is on water-power legislation. I have been an earnest advocate of legislation on that subject for many years. As has been stated by the Senator from Washington, the Senate has passed two different bills in two different Congresses on the question of water-power development. During the present Congress the Senate passed practically, I may say, without an amendment, the original Shields bill, which was passed in a former Congress. That bill was passed without a roll call or a dissenting vote, as I remember, after having been thoroughly discussed in the last Congress. That bill went over to the other House, and in the House they created a water-power commission, composed of members from three different committees in the House, to consider the bill. The Agricultural Committee was represented, the Public Lands Committee was represented, and the Interstate Commerce Committee was represented.

That committee finally reported a substitute for the Shields bill, striking out the whole of the Senate bill that was sent over and substituting a bill prepared by that committee. That substitute for the Shields bill passed the other House, came over here, and a conference was ordered.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] was then in the Senate and was the chairman of that conference committee. Since that time he has been unable to attend the sessions of the Senate on account of the condition of his health. The chairmanship of the conference committee by that process fell to the Senator from Alabama, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] was substituted on the committee of conference in the place of the Senator from Tennessee. We had two or three conferences. The House conferees came over and practically told us, "If you want any legislation on this subject, you will take the House bill." We were not quite prepared to do that without some discussion, hoping that we might get some concessions and that matters might so shape themselves that we would have a real conference, where differences could be discussed, compromises made, and each side give and take in order that we might reach a conclusion. That situation lasted to the end of the second or third conference. It appeared that the conference was in a hopeless deadlock and that it was impossible to make any progress. So the conference adjourned, with the understanding that the chairman should again call it in session when he thought proper to do so.

I promptly announced that when the House conferees were willing to meet the Senate conferees in a fair spirit and were willing to discuss the differences with us without telling us practically that we would take what they offered or nothing I would call another meeting of the conference. I have been waiting, thinking perhaps that something would develop. This morning I have been advised by the chairman of the House conferees that they are willing and ready—in fact, they are getting anxious—for another conference, in order that we may take up, discuss, and agree upon the differences in the bill. So I am going to call a conference for Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock; and I do not think there is any doubt that we will be able to get an agreement within a very reasonable time. That is the way I feel about it; and I make that statement to the Senate, believing that the conferees will report an agreement after one or two further sessions of the conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, opposition to appropriation bills in general, as well as to particular items found thereunder, receives but little support either within or outside of Congress, and the opponents of appropriations, whether in the House or in the Senate, seldom succeed in eliminating from proposed appropriation bills any item. It would seem to be a sound proposition upon which to rest legislative enactments carrying appropriations that the condition of the Treasury and the sources of revenue should be considered prior to making the appropriation. There are many projects, enterprises, and programs within the sphere of Federal authority for which under certain circumstances appropriations would be entirely proper; the same appropriations at other times would not only be improper but injurious to the country.

In examining appropriation bills recently reported, and many of the estimates submitted by executive departments for appropriations, I have been astounded at the demands which have been made, and which are daily being made, for Federal appropriations. The necessary demands made upon the Government during the active preparations for war and during the progress of the war were so enormous as to produce at first a feeling of stupefaction and then a strong mental psychosis, the effects of which still linger with the people. We become so habituated to appropriating billions and for so many purposes that the inclination to continue like appropriations and for similar purposes is difficult to overcome. When an appropriation bill is presented, such as the one now being considered, calling for $600,000,000, instinctively we say the amount is small or very moderate because we have enacted so many laws which dealt with billions. It was only a few years ago the expenditures of the Government reached $1,000,000,000 during the Congress, and when that huge sum was announced it provoked Nation-wide criticism and contributed to the defeat of many Senators and Congressmen belonging to the political party which was in power when the appropriation was made. I submit that we should consider, when determining whether an appropriation is meritorious and within the power of the Federal Government, the further question whether the Nation is in a position financially to undertake the same. Now, more than ever in the history of this Nation should we have a budget system. It is imperative that we know the condition of the Public Treasury; the sources of public revenue; and particularly the demands which must be made upon the Government in order that it may avoid financial dishonor and bankruptcy. The credit of the Government must at all hazards be maintained. With the surging tides of financial and industrial unrest which sweep around the world, our Nation must stand as a financial Gibraltar. Its credit must not under any circumstances be impaired. It is a source of pride to all true Americans that our Nation has met the staggering financial demands entailed by the war, and has emerged from the conflict as the financial leader of the world.

Wise legislation preceding the war prepared the United States for its premiership among the nations, but the industry, genius, thrift, and patriotism of the American people have been the all-important factors in establishing the splendid and, indeed, unparalleled record made by this Nation. But this marvelous achievement upon the part of our Government has resulted in producing somewhat of a financial indiscretion upon the part of many officials, departments, bureaus, and agencies of the Government, as well as many of the American people. The great burdens borne in such a triumphant and successful manner encourages the people to demand that the Government perform other achievements and undertake other projects calling for billions, the most of which could be postponed to a future day, and the present undertaking of which would involve the Nation in financial disaster. It is time that a halt be called in the appropriations being made by the Government. It is a time for sober, sound, and serious thinking. It is a time when there should be a stock taking; we should reassess our values; ascertain, regardless of the shock which may result or the disappointment which we may encounter, what our liabilities are and what resources are at our command for their discharge. Formerly the prudent business man took stock at the end of each year. Modern and improved business methods enable him to determine his financial condition at the close of each day's business; but many wise and patriotic men do not commend the adoption of such a course by the Government. The important question is to determine whether the request or demand for an appropriation seems meritorious or will be beneficial to some particular section of the country. Local and purely domestic projects are thrust into the national life and the Federal Government called upon to undertake their development and completion. Public buildings, rivers and harbors, roads, education—questions which are purely within the province of the States—all these are laid at the door of the National Legislature and hundreds of millions and billions requested.

The great war has dislocated conditions in all the world—industrial, economic, and social changes have been produced; abnormal conditions abound. To emerge from the clouds and return to normal conditions so far as possible is a task the magnitude of which perhaps none can appreciate. Nevertheless the obligation rests upon those in authority as well as the people everywhere to meet the serious conditions, and with patience and with genuine patriotism strive unitedly to bring the Nation and the world back to sound and enduring conditions. This hour calls for as lofty patriotism as did the days when the blood of brave men flowed freely upon the fields of France. The day of sacrifice and service for our country as well as humanity is not ended. I believe in the intellectual and moral integrity of the American people. I believe that those who live under this flag have that strong moral fiber that will enable them to meet the dangers and the problems of the present and the future and successfully combat whatever dangers menace the security of the Republic and the perpetuity of our national institutions; but we must address ourselves without hysteria, and in a broad, common-sense, and comprehensive way to the mighty problems before us. The financial problem is always one of paramount importance, not only to the individual but to the Nation. It is perhaps the pressing problem in the world to-day. Of course, the industrial and economic problem is so correlated to the financial one as to practically be embraced within it. The nations of Europe need either money or credit, and with either, or both, the industrial and economic situation would quickly be changed and threatening dangers dissipated.

If the people and the municipalities and States within our borders have sufficient money or credit, or both, industries will be developed; the field and farm, the factory and mine will yield their treasures, and peace and prosperity will come to the homes and lives of all. The financial question is not solved, as many affect to believe, by the extension upon the part of the Government of its credit without limit. The Nation, like the individual, has limits to its borrowing or lending capacity. Many nations of Europe have neither credit nor money. Such a situation can not indefinitely be prolonged. Our Nation, as I have stated, must in this great crisis have unimpaired credit. It must be in a position to steady in a legitimate and constitutional way the business structure of our own land, and aid morally or otherwise those nations, at least, with whom we were associated in the mighty war which we are bringing to a close. Extravagance and waste, enormous or, indeed, small appropriations not imperatively needed, must be avoided. There are so many demands which must be made that the appropriations made will still be stupendous. It would be not only unwise but morally wrong to make the appropriation of a single dollar at this time which is not absolutely required. But in periods of this kind all sorts of Utopian schemes are usually presented. The faddist and the reformer and the uplifter, the visionary, the radical, the man who has failed in his own undertakings, these and others of similar intellectual characteristics vehemently and often with a hysteria bordering upon frenzy attack the Treasury and assail the legislative and executive branches of the Government, clamoring and demanding recognition of their schemes and panaceas. It matters not that our Government is one of delegated and limited powers. It is immaterial that this is a Republic and not a radical socialistic organization. It matters not that human experiences show that civilization is a product of slow growth and rests upon individual development and initiative and the growth of the individual character, and that governmental control of matters and enterprises which belong to the field of individual effort results in mental and intellectual stagnation and torpor. And so daily we are besieged by the classes above referred to, who are seeking governmental recognition of their plans and appropriations to aid in their execution.

Unfortunately many faddists and unwise and ill-balanced persons get into some branch of the public service and they attempt to fasten upon the Government as a permanent policy some absurd or visionary scheme which is bound to prove a failure, but not until the Government has expended immense sums in experimenting with the same. I have had occasion heretofore to call attention to the fact that in many executive branches of the Government ingenious and plausible plans and schemes are developed to extend the power, authority, and jurisdiction of officials. It is human nature to desire power and to increase one's authority, and so we are constantly met with appeals to increase the authority of bureaus, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Government, as well as officials in various branches of the public service. A little twig upon the branch seeks to become a branch, and when declared to be a branch by the appropriate authority, we witness a miracle and it becomes a mighty branch, which produces twigs, which in turn become branches, and so on, ad infinitum. This shows one aspect of the rise of bureaucracy.

Let me say in passing that though the war is practically over and it was supposed with the signing of the armistice that thousands of those in the service of the Government other than in the military and naval service would soon be separated from their employment and be returned to private life, the number who have left the service is comparatively small, and it is becoming apparent that there is an effort upon the part of many in the Government service to perpetuate agencies, branches, and bureaus that were created only for war purposes and which were to last only during the war. In my opinion there has not been that earnest cooperation upon the part of many of the officials of the Government to reduce expenses that there should have been; and I venture to say, not in any offensive spirit, that the legislative department of the Government is not cutting to the bone the appropriation bills which are being reported. The demand should be insistent for economy, more economy, and still more and greater economy. If this spirit is not manifested there will be placed in the appropriation bills hundreds and millions of dollars which at this time should not be appropriated and the payment of which will be a grievous burden to the Treasury and to the people.

A year ago the proposition which we are now considering for the appropriation for aerial mail service was before the Senate for consideration. I objected at that time to the appropriation, as I am now opposing the appropriation carried in this bill of nearly a million dollars. I insisted then, as I do now, that it was in the nature of an experiment, and that with the heavy exactions made upon the Government it was impolitic to devote money for such experiments. I stated then, as I believe now, that aircraft has come to stay, and will become of greater importance for many purposes as the years go by. I am not attacking the feasibility of transporting certain portions of mail by means of airplanes. It is quite likely they will be used more and more for such purposes. I am only contending that with the excellent mail service which we now have, and in view of the fact that we have telephones and telegraph systems extending to almost every village and hamlet of the land, we can afford to defer the experiments which some officials of the Post Office Department desire to carry on until pressing financial burdens have been met and until we have had opportunity to assess the results which the war has produced in connection with the use of airplanes.

When I submitted a few observations a year ago the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] rather took me to task, contending that I was somewhat provincial, and he compared my attitude to the position taken by Mr. Webster in his opposition to appropriations for the territory lying west of the Missouri River. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] contends that this is a proper time for experimentation, and his position is that the amount called for is so small as to be really unimportant. He only asks for $850,000 for the coming year. My understanding is that this does not include all of the amount that will be required to secure planes for mail service.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is mistaken. The Army and Navy have planes. They are not using them. They are stored away. They will be of very little use in four or five years. In fact, they will be of very little use in one year. If you are ever going to experiment to see whether or not aircraft can be successfully used to transport the mails, now is the time. This bill provides that they can buy these planes from the War and Navy Departments and pay for them out of this fund. It is not to be done simply as a matter of bookkeeping, for the Army or Navy would not like to turn them over and have it appear like a loss; so they will have to purchase them, and out of this money it is expected to pay the War and the Navy Departments for these planes. That is provided for here. This $850,000 includes planes, all expenses, places of landing, and everything for whichever one of those routes they shall think they can make profitable.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to hear the explanation of the Senator; but upon reading the various provisions of this bill relating to that subject it is not very clear or certain that the $850,000 appropriation requires that the planes shall be purchased from the War Department.

Mr. SWANSON. It is so plain that I do not see how the Senator can make that mistake. It says:

> Said departments are authorized to sell such equipment and supplies to the Post Office Department under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. KING. The provision to which the Senator has just called my attention, if that is the only one which bears upon the subject—but I do not think it is—would support the proposition for which he is contending.

Mr. SWANSON (reading)—

> All articles purchased from either of said departments, if the same have not been used, shall be paid for at a reasonable price not to exceed actual cost, and if the same have been used, a reasonable price shall be paid therefor, considering wear and tear and general condition. Said departments are authorized to sell such equipment and supplies to the Post Office Department under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

We put in that language about those that had been used and those that had not been used so that we may know exactly what this thing costs. We do not want any guessing about this experiment; and we also require them to keep a separate, detailed account. It is useless to keep on appropriating two hundred thousand or three hundred thousand dollars for an experiment and never have a real experiment, never have the books kept so that you can reach a definite conclusion. We were determined to reach a conclusion next year as to whether aircraft could or could not be used profitably and successfully as a part of the Post Office Department; and we simply gave them, not two routes, not the three routes that they first asked for, but simply one route, and provided that all the expenses of it should be paid out of that appropriation, even to the purchase of the airplanes from the Navy and the Army.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if what the Senator has read is the only provision in the bill relating to this question, then I think his position is correct. However, under his contention $850,000 is required to further experiment in aerial mail service, and the experiments are to be conducted by the Post Office Department, not by those who have familiarized themselves with aircraft or by a department or agency that has, as a result of the war, gained valuable experience in connection with the use of airplanes. It is insisted by the Second Assistant Postmaster General, who is the chief proponent of this plan of experimentation, that certain persons are urging the establishment of aerial mail service routes. My information is that the manufacturers of planes are strongly urging this plan.

The report of the official referred to, as I understand, calls attention to the fact that in Europe airplanes are used for the carrying of mail. From my understanding of the report, as well as information which I have obtained from other sources, the mail service by airplane is very limited in Europe, indeed, the service, as I understand, was rather of a military character, and in connection with military operations. Of course during the war the airplane was a most important factor. It was used not only for fighting purposes but for carrying messages and orders of a military nature. However, I do not think the argument for an appropriation for experimental purposes here by the Post Office Department finds any strong basis for support in the use of airplanes in Europe for mail purposes. By this statement I do not mean that airplanes may not be successfully employed in transmitting mail, and that the future may not find them extensively utilized for such purpose. I know that many appeals are being made here for large appropriations for aerial mail service. Many of these appeals come from those who would be financially interested in the establishment of aerial mail-service routes. Others come from patriotic and progressive citizens whose wishes and views are entitled to the greatest consideration, and I do not mean to criticize those who would be benefited by the Government establishing aerial mail-service routes and purchase hundreds, if not thousands, of airplanes. The manufacturers of planes have a perfect right to urge their adoption for all proper purposes. I am not opposing this appropriation because manufacturers will be benefited by the purchase of planes by the Government.

My contention is that the condition of the Treasury and the heavy exactions that are made upon it compel the most rigid economy and cry out loudly for retrenchment and reform in the matter of public expenditures. Moreover, it would be far wiser and safer to get from the experiences of the war the strong and the weak points involved in airplane service. The experiences of the various nations in the use of aircraft differ. There is not yet a concord of judgment in regard to planes, their virtues and their imperfections, the character required for mail service, and so forth. Of course, with the termination of the war there will be conferences between those who have had experiences in the use of airplanes, and as the result of experiments, investigations, and the use of airplanes there will be evolved plans for the most suitable kinds of planes for various purposes. My thought is that we should wait to hear these reports, learn the results of the war, and profit by these experiments and experiences of our own and of the allied nations as well as our adversaries. But, I repeat, my principal objection is grounded upon the condition of the Treasury and the necessity for the most rigid economy. Senators can not close their eyes to the difficulties and dangers before us. Unfortunately, authentic reports indicate industrial unrest and stagnation in business. Manufacturers are not receiving orders for their products, and as a result cut down their output and discharge a portion of their employees.

The producers of raw materials find but few purchasers, and those who do purchase obtain limited quantities. There is hesitation and uncertainty in the business world. The producers of copper find no market. The Government has hundreds of millions of pounds of wool on hand, and the domestic producer finds himself confronted with a falling market for this year's clip, which was produced upon the standard of war prices, and also with the enormous quantity which the Government has purchased and holds for sale. He also finds another menace in the fact that Great Britain acquired during the war and now has between two and three billion pounds for sale. The business conditions will greatly reduce the incomes and profits of those engaged therein, and this will have a serious effect upon the taxes for the coming fiscal year. The tax bill which will become a law within a few days, calling for $6,000,000,000, will bear oppressively upon the country. Many who made large profits during the past year expended the same in development and expanding their plants and their business enterprises. The close of the war abruptly halted their production and in many instances left them with plants partially completed, which are of comparatively little value now, or plants which, if completed, are shut down for want of contracts calling for production. The war greatly increased the expenses of the States and municipalities. As a result, the taxes in the various States and for municipal and other purposes have been greatly increased.

I have not been able to learn what the taxes were called for by the Nation and the States and other political subdivisions for the year 1918, but they go far into the billions. The taxes for the calendar year 1919 will likewise be very heavy. The revenue bill which is in conference calls for $4,000,000,000 taxes for the calendar year 1919 for the Federal Government. That amount will meet but a portion of the expenditures of the Federal Government. We will undoubtedly be compelled to issue more bonds, and for from four to six billions of dollars, to meet the expenses of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. Mr. President, in view of these conditions, so imperfectly sketched, it is time, as I stated, to halt every effort made to take money from the Public Treasury. Every project calling for money should be carefully examined, every demand minutely scrutinized, and not one penny appropriated that can possibly be avoided. The departments and bureaus are submitting estimates calling for billions. These various estimates go not to one, but to various committees. These committees, generally speaking, act independently; there is no coordination between them. They do not meet jointly, and each committee is interested only in the estimates and claims presented to it. Each committee prepares its own appropriation bill, regardless of the amounts carried in appropriation bills submitted by other committees. Of course, such a plan or system is unwise, unbusinesslike, and does not result in the highest economy. Moreover, duplications inevitably result. Appropriations are made by one committee for objects and purposes which in part are provided for by some other committee and some other appropriation bill. With the well-known proclivity of bureaus to expand and aggrandize their powers, to extend their operations, it is manifest that there will be duplications of work by different departments. This situation shows the necessity of a budget system or some different plan of preparing appropriation bills.

I have discovered that the executive branches of the Government are not as careful and painstaking in preparing their estimates as they should be. There is not that consideration for the Treasury and for the public weal that should be exhibited. I have thought at times there had been a spirit of rivalry to see which could get the greatest appropriations. I think it a mistake to rely so implicitly upon the bureaus and departments for information employed in framing appropriation bills. This information comes from interested parties, too often from those who are ambitious to extend their authority or desirous of increasing the jurisdiction and power of the organization with which they are identified. This is the exhibition of a human trait of character, and I am not now speaking of it in a critical way. However, I think it is apparent to those who come in contact with the claims and demands made by the various departments, bureaus, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Government that there is, generally speaking, not that fine and nice sense of discrimination and that fine feeling for the country's welfare that should always be found in a public servant. We are now besieged in every direction by thousands and tens of thousands of employees of the Government and by all sorts of influences to increase compensation and salaries. The pressure is great to increase the offices, multiply positions, augment the power of public officials, and add to the authority of departments, bureaus, and governmental agencies. Extensive propagandas are being carried on urging governmental ownership and control of transportation companies, telephone and telegraph lines, the taking over and operation of packing plants, as well as other enterprises which have been built up through the genius and enterprise of individuals. These and many other plans are being presented and affirmative and favorable action demanded.

The question of cost is not always considered, and the theory and spirit of our Government are too often overlooked. Many people seem to forget that this is a Republic, not a paternalistic Nation, not a socialistic Government, not a Prussian Government. I have sometimes said that a mania takes possession of many individuals who enter the executive branch of the public service, and they devise ingenious and plausible schemes calculated to convert this Republic into a bureaucracy. The limitations of their organizations are ignored, they want to soar out into a larger and different world, and to engage in activities wholly beyond the purpose of the agency or department with which they are identified, and, as stated, activities which in many instances are not within the power or province of our Government, and which, if persisted in, would destroy the initiative of the people and convert them into lifeless, nerveless, devitalized organisms depending upon a socialistic or paternalistic government for life, for food, and being.
